The granting of restitution under the inherent jurisdiction is discretionary. In a case where a decree was declared to be null and void in a separate suit so that a party had a claim to restitution as to costs restitution was refused as the party was a minor and had concealed the fact and conducted the litigation in his own name (p)

"Place the parties in the position" which they would have occupied but for such decree as has been reversed—These words have to be applied with attention to the substance and reality of the matter. The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff Rs 49 as costs and in execution of this decree for costs two jotes were sold and purchased by the plaintiff. In appeal the decree was varied and the costs reduced to Rs 36. The defendant then claimed to recover the two jotes by way of restitution. Rankin, C J, held that he could not recover the jotes unless he shewed that the sale of the jotes was in substance and in truth a consequence of the error in the original decree. As the defendant gave no evidence that if the original decree had been for Rs 36 he would have been able to pay it and save the jotes, he was only entitled to recover the difference between the two amounts with interest (q). A party is not entitled under this section to restitution of property which was not in his possession before suit, but was in possession of the opposite party, and which therefore could not have been taken out of his possession under any estate of X. B sets up the possession of B who locks them up in a room under seal. The High Court directs probate of the will to be granted to B. Thereafter on B's application the movables are handed over to her. Subsequently the order of the High Court is reversed by His Majesty in Council and letters of administration are directed to be granted to A. A then applies under this section for restitution of the properties to him. A is not entitled to restitution. The case is not one of restitution at all, for A was never in possession of the properties (r). Again, the plaintiff sued for redemption of a mortgage and deposited the mortgage money in Court and the Court allowed redemption but directed that the plaintiff should get possession of only three out of the four properties mortgaged. The lower appellate Court varied the decree and directed that plaintiff should have possession of the fourth property also. The plaintiff then applied for mesne profits of the fourth property from the date of deposit of the mortgage money until he got possession. The High Court held that the claim was not maintainable under sec. 144 as the plaintiff had not been in possession of the fourth property (s). But the fact that the property had been taken from a Receiver appointed by the Court does not affect the right of the true owner to restitution for the Receiver was in possession on behalf of the true owner (t).

Who may apply for restitution—"Any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise" may apply under this section.

(1) Where decree proceeds on a common ground—The expression "any party" is not confined to parties to the appeal in which the decree has been reversed or modified. It includes every person against whom the decree appealed from was passed, though he was not a party to the appeal, provided the appeal is in effect and substance in favour of such person (u). This would especially be the case where the decree appealed from proceeds on a ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants (v) see O 41, r. 4. A obtains a decree against B and C. The decree proceeds on a ground common to both B and C. B alone appeals from the decree. The decree is reversed in appeal. C is entitled to claim restitution under this section, though he was not a party to the appeal.]

(2) Transfer of a decree—Further, the expression "any party" includes the transferee of a decree passed in appeal. A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal, A realizes from B Rs. 5,000 in execution. The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal. B assigns the decree passed in appeal (in his favour) to C. C is entitled as transferee of B's decree, to the benefit of that decree and he may apply under this section for an order directing A to pay to him what B would be entitled to, namely, Rs. 5,000 and interest (iv).

(3) Auction purchaser — A sale in execution of a decree may be set aside in a proper case even against a purchaser who is a stranger to the decree either in execution proceedings or in a separate suit, e.g., where the sale certificate comprises property different from that which is attached (x), or when a decree is obtained on a mortgage executed by a Hindu father on behalf of himself and his minor son, and the decree and the sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree are set aside in a suit by the minor against the decree holder and the auction purchaser on the ground that the mortgage does not bind the minor (y). But the auction purchaser is entitled in such cases, before restoring possession to the judgment debtor, to be paid the purchase price by the successful judgment debtor less the mesne profits, if the sale is set aside in execution proceedings, under this section (z) and, if the sale is set aside by a decree in a separate suit, under s. 47 or s. 151 (a). It has been held by the High Court of Rangoon that an auction purchaser who is not a party to the original suit or to the appeal or to the execution proceedings is not entitled to apply under this section (b).

Against whom restitution may be claimed —

(1) Transferee of decree reversed in appeal—In two Allahabad cases decided under the old section it was held that restitution could not be claimed by application under that section against the transferee of a decree reversed in appeal, though the transferee had obtained the full benefit of the decree by execution, unless he was joined as a party to the appeal (c). The point of the decision may be explained by an illustration. A obtains a decree against B, and assigns the decree to C. C applies for execution of the decree against B, and obtains payment of the decretal amount. B appeals from the decree, and the decree is reversed in appeal. It was held under the old section that B could not claim restitution against C by summary process under that section unless C was joined as a party to the appeal (d). But this decision has been dissented from and the High Court of Madras holds that a judgment debtor from whom the assignee of a decree has realized the decretal amount in execution is entitled to restitution when the decree is reversed on appeal (e). On the other hand in a Calcutta case A obtained an ex parte decree for possession against B and leased the land to C. The ex parte decree was set aside and A's suit dismissed. B then applied for restoration of possession. The Court held that he was entitled to an order as against A but not as against A's lessee C. This was said to be on the principle that restitution can only be had in respect of matters done under the decree or as an immediate consequence of it and that the summary procedure under s 144 is wholly unsuited for adjudicating the complicated questions that may arise if rights which strangers may have acquired in the meantime are to be investigated (f)

(1a) Attaching decree holder—The Madras High Court has held that restitution can be claimed against a decree holder who has attached and realised in execution a decree which has been reversed on appeal (g). This is on the ground that the attaching decree holder is for the purposes of execution a representative of the original decree holder.

(2) Auction purchaser—Except in cases of the kind mentioned in case (3) under the heading "Who may apply for restitution," restitution cannot be obtained under this section against a bona fide purchaser for value at an auction sale held by a Court which had jurisdiction to order the sale (h). It is otherwise, however, where the decree holder himself is the purchaser (i). See note to s 65 above, "Effect of reversal of decree upon sale."

(3) Surety—This section applies only to the parties or their representatives and does not apply to sureties. Hence restitution cannot be claimed under this Section against a surety (j).

Sub section (2) Bar of suit—This sub section is new. It provides in express terms that where restitution could be obtained by application under this section, no separate suit shall be brought in respect of it. The decisions under the Code of 1852 were not uniform, it having been held in some cases that a separate suit for restitution was barred, and in others that it was not (k).

Under s 583 of the Code of 1852, proceedings for restitution had to be commenced by an application for execution of the appellate decree. This was required by the terms of that section. The section further directed that the appellate decree should be executed "according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decree in suits." That gave rise to the question whether the rule contained in s 244 (now s 47) which provided that all questions relating to execution should be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit was one of the rules referred to in s 583. It was held in some cases that it was and that a separate suit for restitutions was therefore barred. In other cases it was held that it was not, and that a separate suit could be maintained for restitution. The present section simplifies matters by omitting all reference to execution. The position of the section has also been changed, it being transferred from the chapter headed "Of appeals from original decrees" to Part IX headed "Miscellaneous." A separate suit is now barred by the express terms of the section, and the application for restitution is no longer one for execution of the appellate decree. The Court is empowered to make such order as it deems proper for restitution, and the order, if not obeyed, may be enforced as a decree (l) [see s 36].

jurisdiction (x) But following the Madras view some cases have held that when an ex parte decree is set aside restitution can be had under s 144 (y) In some cases where a decree or order has been superseded s 47 has been referred to (z)

When the decree is neither varied nor reversed but a sale only is set aside on an application under O 21, r 90 the section does not apply and restitution is ordered under the inherent jurisdiction (a) See note above Inherent power to grant restitution

The question whether restitution is ordered under this section or under the inherent jurisdiction is a matter of no practical importance except when a question under sub section (2) arises as to bar of suit (b)

To claim restitution it is not necessary that the original decree should have been entirely reversed The section also provides for the case where the decree is varied Thus if A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1 000 and in execution B's property is sold and purchased by A himself and the decree is varied in appeal by reducing the amount to Rs 100 the Court has power under this section to order A to restore the property to B on payment of Rs 100 by B (c)

The Court of first instance—In a suit for ejectment under the Agra Tenancy Act 2 of 1910 [local] the Court of first instance is the Revenue Court which heard the suit and not the Court of Appeal (d) If the Court of first instance has been abolished or has ceased to have jurisdiction the phrase must be interpreted by applying the principle of s. 37 above (e) without referring to this decision held that it was (o) This distinction is important in the following respects —

- (1) If an application under this section is one by way of execution, it would be governed by art 182 of Sch I of the Limitation Act, and, further, s 6 of that Act relating to the exclusion of the period of minority would apply to the application (p) If it is not, it would be governed by the residuary art 181 (q) If art 181 applies, the time is to be counted from the date of the decree which for the first time gave the applicant right of restitution, i.e., the decree of the lower appellate Court varying or reversing the decree of the Court of first instance, and not the date of the decree in second appeal dismissing the appeal from the decree of the lower appellate Court (r)

- (3) The difference between the two views also affects the Court fee on a memorandum of appeal from an order passed under this section (t) See note below, "Court fee" See also note above, "Splitting of claim for restitution"

The Allahabad High Court has held that an application for restitution as a result of a decree of Privy Council is one to enforce an order in Council and that art 183 of sch I of the Limitation Act, 1908, applies (u)

Limitation.—See note above, "Whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution"

Applicability of s 141.—See note above, "Whether a proceeding under this section is a proceeding in execution"

Appeal—The determination of a question under this section is a decree and appealable as such (v) and this is so even if the Court exercises the power of granting restitution in its inherent jurisdiction (w), see s 2, cl (2), definition of 'decree' But the question must be one directly covered by the section, and not one incidentally connected with or collateral to the decision of any such question Thus a decision that an application under this section is time barred is a decision on a question collateral to the question of restitution and hence it is not a decree and not appealable as such (x)

Court fee—It has been held by the Allahabad and Rangoon High Courts, that an appeal from an order made on an application under this section requires to be stamped ad valorem under the Court Fees Act, 1870, sch I, art 1, as an appeal from a decree This

Enforcement of liability

145. [S 253] Where any person has become liable as surety—

- (a) for the performance of any decree or any part thereof, or
- (b) for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree, or
- (c) for the payment of any money, or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceeding consequent thereon,

the decree or order may be executed against him, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees and such person shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47

Provided that such notice as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety

The old section —The corresponding s 253 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows —

Whenever a person has before the passing of a decree in an original suit become liable as surety for the performance of the same or of any part thereof the decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable, in the same manner as a decree may be executed against a defendant

Provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety

The new section —The present section differs from the old section in the following respects —

- 1 The old section applied only to surety bonds for the performance of a decree it did not apply to surety bonds for the fulfilment of a condition imposed upon a person under an order of the Court [see cl (c) of the present section] It was also doubtful whether the old section applied to suretyships for the restitution of property taken in execution of a decree [see cl (b) of the present section] The present section applies not only to surety bonds for the performances of a decree but also to surety bonds referred to above as also to bonds for the payment of money under an order of the Court See notes below
- 2 The present section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree whether original or appellate [see cl (a)] As to the old section it was doubtful whether it applied to original decrees only or applied also to appellate decrees
- 3 The word personally has been newly added in the present section

Object of the section—This section provides that where a person has become liable as surety for the performance of a decree [cl (a)] or for any of the purposes specified in cl (b) or cl (c), the party for whose benefit security has been given may enforce the security by executing the decree or order against the surety, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable, in the same manner as if the surety was a party to the decree or order and was directed by the decree or order to perform the obligation undertaken by him. It is no longer necessary to institute a regular suit to enforce the security as it was in some cases under the old section. The present section provides a summary remedy in execution and dispenses with the necessity of a separate suit to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable. The decree can be executed against the surety as though he were a party to the suit and the principal debtor (2).

Security for the performance of "any" decree —

1 Ex parte decree — A obtains an ex parte decree against B. The decree is set aside under O 9, r 13 [Code of 1882, s 109] on C standing surety for the performance of any decree that may be passed against B on a rehearing. The suit is reheard and a decree is passed against B. A may enforce the security by executing the decree against C (a). A separate suit is not necessary.

2 Appellate decree — The summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree, whether it be an original or an appellate decree. Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the summary remedy provided by that section applied at all to suretyships for the performance of appellate decrees it being held by the High Court of Calcutta that it did not (b) and by the other High Courts that it did (c). The present section makes it clear that the summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to security given for the performance of appellate decrees also. The rules that provide for security for the performance of appellate decrees are rules 5 and 6 of Order 41, corresponding to ss 545 and 546 of the Code of 1882. An illustration will make the point clear. A obtains a decree against B and applies for execution. B appeals from the decree and applies for stay of execution under O 41, r 5. Execution is stayed on C standing surety for the due performance of any decree that may be passed against B in appeal. A decree is eventually passed by the appellate Court against B. A may enforce the security against C by executing the appellate decree against him as if C was a party to the decree. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section A's only remedy was by way of suit against C.

Security for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree — A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain lands. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A applies for execution of the decree. The Court allows execution on C standing surety for the restitution of the lands to B in the event of the decree being reversed in appeal or for payment to B of the value of the property [O 41 r 6 Code of 1882, s 546]. The decree is eventually reversed in appeal. B may enforce the security by executing the appellate decree against C. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section B could only enforce the security by a separate suit (d).

Enforcement of liability of surety

145. [S. 253] Where any person has become liable as surety—

- (a) for the performance of any decree or any part thereof, or
- (b) for the restitution of any property taken in execution of a decree, or
- (c) for the payment of any money, or for the fulfilment of any condition imposed on any person, under an order of the Court in any suit or in any proceeding consequent thereon,

the decree or order may be executed against him, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees and such person shall, for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of section 47.

Provided that such notice as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety.

The old section —The corresponding s 253 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows —
 'Whenever a person has, before the passing of a decree in an original suit, become liable as surety for the performance of the same or of any part thereof, the decree may be executed against him to the extent to which he has rendered himself liable, in the same manner as a decree may be executed against a defendant

' Provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surety

The new section —The present section differs from the old section in the following respects —

- 1 The old section applied only to surety bonds for the performance of a decree it did not apply to surety bonds for the fulfilment of a condition imposed upon a person under an order of the Court [see cl (c) of the present section] It was also doubtful whether the old section applied to suretyships for the restitution of property taken in execution of a decree [see cl (1) of the present section] The present section applies not only to surety bonds for the performances of a decree, but also to surety bonds referred to above as also to bonds for the payment of money under an order of the Court See notes below
- 2 The present section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree whether original or appellate [see cl (a)] As to the old section it was doubtful whether it applied to original decrees only or applied also to appellate decrees
- 3 The word "personally" has been newly added in the present section

Object of the section—This section provides that where a person has become liable as surety for the performance of a decree (cl (a)) or for any of the purposes specified in cl (b) or cl (c) the party for whose benefit security has been given may enforce the security by executing the decree or order against the surety, to the extent to which he has rendered himself personally liable, in the same manner as if the surety was a party to the decree or order and was directed by the decree or order to perform the obligation undertaken by him. It is no longer necessary to institute a regular suit to enforce the security as it was in some cases under the old section. The present section provides a summary remedy in execution, and dispenses with the necessity of a separate suit to the extent to which the surety has rendered himself personally liable. The decree can be executed against the surety as though he were a party to the suit and the principal debtor (z).

Security for the performance of "any" decree —

1 Ex parte decree — A obtains an ex parte decree against B. The decree is set aside under O 9, r 13 [Code of 1882, s 108] on C standing surety for the performance of any decree that may be passed against B on a rehearing. The suit is reheard and a decree is passed against B. A may enforce the security by executing the decree against C (a). A separate suit is not necessary.

2 Appellate decree — The summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to suretyships for the performance of any decree, whether it be an original or an appellate decree. Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the summary remedy provided by that section applied at all to suretyships for the performance of appellate decrees it being held by the High Court of Calcutta that it did not (b) and by the other High Courts that it did (c). The present section makes it clear that the summary procedure contemplated by this section applies to security given for the performance of appellate decrees also. The rules that provide for security for the performance of appellate decrees are rules 5 and 6 of Order 41, corresponding to ss 545 and 546 of the Code of 1882. An illustration will make the point clear. A obtains a decree against B and applies for execution. B appeals from the decree and applies for stay of execution under O 41, r 5. Execution is stayed on C standing surety for the due performance of any decree that may be passed against B in appeal. A decree is eventually passed by the appellate Court against B. A may enforce the security against C by executing the appellate decree against him as if C was a party to the decree. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section, A's only remedy was by way of suit against C.

Security for restitution of property taken in execution of a decree — A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain lands. B appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A applies for execution of the decree. The Court allows execution on C standing surety for the restitution of the lands to B in the event of the decree being reversed in appeal or for payment to B of the value of the property [O 41 r 6 Code of 1882 s 546]. The decree is eventually reversed in appeal. B may enforce the security by executing the appellate decree against C. According to the Calcutta decisions under the old section B could only enforce the security by a separate suit (d).

In the third case also where the security is given to the Court the property may be sold by an order of the kind made in Raghubar Singh's case. At the same time the applicant may relinquish his interest in the charge and proceed to enforce the personal liability in the bond by attachment and sale of the property charged (o).

Where a security bond charging his property is given by the judgment debtor section may be given by the latter Court (r). For form of notice, see App H, form No 13

Discharge of surety.—The liability of the surety depends upon the terms of the bond and unless expressly limited to the original Court extends to the Court of Appeal (s). If the bond has reference to the ultimate issue of the suit it matters not that the suit has at one time been dismissed for default and then restored (t). A surety who has made himself liable for the performance of a decree cannot resist enforcement of the bond on the ground that a consent decree is passed on a bona fide compromise (u), nor on the ground a payment which has not been certified under O 21, r 2, of the Code (y). The form which the contract of suretyship takes is immaterial, it may be either in favour of the Court or of the decree holder (z).

Section no bar to a regular suit against surety.—As to the old section it was held that it gave an additional, not an exclusive, remedy against a surety, and that it did not prevent the decree holder from bringing a regular suit on the surety bond to enforce the security (a). The present section also does not bar a regular suit (b). It simply enables a party for whose benefit security has been given to sue the surety for whose surety is to be if an order is made in execution enforcing a claim against the surety, the surety may appeal from the order as if he was a party to the suit in which the decree or order sought to be executed was passed (c). In this respect the section gives effect to certain rulings under the old section (d). The reference, however, to sec. 47 does not import into this section the provision therein contained which bars a separate suit. A surety under this section is a party to the suit for the limited purpose mentioned in this section (e).

A surety for a deceased defendant is not liable when a decree is passed against a person who has not been adjudged to be the legal representative, and he may bring a suit to negative his liability (f).

Appeal.—An order under this section is appealable as a decree (g). See the penultimate paragraph of the section.

Limitation.—Where an appeal has been preferred from a decree for the performance whereof a person has become liable as a surety, the period of limitation for an application under this section is 3 years from the date of the appellate decree as provided by art. 182, cl. (2), Schedule I of the Limitation Act, and not 3 years from the date of the original decree (h).

146. [New] Save as otherwise provided by this Code or by any law for the time being in force, where any proceeding may be taken or application made by or against any person,

Proceedings by or against representatives

then the proceeding may be taken or the application may be made by or against any person claiming under him.

Proceeding by or against representatives.—The proceeding contemplated by the section includes an appeal. The expression claiming under is wide enough to cover cases of devolution, etc., mentioned in O. 22 r. 10. A sues B to establish his right to certain property. Pending the suit B mortgages the property to C. The suit is decided in A's favour. B does not appeal from the decree. C, as a person claiming under B, may appeal from the decree (i).

This section enables the legal representative of a deceased decree holder to be brought on the record to carry on a pending execution proceeding (j). An attaching decree holder who has executed the attached decree is a person claiming under the original decree holder and if the attached decree is reversed on appeal the judgment debtor may get restitution against him (k).

See notes to O. 9, r. 13, under the head 'Application by legal representative of deceased defendant'. Other cases to which the section applies have been considered in their proper place.

Act directed or allowed by a decree of Court.—This section does not apply where time is allowed for doing an act by a decree in a suit (a). But if the decree is a preliminary decree the Court keeping control over the action has full power to make any just and necessary orders therein including in appropriate cases the extension of time. So in a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale the Court may extend the time fixed in the decree for the payment of the price because the decree is in the nature of a preliminary decree (p). The form of a pre-emption decree is fixed by O 20, r 14, and there is therefore, no analogy between such a decree and a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale (q), but as to pre-emption decrees the cases are not consistent. It was held by the Allahabad High Court in Saranjan v Ram Bihal (r), that a Court has no power under this section to extend the time fixed by its decree under

Court, the section may be applied. In a case where an ex parte decree was set aside on condition that the defendant do pay a sum of money within a week, the Allahabad High Court held that the conditional order did not have the effect of a preliminary decree and that the lower Court should have required the money to be deposited by a certain

147. [New R S C, O 16, r. 21.] In all suits to which any person under disability is a party, any consent or agreement, as to any proceeding shall, if given or made with the express leave of the Court by the next friend or guardian for the suit, have the same force and effect as if such person were under no disability and had given such consent or made such agreement

Consent or agreement by persons under disability

Rules of the Supreme Court O 16 r. 21.—This section is new It is taken from O 16 r 21 of the rules of the Supreme Court with some alterations

Any person under disability —The section applies to consent given on behalf of persons under disability, such as minors and lunatics See O 32 below

As to any proceeding. —These words do not refer to the conduct of a suit or appeal A next friend or guardian ad litem has undoubtedly the conduct of a suit or appeal in his hands But if he does anything in the action beyond the mere conduct of it e.g. consents not to appeal the person under disability is not bound by it unless it is done with the express leave of the Court (1)

Express leave —The leave must be express In this respect the present section differs from the English rule documents chargeable with Court fee and consider the power to make good the deficiency to be subject to the discretion of the Court. The Patna High Court has held that time should be given when the amount of Court fee is a matter of doubt or if the party has made an honest attempt to comply with the law, but that time should not be extended if a litigant has deliberately and to suit his own convenience paid an insufficient Court fee. In other words the section should not be construed in such a way as to nullify the express provisions of ss. 4 or 6 of the Court Fees Act (o). The Lahore High Court also disapproves of the Bombay view and has refused to extend time when the insufficiency of the Court fee was due to the negligence of the appellant or his pleader (p). The Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have held that when an insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal is accepted by inadvertence time may be given to the appellant to supply the deficiency, but that if the Court is aware ab initio of the insufficiency of the stamp it ought to return the memorandum of appeal to the appellant in order that he may, if the case admits, re-present it duly stamped and apply for an extension of time under s. 5 of the Limitation Act (q).

Revision.—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that an order refusing to give time to a party to make up the deficiency in court fee is not capable of revision as such an order does not amount to a decision of a "case" within the meaning of s. 115 of the Code (r).

150. [New.] Save as otherwise provided, where the business of any Court is transferred to any other Court, the Court to which the business is so transferred shall have the same powers and shall perform the same duties as those respectively conferred and imposed by or under this Code upon the Court from which the business was so transferred.

Save as otherwise provided—O 9, r 13, provides that where an ex parte decree is passed against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside. Suppose now that an ex parte decree is passed by Court P for possession of certain immovable properties and subsequently part of its territorial jurisdiction including the locality in which the properties are situated is transferred to Court A. Has Court A power under this section to entertain an application to set aside the decree under O 9, r 13? It has been held by the High Court of Madras that it has, O 9, r 13, does not say that the Court that passed the decree is the only Court that can set it aside (s).

Scope of the section—There have been conflicting decisions by the High Court of Madras as to the scope of the section. In two cases it was held that the section is not confined to the transfer of specific business from one Court to another but also included cases in which a new Court is given part of the territorial jurisdiction of an old Court and is empowered to try the business arising within it (1). But in the case of Subramania v Swaminatha (u) decided in 1928, where territorial jurisdiction was transferred after the decree had been passed, the Madras High Court held that the Court to which jurisdiction had been transferred had no power to execute the decree under s 150 as that section is limited to cases where specific business is transferred. This case was approved by a Full Bench in Pamier v Muthu (t) also an execution case—decided in 1932 and the Court distinguished notifications which effect a change of jurisdiction in the future from those which effect a transfer of past business, and held that s 150 only applied to the latter. On the other hand Subramania v Swaminatha was dissented from by a single Judge of the Madras High Court in the following case (w). A money suit was filed in Court X and was transferred for trial to Court Y. The plaintiff obtained a decree in Court X, and then Court Y was abolished and its business transferred to Court Z. Where was plaintiff to apply for the execution of his decree? Under the definition in s 37 (b) Court X was the Court which passed the decree. Should the plaintiff apply to Court X, or could he apply to Court Z and was Court Z empowered by s 150 to entertain the application. The Judge held that he could apply to Court Z and that s 37 should not be read so as to deprive the decree holder of the facility provided by s 150.

In a Calcutta case (x) a preliminary decree on a mortgage for nearly Rs 2,000 was passed by a Munsiff who had jurisdiction up to Rs 2,000. The Munsiff was transferred and as his successor had not jurisdiction to that amount the final decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge. The succeeding Munsiff was then empowered to try suits up to Rs 2,000, and as the suit was taken to have been transferred to him he was held to have jurisdiction under s 150 to entertain an application for execution.

Under s 13 (2) of the Bengal and Assam Civil Courts Act 12 of 1887 business may be assigned to different Munsiffs having jurisdiction within the same local area. The Calcutta High Court has held that such an assignment of business is not a transfer within the meaning of this section (y).

151. [New] Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court

Saving of inherent powers of Court

Inherent powers of Court.—The Code of Civil Procedure is not exhaustive (z). The Court has therefore in many cases, where the circumstances require it, acted upon the assumption of the possession of an inherent power to act ex debito justitiæ and to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone it exists (a). The law cannot make express provisions against all inconveniences so that their dispositions shall express all the cases that may possibly happen, and it is therefore the duty of a Judge to apply them not only to what appears to be regulated by their express provisions, but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made and which appear to be comprehended either within the express sense of the law or within the consequences that may be gathered from it (b). This section does not confer any powers but only should be assisted in prosecuting the appeal before the High Court, and they confirmed the order of the High Court. The Bombay High Court has said that the section should be applied with great caution and that a Court cannot under this section restore an application under O 21, r 89, which had been dismissed for default of appearance (c). But where the ends of justice require it, the Court has an inherent power to make such order as it may deem proper. It has thus been held that although the Code contains no express provision on the matters hereinafter mentioned the Court has an inherent power—

- (a) to consolidate suits and appeals (p) including appeals to His Majesty in Council (q),
- (b) to postpone the hearing of suits pending the decision of a selected action (q1),
- (c) to stay cross suits on the ground of convenience (r),
- (d) to ascertain whether the proper parties are before it (s),
- (e) to enquire whether a plaintiff is entitled to sue as an adult (s1),
- (f) to entertain the application of a third person to be made a party (s2),

- (i) to remand a case to which neither O. 41, r 23, nor O 41, r 25, applies (s) See notes to O 41, r 23, "Remand in case of error, omission or irregularity," and notes to O 42, r 1, "Inherent power of High Courts to remand in second appeal,"
- (j) to stay the drawing up of the Court's own orders or to suspend their operation, if the necessities of justice so require (s5),
- (k) to stay proceedings in a lower Court pending appeal and to appoint a temporary guardian of a minor upon such stay (s6),
- (l) to apply the principles of res judicata to cases not falling within section 11 of the Code, see notes to s 11, "Section not exhaustive, on p 85 above and "Orders in execution proceedings," on p 87 above.
- (m) to add a party (t), or to transpose parties (u),
- (n) to punish summarily by imprisonment contempts of Courts committed by the publication of a libel out of Court (v),
- (o) to decide questions of jurisdiction though, as a result of its inquiry, it may turn out that the Court has no jurisdiction over the suit (u).

Amendment of decrees and orders.—This section has been taken from O 28 r 11, of the Rules of the Supreme Court

There are only two cases in which the Court can amend or vary a decree or order after it is drawn up and signed, namely —

- (i) under its inherent powers, when the decree or order does not correctly state what the Court actually decided and intended, and
- (ii) under this section, where there has been a clerical or arithmetical mistake, or an error arising from an accidental slip or omission

Section 206 of the Code of 1882 made no reference to errors in judgments and under that section it was held that if the decree is in conformity with the judgment the Court has no power to vary or amend the decree (h), even if the judgment is erroneous in law (i) But this section allows clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments to be corrected The question then arises whether if the decree agrees with the judgment but the error has arisen at an earlier stage of the transaction, in a deed in which the property has been incorrectly described, can the mistake be corrected under this section? In one case it has been held that the section applies (j) In another that the section does not apply (k) In one case it was said that the applicant might apply for amendment of the plaint before the decree had been executed and then apply for amendment of the judgment and decree to correspond with the amended plaint (l) In yet another case the amendment was allowed under the inherent power to make corrections necessary for the ends of justice (m) In a case where there was a misdescription of the name of the defendant in the plaint, judgment and decree it was held that the decree could be corrected under O 1, r 10 (2), read with sec 151 (n)

Inherent power to amend decrees and orders—Every Court has an inherent power to vary or amend its own decree or order so as to carry out its own meaning In so doing it does nothing but exercise a power to correct a mistake of its ministerial officer by whom the decree or order was drawn up (o), it only insists that the decree drawn up in the office of the Court should correctly express the judgment given by the Court (p) "It would be perfectly shocking if the Court could not rectify an error which is really the error of its own minister" (q) "I cannot doubt," said Lord Penzance in Laure v Lees (r) "that under the original powers of the Court independent of any order that is made under the Judicature Act, every Court has the power to vary its own orders which are drawn up mechanically in the registry or in the office of the Court—to vary them in such a way as to carry out its own meaning and where language has been used which is doubtful, to make it plain I think that power is inherent in every Court In Hatton v Harris (s), Lord Watson said 'When an error of that kind has been committed it is always within the competency of the Court, if nothing has intervened which would render it inexpedient or inequitable to do so to correct the record in order to bring it into harmony with the order which the Judge obviously meant to pronounce

A decree has been defined in sec 2 as the formal expression of an adjudication which completely determines the rights of the parties with regard to the matters in controversy in a suit O 20, r 6, provides that a decree shall be in conformity with the judgment Where a decree is at variance with the judgment, the Court has power to set right the decree and to bring it into conformity with the judgment (t)

"Accidental omission"—This section enables the Court to correct errors arising from an accidental omission (u) Thus where directions as to costs were inadvertently omitted, the decree was set right by adding the directions (v) Similarly, where the date from which payment ordered to be made were to run was inadvertently omitted, the decree was perfected by adding the date (w)

"Accidental slip."—The Court has power under this section to correct accidental slips (x) The Court can exercise the power even in cases where the mistake could be corrected in appeal for the object of the section is to provide a speedy and inexpensive relief (y), and when a Court erroneously dismissed an execution application as time barred omitting to notice that the last day of presentation was a Sunday, the Court had power to readmit the application (z) A bona fide error as to the amount of interest due to the defendant may be corrected under this section (a) And so also an error as to the period for which an injunction is to continue (b)

"May."—As to this word the High Court of Calcutta said "The word 'may' in the section does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the correction but merely enlarges the power of the Court by providing that such correction can be done at any time, or, in other words, the section simply emphasizes that no lapse of time would disentitle the Court to make the correction" (c) The correct view, it is submitted, is the one taken by the High Court of Allahabad, namely, that under this section "there is no right in any party to have a clerical or arithmetical mistake corrected The matter is left to the discretion of the Court and the discretion has to be exercised in view of the peculiar facts of each case" (d) In later cases the Calcutta High Court

"At any time."—A decree may be amended under this section at any time, although the time for appealing from the decree has expired (g). There is no limitation for an application to amend the decree (h). Under the corresponding English rule, an error in a decree was in one case amended after 39 years (i), and in another case after 19 years (j). In a Bombay case, an application was made to the High Court to rectify a decree in the exercise of its inherent powers 10 years after the date of the decree, and the application was allowed (k). But no amendment should be allowed by the Court either under this section or in the exercise of its inherent powers if it is inexpedient or inequitable to do so as where third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous decree without a knowledge of the circumstances which would tend to show that the decree was erroneous (l). Further, laches may in the particular circumstances of a case disentitle a party to relief under this section (m).

Amendment and limitation.—If limitation is under the residuary Article 181 the amendment of the decree does not furnish a fresh starting point for limitation (n). If Article 182 applies clause 4 of that Article enacts that limitation for execution runs from the date of the amendment. The amendment of the decree does not however extend the time for appealing, though in such a case recourse might be had to sec 5 of the Limitation Act (o).

By which Court amendment could be made.—The Court to amend a decree is the Court that passed it. Where an appeal is preferred from a decree of a Court of first instance the appellate Court may—

- (1) dismiss the appeal under O 41, r 11 (1), without issuing any notice to the respondent, or it may
- (2) confirm, reverse or vary the decree of the Court of first instance [O 41, r 32]

In case (1), it has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Allahabad and Rangoon, that it is the appellate Court alone that can amend the decree (p). On the other hand, it has been held by the Bombay and Patna High Courts that it is the Court of the first instance, and not the appellate Court, that can amend the decree, the reason given being that a dismissal under O. 41, r 11, leaves the decree of the lower Court untouched (q). See notes to sec 36 above.

In case (2), the appellate Court alone can amend the decree (r). But in a case where the District Court amended a decree after it had been confirmed on appeal, the High Court in revision made the same amendment suo motu (s).

The Calcutta High Court has allowed an amendment of a clerical error in its decree after the decree had been affirmed by the Privy Council (t)

The Court which passed the decree has power to amend it even after an appeal is filed, it is only when the appellate Court passes a decree which supersedes the decree of the trial Court, that its power to amend ceases (u)

When an appeal is withdrawn the decree of the lower Court is left intact and that Court alone has power to amend (v)

An arithmetical error in the decree of the lower Court repeated in a confirming decree of the appellate Court, may, it is submitted, be corrected by the appellate Court

Where an application for revision of a decree of a Provincial Small Cause Court is rejected by the High Court in limine, the proper Court to amend the decree is the Small Cause Court, and not the High Court (w).

Revision.—A decision under this section granting an application for amendment is an order and not a decree. The decision may therefore be the subject of revision under sec 115, but it cannot be the subject of an appeal (x). It has been so held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Bombay in cases under the corresponding sec 206 of the Code of 1882. A different view has been taken by the High Court of Madras. According to that Court, where a decree is amended, the aggrieved party has the right to appeal from the decree as amended. Hence if no appeal is preferred within the period of limitation, he cannot afterwards apply for a revision of the order allowing the amendment (y).

Where a case is one of "accidental slip" within the meaning of this section, but the Court which passed the decree refuses to amend it on the ground that the case does not fall under this section, the refusal amounts to a failure to exercise a jurisdiction vested in the Court within the meaning of sec 115, and the High Court has power to interfere in revision (z). Similarly where the lower Court amends a decree in a case in which according to its own view the amendment should be refused, stating as a reason for the amendment that it was bound under this section to bring the decree into conformity with the judgment, the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision under sec 115 (c) of the Code (a).

Amendment when to be refused.—Where the order as drawn up represents the real decision of the Court, the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear or alter it (b). "Even when an order has been obtained by fraud, . . . the Court has no jurisdiction to rehear it. If such a jurisdiction existed it would be most mischievous" (c).

Consent-decree.—Where a decree founded on a compromise does not embody the true terms of the compromise, the only remedy is by an independent suit to set aside the decree either on the ground of mistake or fraud or some other ground ejusdem generis with it (d). See note to sec 96, "Procedure for setting aside consent decrees."

Code of 1882, s. 206.—The third paragraph of sec 206 of the Code of 1882 runs as follows —

“ If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment, or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree the Court shall, of its own motion or on that of any of the parties, amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error. Provided that reasonable notice has been given to the parties or their pleaders of the proposed amendment ”

The above paragraph enabled the Court to amend its decree in the following two cases, namely —

- (1) Where the decree was at variance with the judgment, and
- (2) Where any clerical or arithmetical error was found in the decree

The present section corresponds with the second part of the above paragraph. The first part of the paragraph which empowered the Court to amend its decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment has been omitted. An application to amend a decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment must now be made to the Court in the exercise of its inherent power. Under O 20, r 7, it is the duty of the Judge to satisfy himself that the decree is in conformity with the judgment. This duty primarily rests with the Court and not with any interested party and so an application to amend a decree in conformity with the judgment may be entertained at any time (e)

Appeal.—No appeal lies from an order directing an amendment either under the Code (f) or under the Charter (g). In a case, however, where the whole method of calculation adopted by the first Court was challenged in the plaintiff's application, which purported to be an application under sec 152, and the first Court allowed the amendment, it was held that the order allowing the amendment must be regarded as one made under O 47, and that the order was therefore appealable (h).

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that though no appeal lies from an order of amendment, an appeal would lie from the amended decree (i).

153. [New. R. S. C., O. 28, r. 12.] The Court may at any time, and on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may think fit, amend any defect or error in any proceeding in a suit and all necessary amendments shall be made for the purpose of determining the real question or issue raised by or depending on such proceeding.

R. S. C., O. 28, r. 12.—This section is new. It is taken from the Rules of the Supreme Court, O 28, r 12. The words ‘in a suit’ after the word ‘proceeding’ do not occur in the English rule.

Scope of the section.—O 6, r 17, is confined to amendments of ‘pleadings’, and sec 152 to correcting errors in judgments, decrees or orders. The present section confers a general power on the Court to amend defects and errors in any proceeding in a suit and to make all necessary amendments for the purpose of determining the real question at issue between the parties to the suit. The section was referred to in a case where an incorrect description of a property in a mortgage deed was repeated in the plaint, judgment and decree and the Court allowed an amendment of the decree and connected proceedings (j) This power is vested in the original as well as the appellate Court (k) In Australian Steam Navigation Co v. Smith & Sons (l), their Lordships of the Privy Council said "Their Lordships are strong advocates for amendment whenever it can be done without injustice to the other side, and even where they have been put to certain expense and delay, yet if they can be compensated for that in any way it seems to their Lordships that an amendment ought to be allowed for the purpose of raising the real question between the parties"

"Any proceeding in a suit."—The following are some of the cases under the corresponding English rule and the present rule —

Answers to interrogatories—Where it was admitted by the defendant, a solicitor, in answer to interrogatories, that his partner had paid into the banking account of the firm money received by the latter for investment, the defendant was allowed to amend the answer it being shown that the admission had been made by mistake (m) In another case where the defendant charged the plaintiff (his manager) with misconduct, and the plaintiff exhibited interrogatories of which the substance was to ask the defendant to specify the acts of misconduct on which he relied, it was said by Thesiger, L.J., that if the defendant answered the interrogatories, and it was subsequently discovered by him that there were other acts of misconduct on which he could rely, there was nothing to prevent his being allowed to amend his answers to the interrogatories (n) See as to interrogatories O 11, rr 1 11, below

Particulars—An application to amend particulars if made a reasonable time before the trial, will generally be allowed on terms (o) But leave to amend particulars, when it is applied for at the trial, will as a rule be refused (p)

Notice of motion—A notice of motion in an action for the rescission of an agreement for the sale of land was allowed to be amended at the hearing by asking for the appointment of a receiver (q)

Title of appeal—If an appeal is presented against a person who is dead at the date of presentation the Court may under this section permit the title of the appeal to be amended (r)

154. [S. 3, third para] Nothing in this Code shall affect any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement.

Saving of present right of appeal

"Any present right of appeal."—There is a conflict of decisions as to the meaning of the words "any present right of appeal" which occur in this section According to the Chief Court of the Punjab, the words "any present right of appeal" refer to a right which had actually come into existence at the commencement of this Code by virtue of the decree or order sought to be appealed from having been passed before this Code came into force (s) According to the Madras High Court, those words refer to a right which had become vested in a litigant before this Code came into force (t) Thus there are cases in which a second appeal lay under the old Code from certain orders made in execution (the orders being treated as decrees), while no such appeal lies under the present Code. According to the Chief Court of the Panjab, no second appeal would lie in such a case from the order made in first appeal unless the latter order was made while the old Code was in force. According to the Madras High Court, a second appeal would lie if the first appeal from the order made by the Court of first instance was preferred when the old Code was in force, though the order made in first appeal was not made until after the new Code came into force (u). Similarly there are cases in which was in force (v). According to the Madras High Court, it would seem that an appeal would lie if the suit in which the order was made was instituted when the old Code was in force. See s 96, sub s (3), and ss 97 and 104. See also notes to s 1.

155. [New.] The enactments mentioned in the Fourth Schedule are hereby amended to the extent specified in the fourth column thereof.

Amendment of certain Acts

156. [S. 3, first sentence.] The enactments mentioned in the Fifth Schedule are hereby repealed to the extent specified in the fourth column thereof.

Repeals

This section and the Fifth Schedule to the Code have been repealed by the Second Repealing and Amending Act 17 of 1914, s 3.

157. [S. 3, second sentence.] Notifications published, declarations and rules made, places appointed, agreements filed, scales prescribed, forms framed, appointments made and powers conferred under Act VIII of 1859 or under any Code of Civil Procedure or any Act amending the same or under any other enactment hereby repealed, shall, so far as they are consistent with this Code, have the same force and effect as if they had been respectively published, made, appointed, filed, prescribed, framed and conferred under this Code and by the authority empowered thereby in such behalf.

Continuance of orders under repealed enactments

158. [S. 3, second para.] In every enactment or notification passed or issued before the commencement of this Code in which reference is made to or to any Chapter or section of Act VIII of 1859 or any Code of Civil Procedure or any Act amending the same or any other enactment hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be taken to be made to this Code or to its corresponding Part, Order, section or rule.

THE FIRST SCHEDULE

ORDER I.

Parties to Suits.

1. [S. 26, R. S. C., O. 16, r. 1.] All persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate suits, any common question of law or fact would arise

Who may be joined as plaintiffs

Scope of the Order.—This order deals with joinder of parties, and to a certain extent, with joinder of causes of action (w) O 2, r 3, deals exclusively with joinder of causes of action Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with rule 1

General rules.—Before considering the present rule it may be as well to note the general rules relating to the joinder of parties and of causes of action According to the Code the essentials of a suit are—(1) opposing parties, (2) a subject in dispute, (3) a cause of action, and (4) a demand of relief (x) [see O 7, r 1] All these essentials must concur in every suit properly framed Order 1 deals with the joinder of parties Order 2 deals with the frame of suits In framing a suit the following three kinds of “misjoinder” must be guarded against—

(1) Misjoinder of plaintiffs—Where there are more plaintiffs than one, the provisions of the present rule apply This rule relates to the joinder of plaintiffs It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as plaintiffs in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact If not, they cannot be joined as plaintiffs in one suit, and they must bring separate suits If two or more persons are joined as plaintiffs in one suit in a case not covered by O 1, r 1, the result is a misjoinder of plaintiffs The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, if not, it will be deemed to have been waived [O 1, r 13] Where such objection is taken, and the Court finds that it is well founded, the Court should not dismiss the suit [O 1, r 9], but the plaint may be amended [O 6, r 17] by striking out the names of such persons as have been improperly joined as plaintiffs [O 1, r 10, sub r (2)], and the suit may then be proceeded with [O 1, r 9] In other words, an objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs is not fatal to the suit (y)

(2) Misjoinder of defendants—Where there are more defendants than one, the provisions of rule 3 of this Order apply That rule relates to the joinder of defendants It provides in effect that two or more persons may be joined as defendants in one suit if the right to relief alleged to exist against each of them arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or of fact If not, they cannot be joined as defendants in one suit, and separate suits must be brought against them If two or more persons are joined as defendants in one suit in a case not covered by O 1 r 3, the result is a misjoinder of defendants. As in the case of plaintiffs so in the case of defendants the objection on the ground of misjoinder should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity; if not, it will be deemed to have been waived (O 1 r 13). Where such objection is taken and the Court finds that it is well founded the Court should not dismiss the suit (O 1, r 9) but the plaint may be amended (O 6, r 17) by striking out the names of such persons as have not been properly joined as defendants (O 1, r 10, sub r (2)) and the suit may then be proceeded with (O 1, r 9). In other words, an objection on the ground of misjoinder of defendants is not fatal to the suit.

(iii) Misjoinder of causes of action—As to the meaning of cause of action, see notes to sec 20 under the head 'Cause of action'. A misjoinder of causes of action may be coupled with a misjoinder of plaintiffs or it may be coupled with a misjoinder of defendants. There may again be a misjoinder of claims founded on several causes of action. Accordingly this subject may be considered under the following three heads—

(a) Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action—Where in a suit there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, the plaintiffs should be jointly interested in all the causes of action. If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in all the causes of action, the case is one of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action (O 2, r 3, read with O 1, r 1, forbids such a misjoinder). The objection on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O 2, r 7). As to the procedure to be followed in the case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, see notes to O 2, r 3, "Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action". See also s 99 above.

(b) Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action Multifariousness—Where in a suit there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action the suit will be bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action if different causes of action are joined against different defendants separately (O 2 r 3, and O 1, r 3). Such a misjoinder is technically called multifariousness. The objection on the ground of multifariousness should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity (O 2 r 7). As to the procedure to be followed in the case of multifariousness, see notes to O 2, r 3, "Procedure in case of multifariousness". See also s 99 above.

(c) Misjoinder of claims founded on several causes of action—See O 2, rr 4 5

Non joinder of parties—Where a person who is a necessary party to a suit is not joined as a party to the suit the case is one of non joinder. A suit should not be dismissed on the ground of non joinder (2). The objection for non joinder should be taken before the first hearing (O 1, r 13), and the plaint may be amended by adding the omitted party either as plaintiff or as defendant, bearing in mind that no person can be added as a plaintiff, though he may be added as a defendant, without his consent (2). See notes to O 1, rr 9 and 13.

Relation of this rule to O 2, r 3—O 2, r 3, is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (a).

Changes effected in the law—Before considering O 1, r 1, in detail it should be noted that under the corresponding sec 26 of the Code of 1882, all persons could be joined in one suit as plaintiffs, provided that the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff arose from the same cause of action. The present rule is much wider. It is a

(2) Maphabala v Kunhanna (1894) 21 Mad 373
(a) Lamendra Nath v Brayendra Nath (1918)] reproduction, almost verbatim, of O 16, r 1 of the English rules. It enables several plaintiffs, though they have separate causes of action, to join in one suit, if—

- (1) the right to relief, alleged to exist in each plaintiff, arises out of the same act or transaction, and
- (2) there is a common question of law or fact

The expression 'act or transaction' used in this rule is more comprehensive than the expression 'cause of action' used in the old section, for the same act or transaction may give rise to different causes of action, as when several persons are injured by the same act of negligence on the part of a railway company. Under the old section such persons could not join as plaintiffs in one suit, the causes of action being different. Under the present rule, it seems, they can, as the right to relief arises out of the same act.

The old section.—The corresponding sec. 26 of the Code of 1852 was as follows:—

All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, in respect of the same cause of action.

The decisions on the meaning of 'cause of action' in the old section were not uniform. In some cases it was held that the expression 'cause of action' meant facts constituting the infringement of a right plus facts constituting the right itself (b), while in others it was held that it referred to facts constituting the infringement of the right but not necessarily also those constituting the right (c).

The following are some of the cases decided under the old section. It was held in those cases that the plaintiffs could not all join in one suit and that they should bring separate suits. Under the present rule, it is submitted, the plaintiffs may in each one of the following cases all join in one suit:—

1 In Aldridge v Barrow (d), the defendant, the editor and proprietor of a newspaper, published articles which referred to the 'Calcutta Police,' without naming individuals. The plaintiffs six of the members of the Calcutta Police Force, jointly sued the editor for damages, alleging that the articles were directed against them, and that they constituted a libel. Here the libel was in the same words, and in the same documents but of different persons. It was held that the plaintiffs could not all be joined in one suit. The Court said: It is true that the injury may have been caused by one act of the defendant as, for instance, in the case of a railway accident causing injury to several passengers, or, as is here alleged, of a collective libel on several individuals. The causes of action of the persons injured will none the less remain separate and distinct. There cannot in such cases be said to be one or the same cause of action.

2 In Rajjo Kuar v Debi Dial (e) several creditors to each of whom separate debts were owing by the same debtor, jointly sued the debtor to avoid a deed of gift executed by the debtor in favour of his daughter, on the ground that it was made fraudulently with intent to defeat their claims. The Court held that they could not join as plaintiffs in one suit on the ground that the causes of action were separate and distinct. Such a suit could now be properly brought by one or more creditors on behalf of themselves and others under O 1, r 8.

3 In Larajit v Ramdat (f), A and B were assaulted by C at an interview in C's house. A and B jointly sued C for damages for assault. It was held that the assaults on A and that on B constituted two distinct causes of action, and the suit was therefore bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs. The Court said: 'We may go further and say that as the blows on each plaintiff were inflicted at the same time and place and must be proved by the same evidence, it would be more convenient if the law permitted the trial of the two suits together than that it should be necessary to try them separately. But this is a matter for the consideration of the Legislature.'

4 In 41s Serang v Beadon (g), thirteen firemen, who were engaged on board a steamer, were all arrested under one warrant on a charge of desertion, and they were all tried together and sentenced to one month's imprisonment. The term of imprisonment expired on 5th May, but they were not released on that date. Thereupon all the thirteen brought a suit against the superintendent of the jail for damages for wrongful detention. It was held that the causes of action were distinct and separate and could not be joined in one suit.

5 In Pamanuja v Devanayaka (h), several trustees of a temple were removed from the office of trustees by the District Temple Committee. A suit by the trustees for a declaration that their removal was without just cause was held to be bad for misjoinder, on the ground that the dismissal of each trustee gave rise to a distinct cause of action.

The new Rule.—In all the cases cited above, it was held that the plaintiffs having distinct causes of action, they could not join in one suit, and that the proper course for them was to bring separate suits. The present rule covers such cases and allows the plaintiffs to join in one suit (i). Under the present rule several persons may join as plaintiffs in one suit, though their causes of action be separate and distinct, provided that—

- (1) the right to relief, alleged to exist in them, arises out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions, and
- (2) the case is of such a character that, if such persons brought separate suits, any common question of law or fact would arise.

Both these conditions must be fulfilled to enable two or more persons to join as plaintiffs in one suit. The two conditions are not alternative (j).

(1) A publishes a series of books under the title of 'The Oxford and Cambridge Publications' so as to induce the belief that the books are publications of the Oxford and Cambridge Universities or either of them. The two Universities may join as plaintiffs in one suit to restrain A from using the title, because the publication and the belief induced are common questions of fact arising out of the same series of transactions (k).

(2) A, a shareholder in a company, sues B, C and D, the directors, to recover damages on his own behalf for fraudulently inducing him to purchase shares by declaring an illegal dividend, and he joins in the same suit a claim on behalf of himself and all other shareholders (see r 8 below) for repayment by the defendants to the company of the amount of the dividend paid out by them. A is not entitled to join both causes of action in one suit, because the right to relief claimed in his personal capacity and the right to relief claimed by him as representing the shareholders do not arise out of the same transaction or series of transactions (l).

(3) Four persons, each of whom separately took debentures on the faith of certain statements in a prospectus issued by the directors of a company, joined as co plaintiffs in one suit against the directors, claiming damages for misrepresentations contained in the prospectus. Held that as the several causes of action arose out of the same transaction, and the case would involve common questions of fact the suit was properly framed (m)

(4) In a suit instituted by A, B and C jointly for an injunction against D, E and F, it is alleged that all three defendants, as officers of several associations of workmen conspired to prevent all persons, not belonging to the associations, from obtaining employment in place of the members of the associations. To constitute the overt acts alleged to have been committed in furtherance of the conspiracy, it is averred that D, E and F caused A, B and C to be molested, that E used threatening language to A, and that F assaulted C. It is proved that D was not a party to the conspiracy. As the claim arises out of the same series of transactions, and involves the common question of fact and law whether the overt acts were committed in furtherance of the conspiracy, A, B and C, may join in the suit, notwithstanding that an injunction is granted against E and F only (n). See r 4 (a) below

The illustrations given above are all English cases decided under the new English rule 1 of Order 16. That rule came into operation on the 26th of October, 1896. The present rule is in the main a reproduction of the English rule. The old English rule corresponded with sec 26 of the Code of 1882, except that the words "in respect of the same cause of action" did not occur in that rule. But though those words did not occur in that rule, it was held that two or more persons could not join as plaintiffs in one suit unless the cause of action was the same. Thus in Smurthwaite v Hannay (o), it was held by the House of Lords that several shippers of different shipments of cotton on the same ship for the same voyage could not jointly sue the shipowner for damages for short delivery, the causes of action being distinct and separate. For the same reason it was held that persons injured by the same act of negligence could not join in one action as plaintiffs for damages against the wrong doer (p). But since the test under the new English rule as well as the present Indian rule is no longer the identity of the cause of action, but the identity of the act or transaction, such a joinder of plaintiffs would now be perfectly legitimate both in England and India (q). In Thomas v Moore (r), Pickford, L.J., said. Whatever the law may have been at the time when Smurthwaite v Hannay was decided, joinder of parties and joinder of causes of action are discretionary in this sense, that, if they are joined, there is no absolute right to have them struck out, but it is discretionary in the Court to do so if it thinks right."

Plaintiffs having different interests.—Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions as to whether, where the plaintiffs were entitled to different interests in a property, they could join in one suit to recover possession of the property from a third party if the ground on which the relief was claimed was common to all the plaintiffs. According to the Allahabad decisions, they could not (s), according to the Madras and Calcutta decisions, they could (t). Under the present rule, there is no doubt that such persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs.

A succeeds to B's estate by inheritance, and assigns a portion thereof to C. D is in possession of the estate, and disputes A's right of succession to it. A and C may under the present rule jointly sue D for recovery of possession of the portions of the estate to which they are entitled, as their claims in respect thereof are based on a common ground. It does not matter that A claims by right of inheritance and C under an assignment from A. Both the conditions required by the rule are present in the case.

Further, having regard to the comprehensive language of this rule, plaintiffs may sue in a double capacity, if the conditions prescribed by this rule are complied with. Thus where plaintiffs were trustees of a house part of which was let out by them and the rest occupied by them as tenants, and they sued both as trustees and tenants for an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing a nuisance, it was held that there was no objection to their suing as trustees to protect the reversion and as tenants to enjoy the property free from the nuisance (u). See notes below "Jointly."

"Any right to relief."—The words "any right to relief" are wider than the words "the right to any relief" which occurred in the old section (v).

"Severally."—Where a right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist in two or more persons severally, they may join as plaintiffs in one suit or they may at their option bring separate suits. The rule does not necessitate one suit. A Hindu priest raises a masonry structure upon a certain platform round a sacred tree, on which every member of the community has an individual right to perform religious rites. Here every member of the community has individually a cause of action, and any one member may therefore sue the priest for the removal of the structure. But it is not necessary that all the members should join as plaintiffs in one suit. They may so join if they choose, but the law does not say that they should all so join (w). The same rule applies when two or more persons are entitled to the same relief in the alternative see notes below, under the head "in the alternative." The rule, however, is different when two or more persons are jointly entitled to the same relief in respect of a transaction.

"Jointly."—Where two or more persons are jointly entitled to the same relief in respect of a transaction, they must all join as plaintiffs in one suit. Thus if A, B and C are joint owners of a property, they must all be joined as plaintiffs in a suit to recover the property (x). So in a suit to recover joint family property, all the members of the joint family must as a general rule be joined as plaintiffs (y). In a suit to recover trust property all the trustees must join as plaintiffs (z). In a suit to recover the estate of a deceased person all the executors who have proved the will of the deceased must be joined as plaintiffs (a). If any one of them does not consent to join as plaintiff, he may be joined as a defendant [r 10, sub r (2)]. The proper course is first to ask him to join as plaintiff, and if he refuses, to join him as defendant. But the suit should not be dismissed merely because he is joined as defendant without being first called upon to join as plaintiff (b).

A Hindu dies leaving a widow, an adopted son, and a separate brother. A dispute arises between the widow and the adopted son on the one hand and the brother on the other as regards certain lands. The widow and the adopted son allege that the lands form part of the estate of the deceased. The brother, on the other hand, alleges that the lands belong to him. If the widow does not dispute the adoption, a suit may be brought by her and the adopted son as co plaintiffs against the brother to recover the property from him, for the plaintiffs are jointly interested in disproving the defendant's title (c). But what if the adoption is not admitted by the widow, and she asks the Court to decide the question of adoption as between her and the adopted son, and prays that if the adoption is proved, the property may be delivered to the adopted son, or if not proved, to herself? In such a case it has been held by the High Court of Madras, that a suit by the widow and the adopted son as co plaintiffs to recover the property from the brother is defective on the ground of misjoinder of plaintiffs, for the plaintiffs having antagonistic claims it cannot be said that the right to relief exists jointly in them (d).

In the alternative.—If in the case put above, the adoption is disputed, not by the widow, but by the brother, a suit may be brought by the widow and the adopted son as co plaintiffs against the brother, claiming in the alternative to recover the property for the widow if the adoption is not valid, or for the adopted son if the adoption is valid (r). Here there is no misjoinder of plaintiffs, for the validity of the adoption is not disputed by the co plaintiff as in the preceding case, but by the defendant. See O 1 r 4 (a), below.

2. [New. R. S C. O. 16, r. 1.] Where it appears to the Court that any joinder of plaintiffs may embarrass or delay the trial of the suit, the Court may put the plaintiffs to their election or order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient

This rule refers to a suit brought by several plaintiffs, in respect of the same act or transaction, but the causes of action are so distinct that it is not convenient to dispose of them at one trial (f) The Court may, put the plaintiffs to their election as to which of them will proceed with the suit or may order separate trials or may make such other order as may be expedient. A suit by several creditors joining as co-plaintiffs in a creditor's action, or a suit by several market gardeners claiming certain preferential rights as to stands in the market, is not a suit where the joinder could embarrass or delay the trial (g) Where plaintiff sued for possession of several properties, some in his personal capacity, and some as shewab of an idol, the Calcutta High Court ordered the suit to be treated as comprising two suits (h) acts or transactions is alleged to exist whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise.

Misjoinder of defendants. This rule is the converse of rule 1. It deals with joinder of defendants. See notes to O 1, r 1. "Misjoinder of defendants." Rule 4 of this Order is to be read with this rule.

Relation of this rule to O 2, r 3.—O 2, r 3 is to be read subject to the provisions of this rule (i).

Jurisdiction. This rule contains a provision as to joinder of parties. It assumes the existence of a suit in a proper forum, i.e., in the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit. If the Court has such jurisdiction then this rule may come into play. Hence if in a suit brought against two defendants A and B the Court has jurisdiction against A, but none against B this rule does not confer jurisdiction upon the Court to try the suit against B also merely because the conditions of this rule are satisfied (j). But if leave has been granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent a suit will lie to set aside a joint mortgage by A and B although the land of A is outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court for in such a case jurisdiction is derived from the leave given and the rule can come into play (k).

The old section.—The corresponding s. 25 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows:

"All persons may be joined as defendants against whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative in respect of the same matter."

In some cases under that section it was said that the expression "same matter" was equivalent to "same cause of action," in others that it was equivalent to "same act or transaction."

New Rule.—Under the present rule all persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist, where if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise. A plaintiff is entitled under this rule to join several defendants in respect of several and distinct causes of action subject to the discretion of the Court to strike out one or more of the defendants on the analogy of O 1, r 2, if it thinks it right to do so (l). "Whatever the law may have been at the time when Smurthwaite v Hannay (m) was decided, joinder of parties and joinder of causes of action are discretionary in this sense, that, if they are joined, there is no absolute right to have them struck out, but it is discretionary in the Court to do so if it thinks right" (n). As a general rule where claims against different parties involve or may involve a common question of fact bearing sufficient importance in proportion to the rest of the action to render it desirable that the whole of the matters be disposed of at the same time, the Court will allow the joinder of defendants, subject to its discretion as to how the action should be tried (o) [see ill. (3) below]. See notes to O 2, r 3, "Joinder of defendants and causes of action."

1 A, riding in an omnibus belonging to B, is injured by a collision between the omnibus and a cart belonging to C. A sues B and C for damages for personal injury charging the defendants jointly with joint negligence, and, alternatively charging separate negligence against each defendant. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, because the injury to the plaintiff arose from the same transaction or series of transactions and the case involves common questions of fact (p). It is otherwise, if the injury arises from distinct acts as in the next illustration.

2 A sued B for damage done to his house by B's negligence. B denied negligence, and alleged that the damage was caused by the negligence of C. Thereupon A applied for an order to join C as defendant. Held that the order could not be made. Collins, L. J., said: "When we analyse this case, we find we are dealing with it upon the assumption that the two acts which were done, the one by [B] and the other by [C], are entirely disconnected torts—each of them a separate injury—if it be injury at all—quite distinct one from the other. The one was done recently by [B] by excavation, and the other at a much earlier date by [C, a water company] by allowing water from its main to weaken the soil in front of the plaintiff's property." Thompson v. London County Council (q). Sadler v. Great Western Railway Company (r). Referring to these two cases, Scrutton L. J. said in Payne v. British Time Recorder Co. (s), that neither of them would now be decided in the way they were. In that case P entered into a contract with B Co. to supply them with certain printed cards which should conform to certain specimens supplied to him by them. In order to carry out that contract P entered into a contract with W Co. to supply him with the cards, and paid for them. The cards were duly sent to B Co., but B Co. refused to accept them on the ground that they did not conform to the specimens. P sued B Co. and W Co. claiming as against B Co. the price of the goods sold and in the alternative as against W Co. damages for breach of contract in not supplying the cards in accordance with the specimens. It was held that as there was a common question of fact to be tried, namely, whether the cards were in accordance with the specimens supplied, the Court would in the exercise of its discretion allow the two defendants to be joined in one action.

3 M mortgages certain property to X. After X's death, A claiming to be the adopted son of X sues M on the mortgage, and a consent decree is passed in the suit. Subsequently B alleging that she is the sister and heir of X, sues A and M (1) for a declaration that the adoption of A was not validly made, and (2) that the consent-decree (to which she was not a party) is not binding on her. Held by the High Court of Bombay that the suit is bad for misjoinder (t). This decision, it is submitted, is wrong and it has been dissented from by the Calcutta High Court (u).

4 The mere fact that the relief claimed against the several defendants differs in detail is no ground for objection that the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants provided that the suit against the defendants is in respect of the same act or transaction. A applies for shares in a Company on the faith of a prospectus. The shares are allotted to him, and he pays up Rs. 5,000 thereon. A then sues the Company and the directors alleging that the prospectus was false and calculated to mislead, claiming as against the Company cancellation of the allotment to him of his shares and the return of Rs. 5,000 with interest, and as against the directors Rs. 5,000 by way of damages. Here with interest and that claimed against the directors is damages. The fact that the relief claimed against the two sets of defendants differs in detail does not render the suit bad for misjoinder of defendants for the suit is in respect of one transaction, namely, the issue of a false and fraudulent prospectus. 'In substance the shareholder has one grievance, call it a cause of action or what you like, and in substance he has one complaint, and all the persons he sues have, according to him, been guilty of conduct which gives him a right to relief in respect of that one thing which they have done, namely, the issuing of a prospectus.' The remedy is different as against the several defendants, but not so much in substance as in form' (r). See r below.

5. A is an exporter of frozen meat. B is the owner of a line of steamers. By a contract between A and B, B agrees to carry from Argentine to Europe frozen meat in steamers belonging to him or in other suitable steamers. It is subsequently agreed that frozen meat should be shipped by A on a steamer called the Deron procured by B and belonging to C. Meat is accordingly shipped on the Deron, and the master of the Deron signs a bill of lading in respect of it and hands it to A. A sues B and C in respect of damage to the meat alleged to have been caused by the unseaworthiness of the Deron claiming against B on the terms of the before mentioned contract and against C upon the bill of lading. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants (r).

6. A sues B, C, D, E and F, for the recovery of certain documents of title and the goods covered thereby and in the alternative for damages. It is alleged in the plaint that the goods belonged to A, that B obtained from A the documents of title relating thereto by fraud and made them over to C, that C, knowing that B had no title either to the documents or to the goods, wrongfully dealt with them and sold the goods to D and F, that D and E wrongfully claimed to retain the goods and the documents of title; and, lastly, that one of the documents of title, namely, a railway receipt was pledged by B to F, though the goods covered by it were in the possession of D. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action (x). 'The foundation of the case, on which the rest of it depends, is the alleged fraud of B. If such fraud is proved the question is, did the defendants who all claim under B obtain any title? If the plaintiff fails to prove fraud on the part of B, the case fails against all the defendants. If he proves fraud, it may be that the defendants may have a different answer by way of defence, but that does not make the case any the less one of a common question of law and fact. The same act or transaction which concerns all the parties is the alleged fraud of B, and this involves a common question of law or fact. All defendants have derived title from a person who is alleged to have obtained the goods by means of fraud. By reason of this the possession of all is alleged to be wrongful. . . . Should it, however, be convenient, the Court may [Umabai v. Ishal (y)] direct the successive trial of the issues separately affecting different defendants. Thus the question of the alleged fraud of B touching all the defendants may be tried first. If it fails there is an end of the case' (r).

No misjoinder where some reliefs merely ancillary.—Where the relief claimed against some of the defendants is merely ancillary to the relief claimed against others, the suit is not bad for misjoinder, provided the suit is not in respect of several causes of action. A and B are co-sharers of certain lands in the occupation of C. A is entitled to two thirds of the lands and B to one third. A sues B, C and D, as against C and D that they may be ejected from his share of the lands, and as against B that the lands may, if necessary, be partitioned between him and B. The suit is not bad for misjoinder, for though the relief claimed as against C and D is for possession

- 3 claimed as against B is for partition the latter relief is auxiliary to the principal relief which is for possession. The inclusion of B in this suit is merely as that of a person properly a party to the proceeding in the circumstances of the case, and not as a litigant against whom a separate claim having no necessary connection with the ejectment of C and D is made. B, in fact, is a necessary party to the suit, for an actual division between A and B is essential to the ejectment of C and D (a). See r 5 below.

Ship—A ship is a 'person' within the meaning of this rule, so that a suit may be instituted against a ship as a defendant (b).

"Any right to relief."—The words "any right to relief" are wider than the words "the right to any relief" which occurred in the old section (c).

Alleged to exist—The question as to joinder of parties must be decided on the allegations in the plaint and the suit must not be dismissed on a preliminary issue of misjoinder until these are disproved (d).

(2) A obtains a lease of certain lands from B (landlord), and enters into possession of the lands. B then lets the lands in separate portions to C, D and E. Subsequently B, C, D and E forcibly dispossess A of the land. A may sue B, C, D and E in one suit for ejectment. The plaintiff being entitled to claim possession of the land as a whole, the mere fact that C, D and E hold specific and distinct portions of the land under different demises from B, does not make the suit bad for misjoinder of defendants. Nundo v Banomali (1902) 29 Cal 871, Raghunath v Sarosh (1899) 23 Bom 206.

(3) Halters v Green [1899] 2 Ch 696, given as ill (4) in the notes to O 1, r 1, under the head. The new Rule, ' is also an illustration under this head.

Joint wrong doers—Joint tortfeasors may be sued jointly or severally. Thus where more persons than one are concerned in the commission of a wrong, the person wronged has his remedy against all or any one or more of them at his option. But if the person wronged elects to sue only one of several joint tortfeasors, he cannot afterwards bring a suit against the rest even though the judgment may remain unsatisfied (e).

"Severally"—(1) Certain property held by A is sold under the Madras Rent Recovery Act in separate lots for arrears of rent, and purchased by B, C and D respectively. A sues B, C and D to set aside the sale on the ground that proper notice of sale was not given. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, merely because the property was sold to different purchasers. The proceeding in which the various items [of the property] were sold was one and the ground upon which the validity of the sale was impugned is the same in each case' (f). To use the words of the present rule, the right to relief claimed is in respect of the same act or series of acts, and there is a common question of fact and law.

(2) A suit is brought by a reversionary heir, on the death of a Hindu widow, to recover from A, B and C three separate properties sold by the widow to A, B and C respectively. The ground of the suit is that the sales were made without legal necessity. According to the Madras decision the suit is not bad for misjoinder (g), according to the Bombay and Allahabad decisions, it is (h). These were decisions under the old section. The question under the present rule would be whether if separate suits were brought against A, B and C, any common question of law or fact would arise. In a recent case under the old Code similar to the one above their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Their Lordships think it is at least very doubtful whether, upon the strictest construction to be placed upon the Procedure Code, it can properly be said that there was any misjoinder in this case" (i). In a suit brought by a reversioner claiming a third share of the estate against another reversioner who was in possession of some of the property, and against three other persons, two of whom were purchasers and one a mortgagee from the widow, the Allahabad High Court said that under the new Code in any event there was no misjoinder of defendants (j).

(3) In a suit for partition of joint family property by a minor against his father, the Madras High Court held that vendees and mortgagees and others who had obtained decrees against the father, which were said to be collusive and fraudulent were proper parties (k).

"In the alternative."—(1) A executes a lease of his land to B for a period of two years. At the end of the first year A sells the land to C. C demands rent for the second year from B. B alleges payment of the whole rent for two years to A in advance. C may sue A and B, praying for a decree against A, if it be found that B paid the rent to A as alleged, or, in the alternative, against B, if it be found that B did not pay the rent to A: Madan Mohan v. Holloway (1886) 12 Cal 555; Mourji v. Anverji (1907) 31 Bom 516.

(2) A purchases certain land from B, and enters into possession. Subsequently he is dispossessed by C who claims to be the owner of the land. A may sue B and C praying for a decree against B for a refund of the purchase money if it is found that C is the owner, or a decree, in the alternative, against C for possession if it is found that C is not the owner. Serajul Huq v. Abdul Rahaman (1902) 29 Cal 257.

(3) A, alleging that his agent B lent Rs. 1,000 to C, and that C had denied receipt of the money from B, sues B and C, praying for a decree against B, if it is found that the amount was not paid to C, or, in the alternative, against C if it is found that the amount was paid to him. The suit is properly framed for the "transaction" in respect of which the relief is claimed is the same. Meyappa v. Perianan (1906) 29 Mad 50, Arnnabhella v. Venkatswami (1884) 7 Mad 123.

(4) A mortgages his property to B, B assigns the mortgage to C who gives notice of the assignment to A, and demands payment from A of the amount secured by the mortgage. A says he paid Rs. 200, part of the mortgage debt, to B, before the assignment of the mortgage, and that he is not therefore liable for more than the balance. B denies the alleged payment. C sues A and B praying for a mortgage decree in the first instance against A for the whole of the mortgage debt if the Rs. 200 has not been paid, and in the alternative, if the Rs. 200 have been paid, for a mortgage decree against A for the amount of the mortgage debt less the Rs. 200 and for a decree against B, for Rs. 200 by way of damages. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of defendants, for the right to the relief claimed is in respect of the same transaction. Siyathurai v. Muhamad Meera (1909) 31 Mad 252, Korvuri v. Tallapragadha (1910) 35 Mad 39, 8 I C 1037. See notes above, New Rule, ill (4).

Costs where relief is claimed against defendants in the alternative—Where a suit is brought by A against B and C in the alternative, and a decree is passed against B with costs, but the suit as against C is dismissed, the Court has jurisdiction in a proper case to order B (the unsuccessful defendant) to pay in addition to the costs payable by him to A (the plaintiff) the costs of C (the successful defendant). The rule has thus been stated by Vaughan Williams, L.J. "The proper way is—do not join any defendant unreasonably, if the facts are such that it is reasonable to join them both and reasonable to be in a state of uncertainty as to which of the two is the really guilty one, then it is part of the reasonable costs of the action that the costs of the action which you have launched against one of those defendants, and who has succeeded in defending himself, should be borne by the man who is to blame" (l). In Child v Stenning (m) Jessel, M.R., dealing with a similar question said "It appears to me on principle, that he who was the person who caused the litigation, or whose error or representation caused it, ought to be the person to pay the costs of it."

A, representing that he is B's agent, enters into a contract with C on B's behalf, C demands performance of the contract from B. B denies that he employed A as his agent and refuses to perform the contract. C sues A and B for damages and claims relief against them in the alternative. The Court finds that A untruefully represented himself to be B's agent. A decree is passed against A for damages, but the suit against B is dismissed with costs. If the Court is of opinion that C reasonably (n) took proceedings against B, the Court may direct the costs payable by C to B to be included in the damages payable by A to C (o).

Appeal—An appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from an order refusing to allow the plaintiff to proceed in one suit against several defendants on the ground of misjoinder and requiring the plaintiff to elect against which of the defendants he will proceed. Such an order is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 for it is in substance a decision that the suit does not lie as framed, with the result that if the plaintiff insists the suit must be dismissed (p).

Court may give judgment for or against one or more of joint parties

4. [Ss. 26, 28] Judgment may be given without any amendment—

- (a) for such one or more of the plaintiffs as may be found to be entitled to relief, for such relief as he or they may be entitled to,
- (b) against such one or more of the defendants as may be found to be liable, according to their respective liabilities.

Cl. (a) of this rule is to be read with r. 1 above, and cl. (b) with r. 3 above (q).

Defendant need not be interested in all the relief claimed

5. [New R. S. C., O. 16, r. 5] It shall not be necessary that every defendant shall be interested as to all the relief claimed in any suit against him

A. C. 159

This rule is to be read with r 3 above. It provides in effect that where a suit is brought against several defendants, the fact that every defendant is not interested in all the relief claimed in the suit does not imply misjoinder of defendants. See notes to r 3 above.

6. [S. 29, R. S. C., O. 16, r. 6.] The plaintiff may, at his option, join as parties to the same suit all or any of the persons severally, or jointly and severally, liable on any one contract, including parties to bills of exchange, hundis and promissory notes.

Joinder of parties liable on same contract

Several liability on a contract.—This rule is confined to suits on contracts. The liability on a contract may be either (1) several, or (2) joint and several, or (3) joint. A and B, each for himself, agrees to pay Rs 5000 to C. Here A and B are severally liable on the contract. C may therefore bring one suit against A and B, or he may bring a separate suit against A and a separate suit against B. These suits may be brought simultaneously, or they may be brought successively one after the other. But if the suit is brought against A, and a decree is obtained against him, and the decree is satisfied, C cannot subsequently sue B on the contract. But if the decree remains unsatisfied, C is not precluded from suing B.

Joint and several liability on a contract.—The legal consequences of a joint and several liability on a contract are the same as those of several liability. Thus if A and B pass a bond to C for Rs 5,000 and the bond provides that A and B shall jointly and severally pay the amount to C, C may sue A and B jointly, or he may sue them separately, as in the case where the liability is several.

Joint liability on a contract.—The present rule does not provide for the case of a joint liability arising on a contract or negotiable instrument. The reason is that so far as liability on a contract is concerned, sec 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, makes all joint contracts joint and several. It allows a promisee to sue one or more of several joint promisors as he chooses, and excludes the right of a joint promisor to be sued along with his co-promisors (r). A partnership firm consisting of two persons, A and B, purchases from C goods worth Rs 5000. The liability of partners is joint, and A and B are therefore jointly liable to pay the price to C. But under sec 43 of the Contract Act C may sue either A or B at his option. It is not incumbent upon C to join both A and B as defendants. If C sues A alone, and a decree is passed against A, he cannot, according to English law, afterwards sue B, even though the decree against A remains unsatisfied. The reason is that there is in the case of a joint contract a single cause of action which can only be sued on once. The same view has been taken by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that the effect of sec 43 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, is to make all joint contracts joint and several. Therefore, where C obtained a judgment against A upon a joint bond executed by A and B, and afterwards as the judgment was not satisfied sued B for the same money, the Allahabad Court held that the suit against B was not barred. See Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act notes to sec 43, Effect of decree against some only of joint promisors.

It may be added here that if in the case put above C sues A alone, A may apply under O 1, r 10 (2), to have B joined as a defendant, and the Court may make such order as it thinks proper. In England it has been held that in an action on a joint contract against one only of the joint contractors the Court has jurisdiction, without obtaining the consent of the plaintiff, to make an order requiring the plaintiff to add the other joint contractor as a co-defendant, and that where the defendant has set up a reasonable case of joint contract, he has, in the absence of special circumstances negating it a prima facie right to an order requiring the plaintiff to add the other contractor as co-defendant (s).

Parties to bills of exchange—A draws a bill of exchange upon B payable to C or order. The bill is accepted by B. C then endorses the bill to D, D endorses it to E, and E to F. If the bill, while in the hands of F, is dishonoured, F may at his option sue A (the drawer), or B (the acceptor), or C (the endorser), or D (the endorser), or E (the endorser) or F may bring one action against all or any of them (t).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 16, r. 7.] Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress, he may join two or more defendants in order that the question as to which of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties.

When plaintiff in doubt from whom redress is to be sought

Scope of the rule—This rule applies only where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to obtain redress. It does not enable a plaintiff to join separate causes of action against different defendants in one action in a case where he could not do so under r. 3 above (u). Thus if damage is caused to A's house, and he is in doubt as to whether it was caused by excavation works carried on by a County Council or by Water Company allowing water from its mains to weaken the soil in front of the house, A cannot join the Council and the Company in one action, for these are two distinct torts. It does not matter that the resulting damage is the same in each case, for it is not the damage that constitutes the cause of action, but the injuria or the wrong done by a tort-feasor (v). In such a case the present rule does not apply. The following, however, is a case to which the rule has been held to apply. M, purporting to act as agent for C, enters into a charter party with B for loading B's vessel with a cargo. The cargo is not loaded, and B sues M for damages, alleging that M had no authority to enter into the charter party as agent for C. Subsequently B finds, upon discovery of documents, that it is probable that C did give authority to M to bind him [C] with the charter party, and applies to add C as a defendant. The case is one within this rule and C may be added as a defendant (w).

But the Court shall in such case give at the plaintiff's expense notice of the institution of the suit to all such persons either by personal service or, where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct.

(2) Any person on whose behalf or for whose benefit a suit is instituted or defended under sub rule (1) may apply to the Court to be made a party to such suit

Object of the rule—This rule is an exception to the general rule that all persons interested in a suit ought to be made parties thereto (x). Given once requires that in suits where there is a community of interest amongst a large number of persons a few should be allowed to represent the whole (y) so that trouble and expense may be saved (z). But it is not obligatory to have recourse to this rule and an institution may be sued in the name of its managers (a).

Application of the rule—The provisions of this rule apply only if (1) the parties are numerous, (2) they have the same interest and (3) the necessary privity as on is of time and not de given.

Representative suit.—A suit filed by one or more persons under this rule on behalf of themselves and others having the same interest in the suit is a representative suit. The provisions of Explanatory Note section 11 (regarding attachment) apply to such a suit. But if the suit is one under Order 8 the provisions of that rule must be strictly complied with (c). See notes below. Decree in a representative suit.

Numerous parties —Fluctuating body—Thirty defendants were left to the numerous (d) The High Court of Madras has held that a suit cannot be brought under this rule on behalf of the generis publici (e) Following this decision the High Court of Calcutta held in one case that this rule did not apply unless the parties were capable of being ascertained and a suit could not therefore be brought under this rule on behalf of the Hind community as the whole Hindu community is incapable of ascertainment (f) This decision has been disented from by the same High Court in later cases where it was held that it was not necessary for the application of this rule that the parties should be capable of being ascertained (g) In this connection it may be observed that property may be owned by a fluctuating body of persons like the inhabitants of a village (h) or the Dholu community of Varanasi (i) and a suit may be brought on their behalf under the rule. It has also been held that a person may render himself liable to a community like the Vysia community of Mogarala by agreeing to pay a certain sum of money to it and a

See notes below, Decree in a representative suit.

"Numerous parties"—Fluctuating body—Thirty defendants were held to be numerous (d). The High Court of Madras has held that a suit cannot be brought under this rule on behalf of the general public (e). Following this decision the High Court of Calcutta held in one case that this rule did not apply unless the parties were capable of being ascertained, and a suit could not therefore be brought under this rule on behalf of the Hindu community as the whole Hindu community is incapable of ascertainment (f). This decision has been dissented from by the same High Court in later cases where it was held that it was not necessary for the application of this rule that the parties should be capable of being ascertained (g). In this connection it may be observed that property may be owned by a fluctuating body of persons like the inhabitants of a village (h) or the Dhobi community of Narainda (i), and a suit may be brought on their behalf under the rule. suit to recover it may be brought by the community in the name of one or more members of the community under this rule (j)

"Same Interest"—It is essential that the parties should have the same interest in the suit. Thus where there are numerous legatees under a will, any one legatee may sue the executors on behalf of himself and the other legatees for a discovery of the estate of the deceased come into their hands, as they have all the same interest in having the will proved (l). Similarly, where a person dies leaving numerous creditors any one creditor may sue on behalf of himself and the other creditors, as they all have the same interest in representing the estate of the deceased to be as large as possible (l). On the same principle of the community of interest, any one rayat of a village may sue the proprietor of the village for himself and the other rayats for a declaration of their general rights against the proprietor (m). Similarly a villager may bring a suit on behalf of himself and his fellow villagers for a declaration of a right of way and for an injunction against the defendant for obstructing the way (n), but subject to the rule that such a suit is not maintainable without proof of special damage (o). Likewise, any one tax payer may bring a suit against a Municipality on behalf of himself and the other tax payers to restrain the Municipality from misapplying its funds (p).

In Templeton v Russell (q), a case under the corresponding English rule it was held that the rule applies only to persons who have or claim some beneficial proprietary right which they are asserting or defending in the suit. But this meaning of the word 'interest' was disapproved by the House of Lords in Bedford (Duke of) v Ellis (r). In the last mentioned case Lord Macnaghten said "But it seems to me that there is no reason whatever for so restricting the rule. Given a common interest and a common grievance a representative suit was in order if the relief sought was in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposed to represent. To limit the rule to persons having a beneficial proprietary interest would be opposed to precedent, and not, I think, in accordance with common sense. Take the case of a creditor's suit, which perhaps was the earliest instance of plaintiffs being allowed to sue in a representative character. It can hardly be suggested that a creditor has a proprietary interest in the real or personal estate of his deceased debtor. Thus the disciples of a mutt have sufficient 'interest' within the meaning of this rule to maintain a representative suit to declare alienations made by the Mahant invalid and to have the property alienated handed over to the Mahant for the time being (s). Similarly worshippers of a temple have sufficient 'interest' to maintain a representative suit for a declaration that a permanent lease of temple property granted to the defendants in possession is invalid (t), or for recovering temple property from a trespasser (u).

The expression "same interest" must be distinguished from the expression 'same transaction'. What is required under this rule is that the parties should have the same interest, it is not sufficient that their interests arise from the same transaction. Therefore, where goods of several persons are shipped under separate bills of lading the mere fact that the goods of all the persons are lost by the same cause does not entitle any one

3. Fraudulent transfer.—A suit to set aside a deed of gift or of trust on the ground that it is in fraud of creditors must be brought by or on behalf of all the creditors. Such a suit cannot be entertained if it is brought by only some of the creditors (1)

Suit by a member of a community in his own right—This rule is an enabling rule. It does not debar a member of a community from maintaining a suit in his own right, though the act complained of may also be injurious to the whole community. Thus if Mahomedans belonging to a particular sect are not allowed to use a mosque for prayer, any member of the sect entitled to use the mosque may sue as plaintiff to enforce the right. It is not necessary that the suit should be brought by him on behalf of himself and all other members of the sect entitled to use the mosque. A Mahomedan entitled to worship in a mosque may sue for a declaration that certain property alienated by the mutavali is wakf property, and for possession thereof from the alienee (2). Similarly, any member of a community may bring a suit to set aside unauthorised alienations of endowed property or of property belonging to the community, or for the removal of encroachments upon such property (3), or for maladministration of property belonging to the community (4).

When rule does not apply—The rule does not apply to an action of libel (5).

At what stage of the suit leave should be obtained—The proper course is to obtain permission before the suit is instituted, but if that is not done the rule does not forbid leave being granted afterwards. Permission under this rule may be granted even after the institution of the suit (6).

Whether the leave should be express.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the leave to sue need not be express, it is enough if it can be inferred from the proceedings (7). On the other hand, there is a dictum of Stuart, C.J., in an Allahabad case (8), that the leave to sue must be express.

Leave must be granted to definitely named persons—Where this was not done the suit was dismissed by the High Court of Calcutta (9). The other Courts would probably grant fresh leave in such a case. See notes above, "At what stage of the suit, etc."

"May be sued"—This rule applies not only to the case of numerous plaintiffs having the same interest, but also to the case of the numerous defendants having the same interest. Thus where the inhabitants of a village assert a right of way over land belonging to the plaintiff, the plaintiff may, with the permission of the Court, sue any one or more of the inhabitants on behalf of them all (10). The consent of the defendants on the record is not necessary for this purpose (11).

"May defend"—When there are numerous defendants having the same interest, any one of them "may be sued" on his own behalf and on behalf of the others. But where this is not done, and all the defendants are on the record, any one defendant "may defend" the suit on behalf of himself and the rest with the permission of the Court.

Who should apply for permission.—(1) Where a plaintiff intends to sue on behalf of himself and others, it is the plaintiff that should apply for leave. (2) Similarly where a plaintiff intends to sue one defendant for himself and others, it is the plaintiff that should apply for leave. (3) Where numerous defendants having the same interest are all sued, and they are all on the record, and if any one defendant is appointed by the other defendants to defend the suit on behalf of all, it is that defendant who must apply for leave (f).

In Halter v. Ser (u) Vaughan Williams, L.J., said: "The rule, as it stands, does not purport to leave it to the mere will or choice of the plaintiff or of the defendants, nor to give a right in either case of selection at the choice of a plaintiff who wishes to sue representative members of an unincorporated society. . . . It lies with the judge to give the authority, and if he thinks it a case in which the plaintiff may properly sue the persons that he proposes to sue as people proper to be authorized to defend in such cause or matter on behalf of or for the benefit of all persons so interested, then the order may be made."

Notice of suit.—Where a person sues, or is sued, or defends, a suit, on behalf of himself and others, any decree that may be passed in the suit is binding upon them all (s. 11, Explanation VI), unless the decree has been obtained by fraud or collusion (Evidence Act, 1872, s. 44). It is therefore necessary that notice of the suit should be given to all the parties who would be bound by the decree, for otherwise a person might be concluded by a suit of which he was unaware. When notice contemplated by this rule was not given the Patna High Court held that a decree could only be passed against those defendants who were on the record (v). The Privy Council have held that in a suit under O. I, r. 8, the observance of all the requirements of the rule is essential and that unless its provisions are strictly complied with section 11, Explanation VI, will not be applicable, and that persons interested in the right will not be bound unless they are on the record (w). See note 'Representative Suit—Explanation I I, at p. 66.

Court shall give notice by personal service or by public advertisement.—These words show that it is the duty of the Court to cause service of the notice or cause an advertisement to be published. It is the duty of the plaintiff, however, to move the Court for that purpose. But if he omits to do so, the suit ought not to be dismissed on account of the failure of the Court to perform the duties imposed upon it by this rule. The appellate Court should in such a case remand the case to the Court of first instance so that it may issue the notice (x).

Title of suit.—When the plaintiff sues or defendant is sued on behalf of himself and others under this rule that fact should be stated in the title of the suit, and not

| A B on behalf of himself and all other creditors of X 1 | Plaintiff |
| C D | Defendant |

Suit in name of wrong plaintiff—A brings a suit under this section on behalf of himself and other creditors of X. It turns out that A is not a creditor of X. Thereupon B an admitted creditor of X applies to be added as a plaintiff under O 1 r 10(1). Has the Court power to grant the application? The question arose in a recent Madras case but it was left open (z). The Madras case was not one of a bona fide mistake and it is submitted that if the suit was instituted by A by such a mistake the amendment may be allowed on terms.

Compromise of representative suit—A plaintiff suing in a representative character cannot compromise without leave of the Court nor can he give up or alter any right of the others without their consent or the leave of the Court (a). Similarly a person authorized by the Court to defend a suit on behalf of others having the same interest cannot even if there is no defence consent to judgment against them the proper course in such a case is to submit to judgment on their behalf (b).

Adding parties—The Court will not compel the plaintiff to add the persons on whose behalf he sues as co plaintiffs. Thus where an action was brought by a plaintiff on behalf of himself and the other owners of a ship against the defendants for freight and dues for the use of the ship and the defendants applied to add the names of the other owners as plaintiffs in order that the defendants might have the liability of the other owners as plaintiffs for costs it was held that the plaintiff could not be compelled to add the other owners as co plaintiffs (c). Where a plaintiff sues on behalf of himself and others and one of the persons on whose behalf he sues objects to the plaintiff so doing he may apply to have himself added as a defendant (d). If one of the persons on whose behalf the plaintiff purports to sue is dissatisfied with an order made in the suit he may apply to be added as a defendant but he cannot appeal from the order (e). The application to be added as a defendant must be made without

Addition of plaintiffs after decree—Where the plaintiffs on record neglect to execute the decree passed in a suit brought under this rule the Court may add other persons having the same interest as the plaintiffs to enable them to execute the decree (h).

Decree in a representative suit—The general rule of law is that in suits where one person is allowed to represent others as defendant in a representative capacity any decree passed binds those others only with respect to the property of those others which he can in law represent and although the party on record eo nomine may be made

9 so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it

Misjoinder of parties—A misjoinder or non joinder of parties is not fatal to the suit (s). Where there is a misjoinder of parties, the name of the plaintiff or the defendant who has been improperly joined, may be struck out under r 10, sub r (2) below, and the case may be proceeded with. See s 99 above.

Non joinder of parties—As regards non joinder of parties, a distinction has been drawn between the non joinder of a person who ought to have been joined as a party and the non joinder of a person whose joinder is only a matter of convenience or expediency [see O 1, r 10 (2)]. This is because O 1, r 9, is a rule of procedure which does not affect the substantive law. If the decree cannot be effective without the absent parties the suit is liable to be dismissed. So when a decree for a partnership account was made without joining some of the partners the suit was dismissed on appeal as limitation as against the absent partners had expired, and the Court had no jurisdiction to make a decree for an account when some of the parties were not before it (i). Similarly a suit by executors, trustees, co owners of immovable property or partners for the recovery of property in which they are jointly interested will not lie unless all the parties interested are joined. If such a suit is filed by some only of the parties interested the Court will allow an amendment and join the absent parties as co plaintiffs (u). But if the plaintiff in spite of objection raised persists in the suit without joining the absent parties the suit will be dismissed (v), and he will not be allowed to remedy the defect in the course of an appeal to the Privy Council (u). In a suit against executors for an account all the executors should be made parties, but it is not necessary to join legal representatives of deceased executors (x). If one of the surviving executors who has taken no part in the management is not joined, and objection is not taken at the settlement of issues, the objection will be deemed to have been waived (y).

No decree can be made in an administration suit if the legal personal representative of the deceased is not made a party. The omission is not a technical defect but goes to the substance of the action (z).

In cases where the joinder of a person as a party is only a matter of convenience, the absent party may be added or the suit may be tried without him (a).

O 34, r 1, is subject to O 1, r 9—O 34, rule 1, requires all persons interested in the mortgage security to be joined as parties in a suit relating to the mortgage, but as that rule has been held to be subject to r 9 of O 1, a prior mortgagee may sue for sale without joining a puisne mortgagee as the puisne mortgagee is a proper but not a necessary party (b). This has been extended to the case of a part mortgagee who has been allowed to sue for sale of his proportionate share when the other part mortgagee is not joined or fully represented (c). Easement.—All persons entitled to an easement are not necessary parties to a suit for infringement of an easement where the cause of action is only against those who have infringed the plaintiff's right (c)

As to when objections to misjoinder and non joinder of parties should be taken see r 13 below

(2) The Court may at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court to be just, order that the name of any party improperly joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, be struck out, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined, whether as plaintiff or defendant, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be added

(3) No person shall be added as a plaintiff suing without a next friend or as the next friend of a plaintiff under any disability without his consent

(4) Where a defendant is added, the plaint shall unless the Court otherwise directs, be amended in such manner as may be necessary, and amended copies of the summons and of the plaint shall be served on the new defendant and, if the Court thinks fit, on the original defendant

SUB RULE (1)

Sub-rule (1) is the equivalent of sec. 27 of the Code of 1882 It corresponds to R S C, O 16, r 2

Scope of sub rule (1) —Sub rule (1) contemplates cases in which a suit is brought by a plaintiff, and he subsequently discovers that he cannot get full relief without joining some other person as co plaintiff (f), or, where it is found that some other person and not the original plaintiff is entitled to the relief claimed In the former case the application (which must be made by the original plaintiff) will be for adding and in the latter for substituting that other person as plaintiff But the Court must be satisfied before the application is granted that the amendment has become necessary through a bona fide mistake on the part of the original plaintiff. The mistake may be either one of fact (g) or of law (h) Where the point is doubtful, it is in itself evidence of a bona fide mistake (i) Again where the Court of first instance takes one view of the law and the Court of Appeal takes another, that in itself is evidence of a bona fide mistake (j)

Amendment allowed.—(1) The Official Assignee of Madras constitutes A B, Official Assignee of Bombay, his attorney to institute a suit on his behalf in Bombay A B instead of suing as ' constituted attorney of the Official Assignee of Madras sues by mistake as ' Official Assignee of Bombay The plaint may be amended under sub rule (1) by substituting the former description for the latter Sardarmal v Arandamal (1897) 21 Bom 200

(2) A joint Hindu family firm files a suit in the name of the firm although O 30 does not apply to such a firm The plaintiffs may be allowed, on payment of costs to amend the plaint by substituting the names of the members of the joint family firm Amulakchand v Dabu Lal (1933) 35 Bom L R 569 147 I C 786, (33) A B 304

(3) A Hindu appoints A guardian of the property of his minor son under his will but appoints no executor A believing that his appointment as guardian has the effect of constituting him executor of the will by implication sues B to recover certain property belonging to the estate of the deceased. The Court finds that A is not executor by implication The plaint may be amended by substituting the son as plaintiff Seshamma v Chennappa (1897) 20 Mad 467 [In this case the amendment was allowed in second appeal.]

(4) A sues B for work done under a contract B contends that the contract has been assigned by A to C, and A therefore has no right to sue A admits the assignment but says that the assignment is not absolute but by way of charge only and that he has therefore a right to sue It is found that the assignment to C is absolute and that

(j) [1901] 2 K B 485 at p 486 supra

In the last mentioned case, B objected to the amendment on the ground that, as the assignment was found to be absolute, A had no cause of action at the time the action was brought, but the objection was overruled. Coxens Hardy, J. & J., said: "It is said that the rule does not apply where it is shown that the plaintiff has no right of action; but there are abundant authorities to the contrary effect." The cases cited in the judgment in that case clearly show that the plaint would have been allowed to be amended, if that was the application, by adding C as plaintiff. This interpretation of O. 16, r. 2, of the English Rules, which corresponds in wording with sub rule (1) of this rule, would seem to be opposed to the view taken by the High Court of Bombay. It would seem that the Bombay Court would not allow an amendment if the original plaintiff had no right of action at the time the suit was brought (1). But this view, it is submitted, is not correct, and one of the cases cited by that Court in support of its view affirms the contrary (2). In a recent case, the High Court of Madras expressly held that the fact that the original plaintiff has no cause of action does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court to order the substitution of another person as plaintiff (3).

Amendment not allowed.—It would seem that no amendment should be allowed under sub rule (1), if the rights in dispute between the new plaintiff and the defendant would not be the same as those in dispute between the original plaintiff and the defendant. A suit is brought by an importer of "Roskopf Patent" watches for infringement of trade mark, alleging that he has got the exclusive right to use the trade mark in India. The trade mark belongs to the manufacturer, and not to the importer. The importer is subsequently advised that he cannot sue on the manufacturer's trade mark, and he thereupon applies that the manufacturer may be either added or substituted as plaintiff. If the manufacturer is made a party, his claim will raise questions as to how far he is entitled to the trade mark in the country of its origin, and consequently in India. That would be a case wholly different from that of the importer. Can the manufacturer be made a party under these circumstances? The question arose in a Bombay case (4). Batty, J., said that the point was one on which there seemed to be considerable room for doubt. Eventually the application was refused on the ground that it was made too late. In another case the original plaintiff having a hopelessly bad suit joined a new plaintiff who sued on a different title. The Lower Court had erroneously allowed the amendment but on appeal the High Court dismissed the suit with liberty to the second plaintiff to file a properly framed suit on her own title (5).

Upon such terms as the Court thinks fit.—Liberty to amend may be given upon the terms that the plaintiff should pay to the defendant his costs of the suit upto and including the order of amendment, and that the new plaintiff should only be entitled to such relief as he could have claimed if the suit had been commenced at the date on which he was added as a party (6).

Consent.—No person can be added or substituted as plaintiff under sub rule (1) without his consent. Thus a company cannot be made a plaintiff in a suit without its consent (7). See sub rule (3).

Limitation.—Section 22 of the Limitation Act provides that when after the institution of a suit, a party is substituted or added as a plaintiff or defendant, the date of substitution or addition is to be deemed, as regards that party, as the date of institution

It has been held that this provision of the law relates only to the addition of parties under sub rule (2), and not under sub rule (1). The result is that a party may be substituted or added under sub rule (1) even after the period of limitation. Thus where an agent sued in his own name, and subsequently, at a time when a new suit would have been barred by limitation, his principals were substituted as plaintiffs, it was held that the suit being the same, the change of parties did not affect the question of limitation (r).

SUB RULES (2) to (5).

Sub rules (2), (3) and (5) correspond to s. 32 of the Code of 1882 and to R. S. C. O. 16, r. 11. Sub rule (4) corresponds to s. 33 of the Code of 1882.

Old section.—Under the old section 32 there was a distinction between the power of the Court to strike out parties and the power to add parties. Under that section the power to strike out parties could only be exercised on the application of a party, and that too if the application was made on or before the first hearing. But the power to add parties could be exercised by the Court at any time, and even without any application. Under sub rule (2), the power to strike out as well as to add parties may be exercised by the Court at any stage of the proceedings, and even without any application by a party.

"At any stage of the proceedings"—The power to strike out or add parties may be exercised at any stage of the proceedings. Thus fresh parties were added in one case after a decree had been passed and a reference made to the Commissioner to take accounts and sell the property (s). In another case fresh parties were added after a suit had been reinstated under s. 108 of the Code of 1882 [now O. 9, r. 13] (t). In a Calcutta case a fresh party was added in a suit for partition after the preliminary decree had been passed and the Commissioner had made his report, but before the drawing up of the final decree (u). A Court can add parties after the suit has been remanded to it by the Court of appeal (v). Under the corresponding English rule it has been held that the Court has jurisdiction to allow amendment even after final judgment, so long as anything remains to be done in the action, though it be only assessment of damages (u).

Parties when added—Under this rule a person may be added as a party to a suit in the following two cases—

- (1) when he ought to have been joined as plaintiff or defendant, and not so joined, or
- (2) when, without his presence, the questions in the suit cannot be completely decided.

the goods in question from X by sample, an application that X should be added as a party to the suit, as the question between him (B) and A was the same as the question between him (B) and X (viz. whether the goods were according to the sample), so as to relieve him (B) from the necessity of bringing a fresh suit against X in the event of the Court holding that the goods were not according to the sample. Held, refusing B's application, that X was not a person who "ought" to be joined as a party to the suit, nor was his presence necessary to decide "the questions involve in the suit." In this case A had nothing to do with X, and to add X as a party would be to introduce a new cause of action which existed only as between B and X. The Court would then have to inquire into the circumstances under which B's agreement with X was entered into, an inquiry with which A had nothing to do (b).

Parties cannot be added so as to alter the nature of the suit.—A sued for his share of the estate of a deceased relative. On an application to have other persons interested in the said estate added as parties to the suit, it was held that the Court could not add them as parties, as to do so would be to alter the nature of the suit by converting it into a general administration suit (c). It has similarly been held that parties should not be added in a suit for rent so as to change it into a suit for title though questions of title may be incidentally investigated in a suit for arrears of rent, e.g., where the tenant disputes the extent of the title of the plaintiff to the arrears claimed by the plaintiff (d).

Transposing defendant as plaintiff.—The Court has power under sub r (2) to transfer a defendant to the category of plaintiffs. A zemindar obtained judgment for compensation for an infringement of his sub soil rights, but his brothers who were jointly interested were pro forma defendants. The Privy Council said that if there were a technical objection to passing a decree in favour of the zemindar, the defect could be remedied by adding the pro forma defendants as plaintiffs. Their Lordships added that such a course should always be adopted where it was necessary for a complete adjudication upon the questions involved in the suit and to avoid multiplicity of proceedings (e). Thus where A and B are trustees of certain property, and A brings a suit to recover the property from C impleading B as a defendant, the Court may on A's death transpose B as plaintiff for the further conduct of the suit (f). In a Bombay case A brought a partnership suit for accounts against 12 defendants. He then settled with most of the defendants, ceeded with. The Court granted the application (g). A sues B to recover money borrowed by B from C who is dead, alleging that C had created a trust of the money and that he was appointed trustee of the money. C's widow is impleaded as a co defendant in the suit. It is found that the money sued for was not trust money but it belonged absolutely to C. This is a proper case in which the Court should remove the widow from the array of defendants and bring her in the array of plaintiffs (h). A defendant may be transferred to the category of plaintiffs on his application even after a preliminary decree for accounts has been passed (i). But the Court should not make an order transferring a defendant to the category of plaintiffs if it results in changing the character of the suit (j). A sues B to recover a sum of money, and impleads C, who says that he and

- 10 It has been held that this provision of the law relates only to the addition of parties under sub rule (2), and not under sub rule (1). The result is that a party may be substituted or added under sub rule (1) even after the period of limitation. Thus where an agent sued in his own name, and subsequently, at a time when a new suit would have been barred by limitation, his principals were substituted as plaintiffs, it was held that the suit being the same, the change of parties did not affect the question of limitation (r).

SUB RULES (2) to (5).

Sub rules (2), (3) and (5) correspond to s. 32 of the Code of 1882 and to R. S. C., O. 16, r. 11. Sub rule (4) corresponds to s. 33 of the Code of 1882.

Old section.—Under the old section 32 there was a distinction between the power of the Court to strike out parties and the power to add parties. Under that section the power to strike out parties could only be exercised on the application of a party, and that too if the application was made on or before the first hearing. But the power to add parties could be exercised by the Court at any time, and even without any application. Under sub rule (2), the power to strike out as well as to add parties may be exercised by the Court at any stage of the proceedings, and even without any application by a party.

‘At any stage of the proceedings’—The power to strike out or add parties may be exercised at any stage of the proceedings. Thus fresh parties were added in one case after a decree had been passed and a reference made to the Commissioner to take accounts and sell the property (s). In another case fresh parties were added after a suit had been reinstated under s. 103 of the Code of 1882 [now O. 9, r. 13] (t). In a Calcutta case a fresh party was added in a suit for partition after the preliminary decree had been passed and the Commissioner had made his report, but before the drawing up of the final decree (u). A Court can add parties after the suit has been remanded to it by the Court of appeal (v). Under the corresponding English rule it has been held that the Court has jurisdiction to allow amendment even after final judgment, so long as anything remains to be done in the action, though it be only assessment of damages (w).

Parties when added—Under this rule a person may be added as a party to a suit in the following two cases—

- (1) when he ought to have been joined as plaintiff or defendant, and not so joined or
- (2) when, without his presence, the questions in the suit cannot be completely decided.

There is no jurisdiction to add a party in any other case (x). Thus a person should not be added as a defendant merely because he would be incidentally affected by the judgment (y). The Secretary of State is not a proper or necessary party in every suit in which a statute is challenged as ultra vires (z). But the Secretary of State was added as a party in a case where a petition for grant of letters of administration was entertained without notice to him (a).

Parties cannot be added so as to introduce quite a new cause of action.—A purchased goods from B by sample. The bulk did not correspond with the sample, and A thereupon sued B for damages. B contended that he had purchased

In this case A had nothing to do with X, and to add X as a party would be to introduce a new cause of action which existed only as between B and X. The Court would then have to inquire into the circumstances under which B's agreement with X was entered into, an inquiry with which A had nothing to do (b).

Parties cannot be added so as to alter the nature of the suit.—A sued for his share of the estate of a deceased relative. On an application to have other persons interested in the said estate added as parties to the suit, it was held that the Court could not add them as parties, as to do so would be to alter the nature of the suit by converting it into a general administration suit (c). It has similarly been held that parties should not be added in a suit for rent so as to change it into a suit for title though questions of title may be incidentally investigated in a suit for arrears of rent, et seq., where the tenant disputes the extent of the title of the plaintiff to the arrears claimed by the plaintiff (d).

Transposing defendant as plaintiff.—The Court has power under sub r (2) to transfer a defendant to the category of plaintiffs. A zemindar obtained judgment for compensation for an infringement of his sub soil rights, but his brothers who were jointly interested were pro forma defendants. The Privy Council said that if there were a technical objection to passing a decree in favour of the zemindar the defect could be remedied by adding the pro forma defendants as plaintiffs. Their Lordships added that such a course should always be adopted where it was necessary for a complete adjudication upon the questions involved in the suit and to avoid multiplicity of proceedings (e). Thus where A and B are trustees of certain property, and A brings a suit to recover the property from C impleading B as a defendant, the Court may on A's death transpose B as plaintiff for the further conduct of the suit (f). In a Bombay case A brought a partnership suit for accounts against 12 defendants. He then settled with most of the defendants ceeded with. The Court granted the application (g). A sues B to recover money borrowed by B from C who is dead, alleging that C had created a trust of the money and that he was appointed trustee of the money. C's widow is impleaded as a co defendant in the suit. It is found that the money sued for was not trust money but it belonged also wholly to C. This is a proper case in which the Court should remove the widow from the array of defendants and bring her in the array of plaintiffs (h). A defendant may be transferred to the category of plaintiffs on his application even after a preliminary decree for accounts has been passed (i). But the Court should not make an order transferring a defendant to the category of plaintiffs if it results in changing the character of the suit (j). A sues B to recover a sum of money, and impleads C who says that he and so that if his claim is established the suit will be dismissed. It was held that the Court can allow him to be added as a defendant in the suit in order to prevent multiplicity of suits and such person need not be compelled to file a separate suit to establish his status (w). For the same reason a person claiming to be the real tenant was allowed to intervene and was joined as a party in a rent suit (x). Again in a partnership suit strangers intervened and claimed that part of the property under partition was held in trust for them and the Court joined them as parties in order to completely adjudicate and settle all questions involved in the suit (y). See notes above, "Who ought to have been joined."

"Questions involved in the suit."—"Questions involved in the suit" refer only to questions between parties to the suit (z). Further, they refer only to questions as between plaintiffs and defendants and not to questions which may arise between co-plaintiffs or between co-defendants inter se (a).

Improper addition of plaintiff or defendant.—Sub rule (2) does not enable a Court to override the effect of O. 2, r. 3. Hence if the joinder of a person as plaintiff would result in a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, or the joinder of a person as defendant would result in a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, the application should be refused (b). Similarly if the joinder of a person as plaintiff is not possible under O. 1, r. 1, it does not become possible under this rule (c).

Consent of person added as plaintiff.—If any person who ought to have been joined as plaintiff does not consent to join as plaintiff, he may be made a defendant in the suit. The proper course is first to require him to join as plaintiff, and if he refuses to join as plaintiff, then to join him as defendant. But the suit should not be dismissed merely because he is joined as defendant without being first called upon to join as plaintiff (d).

Suit against a dead person.—Where a suit is brought against a person who is found to have died before its institution the plaint cannot be amended by bringing his legal representative on the record, though the suit may have been filed in ignorance of his death. The reason is that a suit against a dead man is a nullity from the first (e). But if a suit is against several defendants one of whom is found to have died before its institution, the suit should not be dismissed. It should proceed against the other defendants and the legal representatives of the deceased should be joined if he was a necessary party (f).

Limitation Act, sec. 22, provides amongst other things that when, after the institution of a suit, a party is added as a plaintiff or defendant, the date of addition is to be considered as regards that party as the date of the institution of the suit. It has been held under this section that where necessary parties are not joined within the period of limitation, the suit must be dismissed. Necessary parties mean parties necessary to the constitution of the suit (g), that is, persons whose joinder is necessary to enable the Court to award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed (h). Thus in a suit by one of several joint promisees the other promisees are necessary parties for no relief can be given to one of them. The suit is not properly constituted unless all the co-promisees join for the plaintiff can only enforce his claim in conjunction with them.

If in such a suit the other promisees are not joined within the period of limitation the suit must be dismissed (i) Similarly where A, B and C were three partners and A sued B only for partnership accounts, and C was added as a defendant after the period of limitation, the suit was dismissed (j) On the same ground, where a member of a joint Hindu family sued in his own name for a joint debt without making the other members parties to the suit, and the defendant raised an objection on the ground of non joinder, and the period of limitation had by that time expired, it was held that it was too late to join the other members as co plaintiffs, as the claim was at that date time barred, and the suit was accordingly dismissed (l) And the suit must likewise be dismissed, even if the Court of its own motion adds the other members as plaintiffs in circumstances such as those mentioned above The mere fact that the Court of its own motion orders that the name of any person be added as a party does not render the provisions of s 22 inapplicable to the case (l) There is nothing in sub rule (2) which frees the Court when acting of its own motion from the restrictions of the Limitation Act, in other words, a Court acting under sub rule (2) is bound by the provisions of s 22 of the Limitation Act (m) and the rights which parties may have acquired under the Limitation Act are therefore safeguarded (n) On the other hand, when a suit can be, and is, constituted without joining certain persons as parties and they are subsequently added as parties for the benefit of the defendants to ensure them against further litigation, the suit should proceed though they are added as parties after the expiry of the period of limitation and the Court should award such relief as may be given in the suit as framed to such a case the provisions of s 22 do not apply (o) Thus where a promissory note is passed to the manager of a joint Hindu family, he may sue the promisor without joining the other members of the family as co plaintiffs In such a case if the other members are joined as plaintiffs after the statutory period has expired their joinder, being unnecessary, does not prevent the suit as originally constituted from being in time (p) It has similarly been held that, that section does not apply when a person is added as a party merely to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the questions involved in the suit without any relief being claimed against him (q) Further the section does not apply where an assignee from a party to a suit, the assignment having been made pending the suit is joined as a party to the suit (r) It has also been held that that section does not apply where a person is joined as a defendant in a suit and he is subsequently added as a plaintiff (s) In a case before the Privy Council where relief was claimed against a debtor's estate, but none of the defendants was impleaded as representing the estate, and subsequently, though after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, one of the defendants [i.e., a person already a party to the suit] was impleaded as shewast and as representing the estate it was held that s 22 of the Limitation Act did not apply to the case (f). Where a suit is originally brought against a firm in the name of the firm but subsequently the title of the plaint is amended by substituting the names of the members of the defendant's family on its being brought to the notice of the plaintiff that the defendant is not a firm but an undivided Hindu family, the suit is not affected by the provisions of sec. 22(1) of the Indian Limitation Act since there is no addition of parties but only a substituting in order to correct a misdescription (g).

Party may be added at any stage of suit.—Subject to the provisions of the Limitation Act referred to above a person may be added as a party to a suit at any stage of the suit and even at the time of passing the decree (r). If a decree framing a scheme for the administration of a joint family trust has reserve to the parties liberty to apply the Court may join any party interested in order to enable him to apply (r).

Misdescription.—Where there is a misdescription of a defendant in the title of a suit there is complete power in the Court to make the necessary correction without regard to lapse of time. In this class of cases it is material to ascertain against whom the relief is claimed. If sued the Municipal Committee of Lucknow through the Secretary instead of suing the Committee through the President as ought to have been done. The relief claimed is against the Committee. No personal relief is sought against the Secretary. The case is one of misdescription and the plaint may be amended though the application for amendment is made after the expiry of the period of limitation (x). If sued 'The Agent B B & C I L Co., Ltd.' The relief claimed is against the railway company. No personal relief is claimed against the Agent. It applies for amendment of the plaint after the expiry of the statutory period by striking out the word 'Agent'. The amendment should be allowed, the suit being substantially against the company (y). But if the relief claimed was as against the Agent personal, the amendment can be allowed only if there is no question of limitation (z) but not after the expiry of the period of limitation for the suit (a). Where a suit is brought by or against a joint Hindu family firm in the name of the firm the title of the plaint may be amended by substituting the names of the members of the joint family even after the period of limitation prescribed for the institution of the suit (b). But if an alternative claim is made by an amendment suing them as a firm under O 30 that alternative case will be subject to the provisions of sec. 22 of the Limitation Act (c). Where a partner in a firm carrying on business out of British India and to which O 30 does not apply files a suit in the name of the firm and applies afterwards to amend the plaint by adding the names of the partners, the case is not one of misdescription but of substitution within sub rule (1) of this rule (d). But this decision has been criticised on the ground that a foreign firm being an entity not recognised by Indian law the suit was by a non-existent party and should have been dismissed as the rule refers to misdescription of existing persons (e).

Appeal.—No appeal lies under this Code from any order made under this rule. But where the name of a defendant is struck out under this rule on the ground that the plaint does not disclose any cause of action against him the order operates as a decree and is appealable as such (f). Similarly if in a suit for partition the name of one of the defendants is struck out on the ground that he has no interest in the properties the subject matter of the suit, he may appeal from the order, as the order operates as a decree against him (g)

Revision—In an old Calcutta case the lower Court refused to join a party in an interpleader suit because his claim was not admitted by the plaintiff. The High Court held that as this refusal was based on an erroneous construction of sec 32 of the Code of 1882, it was not open to revision as it was not a case of failure to exercise jurisdiction but simply putting an erroneous construction on the provisions of an Act (h). The Patna High Court has followed this case and has held that an order refusing to add a party is not subject to revision, though the High Court may interfere under sec 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915, if there is a denial of the right of fair trial (i). The Calcutta case has, however, been doubted in subsequent Calcutta cases which have held that the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision if the Court below has improperly refused to join a party (j). In another Calcutta case the High Court in revision ordered a person preferring an objection to be joined as a party in probate proceedings (k). In a Bombay case the High Court held that persons interested applying for the amendment of a scheme should be joined as parties to the suit in order to enable them to apply, but left them to apply to the lower Court (l). It does not however, appear that an application had been made to the lower Court and refused, before the suit came before the High Court in revision. The Allahabad High Court, in accordance with its view that an interlocutory order is not open to revision, has held that an order refusing to join a party is not a case decided and cannot be revised (m). The Privy Council have held that when a Court refused to join a necessary party it acted with material irregularity and that the decree was rightly reversed in revision (n). This, however, was not a revision of the order but of the decree consequent on the order.

(2) The authority shall be in writing signed by the party giving it and shall be filed in Court.

13. [S. 34.] All objections on the ground of non-joinder or misjoinder of parties shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objections as to non-joinder or misjoinder
Scope of the rule—This rule refers to two kinds of objections, the one for non-joinder of parties and the other for misjoinder of parties. These objections must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and, in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement, otherwise the objection will be deemed to have been waived (p). Where an objection to non joinder (q) or misjoinder (r) of parties is not taken in the Court of first instance, it will be disallowed in appeal. The Privy Council referred to this rule when disallowing an objection on the ground of misjoinder which was raised for the first time before them (s). See notes to O. 1, r 9, above. See also sec. 99.

"Unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen"—These words are new. When the ground of objection has arisen subsequent to the settlement of issues, the objection may be taken even after the settlement of issues. In fact, it was so held under the old section though the words "unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen" did not occur in that section. Thus if a coparcener or a reversioner or a remainderman is born after the settlement of issues in a suit to which he is a necessary party, and the plaintiff does not make him a party, the defendant may object to his non joinder, though issues have already been settled. Thus in a partition suit all coparceners must be joined as parties, even though some of them may be born after the institution of the suit. Similarly, where a woman who is a party to a suit is married after the settlement of issues and the nature of the suit is such that the husband is a necessary party, the plaintiff should make the husband a party and the defendant may raise this objection though it be after the settlement of issues (t).

As to misjoinder of causes of action, see O. 2, r 7

ORDER II.

Frame of Suit.

1. [S. 42.] Every suit shall as far as practicable be framed so as to afford ground for final decision upon the subjects in dispute and to prevent further litigation concerning them.

From this rule read with r 2 below, the intention of the Legislature appears to be that as far as possible all matters in dispute between the parties relating to the same transaction should be disposed of in the same suit (u)

2. [S 43] (1) Every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the cause of action, but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court

Suit to include the whole claim

(2) Where a plaintiff omits to sue in respect of or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of his claim, he shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished

Relinquishment of part of claim

(3) A person entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action may sue for all or any of such reliefs, but if he omits except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all such reliefs, he shall not afterwards sue for any relief so omitted

Option to sue for one of several reliefs

Explanation—For the purposes of this rule an obligation and a collateral security for its performance and successive claims arising under the same obligation shall be deemed respectively to constitute but one cause of action

Illustration

A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs. 1200. The rent for the whole of the years 1906, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 only for the rent due for 1906. A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1906 or 1907.

Changes in the section—The words obtained before the first hearing after the words the leave of the Court [see sub rule (3)] have been omitted. The words and successive claims arising under the same obligation have been added to the Explanation. The illustration has been expanded so as to comprise the case of rent due for a period subsequent to the one for which the suit is brought.

Cause of action—In Pulapur Raja v Suriya Rau (v) their Lordships of the Privy Council referring to the expression cause of action in this rule said that it meant the cause of action for which the suit was brought. Referring to this decision their Lordships said in the recent case of Muhammad Hafiz v Muhammad Zakariya (w) Their Lordships see no reason to attempt to qualify or to extend those words because they are in fact nothing but a repetition of the exact words of the Code the cause of action is the cause of action which gives occasion for and forms the foundation of the suit, and if that cause enables a man to ask for larger and wider relief than that to which he limits his claim, he cannot afterwards seek to recover the balance by independent proceedings." Again in Naba Kumar v. Pritashyam (x) where the plaintiff obtained a decree for the conveyance to them of properties purchased by a trustee, and then afterwards sued for mesne profits for the time the trustee was in possession, their Lordships said that the suit was barred under O. 2, r. 2, as the cause of action was the same as in the previous suit, i.e., the right to have the purchase declared a purchase for them. See notes to s. 20, 'Cause of action.'

Splitting of claim—This and the preceding rule are aimed against a multiplicity of suits in respect of the same cause of action (y). The object of the present rule is, to use the language of r. 1 of this order, "to prevent further litigation." For that purpose the rule provides that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action. He is not entitled to split his cause of action into parts, and bring separate suits in respect of each part. If he omits to sue in respect of, or intentionally relinquishes, any portion of the claim arising from the same cause of action, he will be precluded from suing in respect of the portion so omitted or relinquished, even though he states in his plaint that he intends to bring a second suit for the portion omitted (z). But it cannot be said of a plaintiff that he has omitted to sue in respect of a portion of his claim, unless he was, at some time prior to the suit, aware or informed of the claim or of the facts which would give him a cause of action (a). If the plaintiff was aware of the claim, and omitted to sue in respect thereof, he could not afterwards sue in respect thereof, though the omission was accidental or involuntary (b). For the definition of cause of action, see notes to s. 20, "Cause of action."

Illustrations

(1) Relinquishment—A owes B Rs. 2,200. B may relinquish Rs. 200 to bring his suit within the jurisdiction of a Presidency Small Cause Court, and may sue A in that Court for Rs. 2,000 only. Here the relinquishment being intentional, B cannot afterwards sue A for Rs. 200, the portion relinquished. But if the suit is transferred, on A's application, to the High Court, B may add Rs. 200 to his claim, the High Court having jurisdiction over the entire claim. Ramlall v. Bhayahari (1896) 1 C. W. N. 32.

(2) Accidental omission—A Mahomedan wife sues her husband to recover property belonging to her including Government paper of the value of Rs. 10,000, and a decree is passed in her favour. She afterwards sues the husband to recover from him Government paper of the value of Rs. 500, alleging that she omitted to include it in the previous suit by an oversight. The suit is barred, for she was aware of her claim when she brought the previous suit. Buzloor Rukhem v. Shumsoonnessa (1867) 11 M. I. A. 551.

(2a) Deliberate omission—A and his adoptive mother B execute in favour of C a deed of gift of property X which is invalid for want of attestation. A sues B to recover all the property of his adoptive father including property X. He joins in the suit C to whom B had improperly alienated property Y. In this suit, A made no claim against C as regards property X. A consent decree is passed against B for all the property including X and Y. A decree is passed after contest against C for property X. No decree is passed against C for property Y and when A attempts to take possession of X he is resisted.

(3) Instalments—Where a promissory note is payable by instalments, and two or more instalments have become due, and the holder of the note sues only for one of the instalments and omits to sue for the other instalments, he cannot afterwards sue for those instalments Mackintosh v Gill (1874) 12 B L R 37, Narayan v Mumba (1906) 8 Bom L R 547. Similarly if a promissory note is made payable by instalments, and it is provided that in default of payment of any one instalment the whole of the balance shall be payable immediately, a suit for recovery of the unpaid instalment will bar a subsequent suit for the balance Shrinivas v Chambasapagouda (1923) 25 Bom L R 203, 72 I C 290, (23) A B 201. In a Madras case it was said that there was no bar if the default clause gave the obligee the option of recovering the whole balance due at once, as where the words used were "when required" or "when you require," or "if you choose" or "you will be at liberty to sue" Mulyaprana v Kalu (1928) 112 I C 270, (28) A.M. 705. The Mulyaprana's case was considered by the same High Court in Rego v Philip (1929) 56 Mad L J 580, 120 I C 853, (29) A. M. 371.

(4) Two promises for one debt—A accompanies B, a pleader, to Hardwar, as B's medical attendant, for which Rs. 1,500 become due to him as his fees. B passes a promissory note to A for Rs. 700, and agrees as for the balance of Rs. 600 to do certain legal work for A. B dies without doing the legal work undertaken by him. A sues C, B's son, upon the promissory note, and a decree is passed for him. He then brings another suit against C to recover the Rs. 600, alleging that the legal work which B had agreed to do for him had not been done. The suit for the recovery of Rs. 600 is barred Preonath v Bisnath (1907) 29 All 256. The above decision has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras, on the ground that if several promissory notes are executed for portions of the same debt, each promissory note creates a distinct cause of action on which a separate suit may be brought Anantanarayana v Sarithra (1913) 36 Mad 151, 152 13 LC 458.

(5) Set off—A sues B for Rs. 200. As against the said claim, B claims to set off Rs. 200, being part of a sum of Rs. 1,200 alleged to be due to him by A, but omits to counterclaim from A the balance of Rs. 1,000. B cannot afterwards sue A to recover Rs. 1,000 Naubut v Mahesh (1905) 32 Cal. 654.

(6) Continuous account—When a tradesman has a bill against a party for any amount in which the items are so connected together that it appears that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous so that one item if not paid shall be united with another and form one continuous demand the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided Bonney v Wordsworth (1856) 18 C.B. 325, 334, Kedar Nath v Dinabandhu (1915) 42 Cal. 1043, 31 I C. 626.

(7) Omission of portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors—The omission of a portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors is no bar to a subsequent suit against another promisor in respect of the portion so omitted. A lets a house to B and C at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,200. The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 for the rent due for 1907. A cannot afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1906, but he can sue C for the rent due for those two years (c). See the illustration to the present rule.

(8) A suit for redemption of two out of three plots comprised in one mortgage is a bar to a subsequent suit for redemption of the third plot Bhau Daji v Pallu (1922) 24 Bom L R 1157, 73 I C 862, (23) A B 63.

(c) Ramanjulu v Aravamudan (1910) 33 Mad 517, 51 I C. 735.

(9) A suit by a receiver, not against A to recover two out of three properties alienated to him by a Hindu wife having a limited interest is a bar to a subsequent suit against him to recover the third. Dubari v. G. Dind (1924) 46 All. 822, 60 I C 31, (24) A A 102.

(10) A suit by a coparcener that a mortgage of one property is not binding on him bars a suit for a similar relief as to another property included in the same mortgage: Abhaidat v. Pagla (1925) 1 Luck. 1, 91 I C 976, (25) A O. 77. See also Abhaidat Singh v. Pagla (1926) 1 Luck. 1, 91 I C 976, (26) A O. 77.

(11) If a mortgage and a lease are one transaction, a suit for rent will bar a suit to recover the mortgage money. Dewan Chand v. Patti Ram (1926) 8 Lah. L. J. 381, 97 I C 396 (26) A L. 590. But not so if the transactions are separate: Gurdial v. Dewan Chand (1928) 112 I C 15, (28) A L. 732.

Explanation to the Rule—

A Obligation and collateral security for its performance.—The Explanation to the present rule is not intended to be an illustration of the foregoing provision, but a substantive enactment, making an obligation and a collateral security for its performance (which would otherwise be two independent causes of action) one cause of action for the purposes of the rule (d). In a recent case their Lordships of the Privy Council said (e): "The illustration given shows that a personal claim for the mortgage money under a mortgage and the enforcement of the security for the debt are to be regarded as one and the same cause of action. This provision is in marked distinction to the law of this country, where a mortgagee is at liberty to appoint a receiver under his deed to sue for the debt and to take proceedings for sale or foreclosure independently and at the same time. It is important, therefore, in considering the effect of the Code to bear in mind that its obvious intention is to establish a rule of law different from that accepted here." See notes below, "First suit for interest due under a mortgage, second suit for principal," and "Exceptions to the rule against splitting of reliefs."

B Successive claims arising under the same obligation constitute a single cause of action—The words "successive claims arising under the same obligation" have been added into the Explanation, and the illustration to the rule has been expanded, to give effect to a Calcutta decision where it was held that a claim in respect of all arrears of rent constitutes a single cause of action (f). The illustration shows that if rent has become due for the years 1905, 1906 and 1907, the landlord can bring only one suit for the whole of the rent in arrears, and that if he sues for the rent due for a particular year only, he will be precluded from suing for the rent due for the other years. It must, however, be noted that though this rule precludes the landlord from bringing a fresh suit for rent not included in the former suit, it does not prevent him from adopting any other remedy the law gives him to recover the rent. Thus though in the case put in the illustration the landlord cannot sue for the rent due for the year 1905 or 1907, he can distrain for the rent due for those years (g). On the same principle as in the illustration, a suit for an annuity for the year 1917 is a bar to a subsequent suit for annuity for the years 1914, 1915 and 1916 (h). See also ill. (7) above.

Interest accruing due from time to time under a mortgage deed, maintenance, malkana, &c., are other instances of "successive claims arising under the same obligation."

(3) Instalments—Where a promissory note is payable by instalments and two or more instalments have become due, and the holder of the note sues only for one of the instalments and omits to sue for the other instalments, he cannot afterwards sue for those instalments. Mackintosh v. Gill (1874) 12 B.L.R. 37; Narayan v. Mamba (1900) 8 B.M.L.R. 517. Similarly if a promissory note is made payable by instalments and it is provided that in default of payment of any one instalment the whole of the balance shall be payable immediately, a suit for recovery of the unpaid instalment will bar a subsequent suit for the balance. Akrishnas v. Channasapagueda (1927) 23 B.M.L.R. 207, 72 I.C. 240, (23) A.B. 201. In a Madras case it was said that there was no bar if the default clause gave the obligee the option of recovering the whole balance due at once, as where the words used were "when required" or "when you require," or "if you choose" or "you will be at liberty to sue"; *Mulayaprana v. (4) Two promises for one debt—I accompanies B, a pleader, to Hardwar, as B's medical attendant, for which Rs. 1,300 become due to him as his fees. B passes a promissory note to A for Rs. 700, and agrees as for the balance of Rs. 600 to do certain legal work for A. B dies without doing the legal work undertaken by him. A sues C, B's son, upon the promissory note and a decree is passed for him. He then brings another suit against C to recover the Rs. 600, alleging that the legal work which B had agreed to do for him had not been done. The suit for the recovery of Rs. 600 is barred. Prasanth v. Bisnath (1907) 29 All. 256. The above decision has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras, on the ground that if several promissory notes are executed for portions of the same debt, each promissory note creates a distinct cause of action on which a separate suit may be brought. Anantanarayana v. Sarithri (1913) 38 Mad. 151, 133 I.C. 458.

(6) Continuous account—When a tradesman has a bill against a party for any amount in which the items are so connected together that it appears that the dealing is not intended to terminate with one contract, but to be continuous, so that one item if not paid shall be united with another and form one continuous demand, the whole together forms but one cause of action and cannot be divided. *Bowsey v. (7) Omission of portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors—The omission of a portion of a claim in a suit against one of several promisors is no bar to a subsequent suit against another promisor in respect of the portion so omitted. A lets a house to B and C at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,200. The rent for the whole of the years 1905, 1906 and 1907 is due and unpaid. A sues B in 1908 for the rent due for 1907. A cannot afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1905 or 1906, but he can sue C for the rent due for those two years (c). See the illustration to the present rule.

(8) A suit for redemption of two out of three plots comprised in one mortgage is a bar to a subsequent suit for redemption of the third plot. Bhau Daji v. Parlu (1922) 24 Bom.L.R. 1157, 73 I.C. 862, (23) A.B. 63.

(10) A suit by a coparcener that a mortgage of one property is not binding on him bars a suit for a similar relief as to another property included in the same mortgage. *Ahmadat v. (11) If a mortgage and a lease are one transaction a suit for rent will bar a suit to recover the mortgage money. Duran Chand v. Lilla Lam (1926) 8 Lah L. 1 781, 97 I C 396 (26) A L 549. But not so if the transactions are separate. Gurdial v. Duran Chand (1928) 112 I C 15 (28) A L 732.

Distinct causes of action.—If the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit, the subsequent suit is not barred (i) What the rule requires is that every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising from one and the same cause of action. As observed by their Lordships in Angim v. Iana Lana (4) the rule is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transaction. One great criterion, when the question arises as to whether the cause of action in the subsequent suit is identical with that in the first suit, is whether the same evidence will maintain both actions (i). For the meaning of cause of action, see notes above. Cause of action.

(1) Different properties, different defendants.—A, claiming as his father's heir, sues B for possession of a certain piece of land. He then sues C, also as his father's heir, for possession of another piece of land. The fact that both pieces of land are claimed by A under the same title does not preclude A from maintaining separate suits against B and C. Dampanaboyina v. Addala (1902) 25 Mad 736, Narayan v. Shamrao (1903) 27 Bom 379, Lamchandra v. Ganjanan (1920) 44 Bom 352, 362, 56 I C 349.

(2) A suit brought by some members of a joint Hindu family against other members of the same family for partition of joint family property does not bar a second suit by the same plaintiffs for partition of other property belonging jointly to the family and strangers. Purshottam v. Atmaram (1899) 23 Bom 597.

(3) A sues B for specific performance of an agreement for the sale to him of B's land, and obtains a decree. In execution of the decree A is put in possession of a portion only of the land as it is found that the rest of the land did not belong to B, but to B's son. A subsequent suit by A against B for recovery of an aliquot portion of the price to the extent of the son's share is not barred under this rule, the cause of action being entirely distinct. Ienlatarama v. Ienlatia (1901) 24 Mad 27, Parangodan v. Perumodula (1904) 27 Mad. 380.

(4) A suit by a Mahomedan widow for dower is no bar to a subsequent suit by her for a declaration of her right to possess for life her husbands' estate in accordance with a proved local custom. Mahomed v. Hasm Bann (1894) 21 Cal 157, 20 I A. 153.

(5) A suit to eject a tenant holding under a lease is no bar to a subsequent suit against him for rent under the same lease. Subraya v. Rathnalsu (1909) 32 Mad. 330, 2 I C 313.

(6) The dismissal of a suit for a declaration of title under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, on the ground that the plaintiff, not being in possession, ought to have asked for possession also, is no bar to a subsequent suit for a declaration of title and for possession. *Darbo v. (7) Promissory note—original cause of action—A sues B upon a promissory note, but the action fails owing to a material allegation in the note. A is not precluded from subsequently suing B on the original cause of action, i.e. from suing B to recover the consideration for which the note was given. The two causes of action are quite distinct. Pavana v Pana Lana (1914) 41 I A 142 26 I C 228. Bens Lam v Lam Chandar (1914) 30 All 560 26 I C 302. (8) A alleging that he is entitled to one moiety of a piece of land and that B is entitled to the other moiety and that B falsely claiming the ownership of the whole land demolished the structures standing on A's moiety of the land and dispossessed A of his moiety, sues B for damages for demolition of the structures and appropriation of the materials. A decree is passed in the suit for A. Subsequently A, alleging that since the demolition of the structures B has been occupying the entire property to the exclusion of A by denying A's title thereto, sues B for a declaration of title to one moiety of the land and for separate possession thereof. Here the cause of action is the act of dispossession and it being the same in both the suits, the second suit is barred under this rule. Akhardah Company, Ltd v Durga Charan (1919) 46 Cal 640, 58 I C 636.

(9) A suit by A against B to recover immovable property in consequence of having been improperly turned out of possession, is no bar to a subsequent suit to recover from the same defendant movable property in consequence of its wrongful detention. Pattajur Paja v Suriya Pau (1884) 8 Mad 520 12 I A 116.

(10) A suit by reversioners against a Hindu widow for a declaratory decree and for an injunction forbidding alienations of her husband's property is no bar to a subsequent suit by them for a declaration that a gift made by her of the property is inoperative and cannot affect their reversionary rights. Chand Kour v Partab Singh (1888) 15 I A 156 16 Cal 98.

(11) The dismissal of a suit for specific performance by a purchaser is no bar to a subsequent suit by him for the recovery of earnest money. Munni Babu v Kunwar Kamla (1923) 45 All 378 72 I C 86, (23) A A 321.

(12) The dismissal of a suit for rent on the ground that the plaintiff was not the landlord but that he and the defendant held the land as tenants in common, is no bar to a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the same defendant for partition of the land. Timappa v Manjamma (1923) 25 Bom L.R. 491, 73 I C 424 (23) A B 440.

(14) A mortgage deed contains a stipulation conferring upon the mortgagee the option to sue for interest or for possession in the event of the mortgagor's failure to pay interest at the stipulated time. The mortgagor fails to pay interest, and the mortgagee sues him for the interest. The mortgagor again fails to pay interest, and the mortgagee brings a suit against him for possession. The previous suit is not a bar to the subsequent suit. Parmeshri Das v Fakira (1920) 1 Lah 457 59 I C 71 [F B].

First suit for possession, subsequent suit for mesne profits prior to suit—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (n), Madras (o), Bombay (l) and Rangoon (q), that a suit for possession of land is not a bar to a subsequent suit for mesne profits of such land accrued due prior to the institution of the suit for possession (r), the reason given being that the cause of action for possession is quite distinct from the cause of action for mesne profits and, conversely, a suit for mesne profits is not a bar to a subsequent suit for possession (s). The Patna High Court also holds that a suit for mesne profits is no bar to a subsequent suit for possession (t). On the other hand, the High Court of Allahabad (u) has held that a suit for possession is a bar to a subsequent suit for mesne profits accrued due prior to the date of the suit. As regards mesne profits accrued due subsequent to a suit for possession a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (v), and the Oudh Court (w) hold that the suit for possession is no bar. See O. 20, r. 12, see also notes to s. 11, on p. 84 above.

First suit for interest due under a mortgage, second suit for principal—Where the principal secured by a mortgage has become due, and the mortgagee sues for interest only, a suit for interest alone will bar a subsequent suit for principal (x) unless there is a separate covenant for the payment of interest secured in a separate manner, e.g., a covenant enabling the mortgagee to sue for overdue interest without calling in the principal after the date fixed for the payment of principal (y). But there is no bar at all if the principal had not become due at the date of the first suit (z).

In Muhammad Hafiz v. Muhammad Zafar (a) I executed a simple mortgage in 1910. The mortgage provided by cl. 2 that the interest should be paid monthly, and that if it was not paid for 6 months the mortgagee could realize either the unpaid interest only, or both the principal and interest, by filing a suit without waiting for the expiration of the time provided for repayment of the principal. By cl. 7 it was provided that if the principal with interest was not paid within 3 years the mortgagee should be entitled to sue for principal and interest. In 1914 the mortgagee sued in respect of the interest due and obtained a decree. In 1915 he brought a second suit in respect of the principal and the interest then due. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the second suit could not be maintained, having regard to the provisions of this rule. Their Lordships said: "What was the cause of action that the plaintiffs possessed when the proceedings were first instituted? It was the cause of action due either to the fact that the interest had been unpaid for more than six months, or that the three years had elapsed, and the principal was also unpaid, and in either case they could have sued for realisation of the whole amount secured by the deed." Not having done so, they were debarred from instituting the second suit.

The question came up again before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishan Varma v. Pata Mal (b). The rule to be deduced from that decision may be stated thus: If a mortgage deed provides for the payment of principal and interest as independent obligations, a suit for a personal decree for the interest due is no bar to a subsequent suit to realize the principal. In such a case the two causes of action are distinct. But if the mortgage deed in default of payment of interest gives the mortgagee the right to realize both the principal and interest, and the mortgagee, upon a default occurring, sues to realize the interest from the property, according to the provisions of O. 2, r. 2, he is precluded from afterwards suing to realize the principal due, even though his plaint in the first suit has purported to reserve the right to do so. The reason is that in such a case the cause of action—the non payment of the interest—gives rise to two forms of relief which the Code provides shall not be split, see the Explanation to the Rule. Their Lordships observed that if the mortgagee in their first suit claimed only a personal relief in respect of the unpaid interest, their case "would be on surer ground." But their claim in the first suit was for a decree for interest recoverable from the mortgaged property.

Under the rule explained in the two Privy Council cases cited above a suit for interest has been held to be a bar to a suit on the mortgage in some cases (c), and not in others (d).

First suit for produce payable under a mortgage, second suit for possession—A mortgage bond provides that the mortgagor shall pay a share of the produce of the mortgaged land to the mortgagee every year, and that in default the mortgagee shall be entitled to take possession of the land. The mortgagor fails to pay the produce for the year 1896. In 1897 the mortgagee sues for the value of the produce for 1896, but he does not claim possession of the land as he was entitled to do under the bond. This suit is a bar to a subsequent suit for possession on the mortgagor's failure to pay the produce for subsequent years. The mortgagee ought to have claimed possession in the first suit (e). See notes below, "Omission to sue for one of several reliefs," ill (1).

Properties held under separate titles—A plaintiff is not bound to include in the same suit separate properties held by different persons under different titles (f) But he is bound to include in the same suit all properties held by the same defendant though under different titles (g)

Different causes of action arising from the same transaction—This rule does not require that when several causes of action arise from one transaction, the plaintiff should sue for all of them in one suit. What the rule lays down is that where there is one entire cause of action, the plaintiff cannot split the cause of action into parts so as to bring separate suits in respect of those parts. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Payana v. Pana Lana (h), the rule “is directed to securing the exhaustion of the relief in respect of a cause of action, and not to the inclusion in one and the same action of different causes of action, even though they arise from the same transactions.” It was held in that case that a suit upon a promissory note, the suit failing owing to a material alteration in the note, was not a bar to a subsequent suit to recover the consideration for which the promissory note was given. A suit to declare a sale invalid will not bar a suit for possession of the property invalidly sold for the plaintiff could not have asked for possession until the sale was set aside (i).

In Anderson v. Kalagirla (j), A agreed to purchase 10 bales of yarn from B. A took delivery of 7 bales, but failed to pay the price of those bales, and as regards the remaining 3 bales refused to take delivery thereof. Garth, C.J., expressed the opinion that a suit by B against A to recover damages for failure to take delivery of the three bales was not a bar to a subsequent suit by B to recover from A the price of the 7 bales. The learned Judge observed that a claim for the price of goods sold, was a cause of action of a different nature from a claim for damages for the non acceptance of goods and the fact that both claims arose under the same contract did not constitute them one and the same cause of action. Wilson J., expressed a different opinion, stating that the claims having arisen under the same contract, the cause of action was but one, and that the subsequent suit was therefore barred. The opinion of Wilson, J., was followed in Duncan v. Jeetmull (k), which also was a case of breach of one and the same contract. These two cases show that all existing breaches of the same contract must be joined in the same suit, but they have been held not to apply to the case where there are separate contracts, though contained in the same instrument (l). Thus where it is expressly provided by an indent that each monthly shipment and item should be treated as a separate contract, the plaintiff is entitled to bring a separate suit for damages in respect of each shipment (m). Conversely, where goods are delivered under separate orders each order and delivery of goods is a separate contract, and gives rise to a separate cause of action unless it be proved that all the goods were delivered as under a single contract (n). See notes below, “He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted.”

Closely connected with this question is a point which was left open by their Lordships of the Privy Council, namely, whether a mortgagee who holds several mortgages on the same property, can treat them, with respect to the provisions of this rule, as separate causes of action, or whether he must bring one suit on all the mortgages (o). This subject has already been considered in the notes to s.c. 11 under the head, ‘Application of the above rules to suits on mortgage.’

* Omits to sue in respect of any portion of his claim.—This rule refers to cases where a suit has been filed and the plaintiff omits in such suit to sue in respect of a portion of the claim (p). It does not apply where no suit has been filed at all, as where a plaintiff is returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court and the plaintiff does nothing further in the matter (q). nor does it apply where a suit is filed and is subsequently withdrawn under O 23, r 1 (1) below (r).

"He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted"—The bar is not avoided by an express declaration to sue again (s). Nor is it avoided by obtaining leave to sue in respect of the portion so omitted, the reason is that the leave contemplated by this section is the leave to sue for one of several reliefs, referred to in sub r (1) it does not relate to the portion so omitted referred to in sub r (2) (t).

The rule says he shall not afterwards sue. It does not therefore apply where the suits are simultaneous and not successive (u). But fractions of a day are recognized, and in the presumption that suits filed on the same day, are filed in the order of their numbers in the register it has been held that the suit of the subsequent number is barred (v). But that presumption has been doubted and the plaintiff allowed to elect which suit shall be held to be barred under this rule (w).

It has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the present rule refers to a case where there has been a suit in which there has been an omission to sue in respect of portion of a claim and a decree has been passed in that suit. So long as no decree is passed, a second suit in respect of the portion so omitted is not barred. It follows from this that where a suit brought in respect only of a portion of a cause of action has not been heard and decided, the Court may allow the plaintiff in the suit to be amended by adding the omitted portion of the claim (x). Similarly if such a suit is withdrawn under O 23, r 1 (2), with liberty to bring a fresh suit the plaintiff may include in the fresh suit the portion that was omitted in the suit withdrawn by him (y).

A sues B in respect of a portion only of a cause of action. Pending this suit A brings another suit against B in respect of the remaining portion of the same cause of action. According to the Calcutta decision cited above neither suit is a bar to the other so long as no decree is passed in either suit. It is open, therefore, to A to rectify his error in bringing two suits in respect of the same cause of action by applying for leave to amend the plaintiff in either suit by adding the omitted portion which forms the subject matter of the other suit, and then withdrawing the other suit under O 23, r 1 (1). The Chief Court of the Punjab has gone further and held that if in such a case a person is allowed to withdraw either suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit under a. 23, r 1 (2), he is entitled to bring a fresh suit by virtue of the leave granted to him, though the other suit has been carried to a decision (z).

Omitting to sue for one of several "reliefs"—Where a person is entitled to more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action, he may sue for all the reliefs or he may sue for one or more of them and reserve his right with the leave of the Court to sue for the rest (a). If no such leave is obtained, he will be precluded from afterwards suing for any relief so omitted (b). But if the right to the relief in respect of which a

Exceptions to the rule against splitting of reliefs —

1. Order 34 rule 14 — Rule (3) provides that where a person obtains a decree more than one relief in respect of the same cause of action cannot be granted except with the leave of the Court. One for all and all for one. He cannot afterwards sue for any relief omitted. According to this rule if a mortgagor sues the mortgagee in the joint and several covenant to repay the mortgage debt and to institute a sale of the mortgaged property, he cannot afterwards if made well as he has exercised his right to do with the leave of the Court. To this effect even if there is an exception being that contained in O 34 r 14. The latter rule may be stated thus: a mortgagee sues the mortgagee to recover the mortgage debt from the mortgage jointly and severally and obtains a decree. He then applies for the attachment and sale of the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. The mortgaged property may be attached but it cannot be sold in execution of the decree. The only mode of bringing it to sale is by instituting a fresh suit for sale. O 34 r 14 says that the mortgagee may institute a suit for the sale of anything contained in O 2 r 2(f). The suit will be governed by the Transfer of Property Act 1882. It must however be noted that although O 34 r 14 allows a mortgagee to split his remedy it does not allow a plaintiff to split his claim (g).

Order 34 refers only to immovable property and so the exception in O 34 r 14 does not apply if the mortgage is of movable property. If the mortgagee has obtained a personal judgment and the mortgage is of movables he will be debarred from enforcing the mortgage security if he has not obtained leave under O 2 r 2(3)(k). If the plaintiff has a charge on the assets of a company for money lent in trust by the company and obtains a money decree against the company for the amount without reserving leave to sue on his charge, he cannot after the insolvency of the company enforce his charge against the Official Assignee (i).

2. Order 34 rule 6 — The effect of this rule is that where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property and the property is sold but the net sale proceeds are not sufficient to pay the mortgage debt he may subsequently apply for a

3. Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act 1879 (as amended by Act XXII of 1884) s. 10A — The effect of the said section is to allow a mortgagor to split his remedies by providing in effect that if he sues the mortgagee for an account he will not be precluded from suing him subsequently for redemption (k).

Leave to sue. — See notes above. He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted and Oniss notes for one of several reliefs.

Amendment of plaint. — See notes above. He shall not afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted.

Withdrawal of one of two pending suits. — See notes above. If split suit afterwards sue in respect of the portion so omitted.

Minors. — The provisions of this rule apply to adults as well as minors. If a suit by a minor by his guardian and next friend for rent due for 1903 and 1904 is barred a subsequent suit by the minor on attaining majority for the rent due for 1904 and 1905. The acts of a guardian in the conduct of a suit must be upheld until shown that they were unreasonable or improper (l) or that the suit or suit is not properly safeguarded (n).

Official Assignee—This rule merely bars a second suit. Therefore the Official Assignee cannot by an application to the Insolvency Court ask for a declaration on behalf of the insolvent mortgagee that the right of the mortgagee to sue for the principal is barred under this rule (n)

Execution proceedings—The present rule does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. A decree holder may therefore present successive applications for realizing different portions of his decree. Thus if a decree gives reliefs for possession and costs there is nothing in the Code which prevents separate and successive applications for execution as regards either of them (o). But in the case of money decrees the Bombay High Court has held that piecemeal execution is not permissible and that if the decree holder applies for execution for less than the full amount he must be taken to waive his right to execution for the balance (p).

Village Courts—The present rule does not apply to Village Courts in Madras but there is a similar provision in sec 18 of the Village Courts Act (1 of 1889). Therefore if the plaintiff has obtained a decree in a Village Court for a part of the amount due on a promissory note, he will be precluded from suing on the notes (p1)

3. [S 45 Cf R S.C., O. 18, r. 1.] (1) Save as otherwise provided, a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly, and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject matters at the date of instituting the suit

Scope of the rule—O 1, r 1, deals with joinder of plaintiffs. O 1, r 3 deals with joinder of defendants. The present rule deals with joinder of causes of actions. It is to be read subject to the provisions of rr 4 and 5 below, as is shown by the words save as otherwise provided (q). It is also to be read subject to the provisions of O 1, rr 1 and 3. The frame of a suit may not be supported by this rule and yet it may be justified by O 1, r 1, or O 1, r 3 (r). Rules 6 and 7 of this Order are to be read with this rule.

Cause of action—See notes to s 20. Cause of action

One plaintiff one defendant and two or more causes of action—Where there is only one plaintiff and only one defendant, the rule says that the plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant provided, of course that the provisions of rr 4 and 5 of this Order, are not contravened

If the causes of action are so disconnected that they cannot be conveniently tried together, the Court may order separate trials under r 6 (1) (a). These trials, however, will not be distinct suits, but they will be in the nature of suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring. (i) In Saxena's Application, 113 v. 114 (1) the plaintiff corporations the owners of twenty-three patents for saccharine sued the defendant for alleged infringement of all the trade marks. There were thus twenty-three causes of action united in one suit. It was ordered that the suit should be confined in the first instance to any three of the patents which the plaintiffs might select. (2) Callina M. R. said: "Now we start here with a writ launched covering twenty-three causes of action. Prima facie in all days one cause of action was thought to be enough. That was gradually more or less relaxed, and one cause of action was all wed to be coupled with one or two subordinate or necessarily connected causes of action. Then came by the rules under the Judicature Acts, a still further relaxation, but always subject to the one underlying principle, namely, that the burden lay on the plaintiff to prove his case, and that no extra burden should be imposed on the defendant through the plaintiff needlessly enlarging the area of the dispute. Prima facie a dozen causes of action cannot be combined in one writ, they must be so intimately connected as to justify their being included in one writ, but when one finds no less than twenty-three, that seems to me to be an outrageous extension of the latitude given by the rules to a plaintiff." (3) Coxon Hardy, L.J., said: "The action strikes me as almost an abuse of the process of the Court." (4)

The rule that a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant does not apply to suits for rent under the Agra Tenancy Act. Hence a plaintiff cannot join in one suit claims for arrears of rent of occupancy and non-occupancy holdings, though the claims may be against the same defendant. (5) In a case under the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 the Privy Council held that a plaintiff may join in one suit claims against a defendant in respect of more than one tenure. (6)

Misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action—Where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, the rule says that "any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant may unite such causes of action in the same suit." But the rule is to be read subject to the provisions of O 1, r 1. The result is that where there are two or more plaintiffs and two or more causes of action, they may be joined in one suit if the right to the relief and the causes of action arise from the same act or transaction and that there is a common question of law or fact, though they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action. But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction or if there is no common question of law or fact, the plaintiffs cannot all join in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule. (7) See notes to O 1, r 1, "The new Rule," (1) to (4).

Where the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action arising in a suit, the suit is said to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. (8) To Y two plots of land adjoining each other, one of which is claimed by A by adverse possession and the other by B by adverse possession. Under the Code of Procedure A and B could not join together as plaintiffs in one suit against X and Y, for the same reason—adverse possession by A would not be evidence of adverse possession by B. tiffs contract separately to sell cotton though to the same defendant, they cannot all

Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action.—
Under the Code of 1882 where a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and cause of action, the Judge to whom the plaint was presented might return it for amendment under s. 57. If the plaint, having been returned for amendment was not amended it might be rejected under s. 54, cl (d). If the defect was not noticed when the plaint was presented, but was brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage the Court might grant leave to the plaintiffs to amend the plaint within a time fixed by the Court, and might order that if the amendment was not made within the time prescribed the suit should stand dismissed with costs. Where leave to amend was granted the plaintiffs had to elect as to which of them should proceed with the suit and the plaint had then to be amended by striking out the names of the other plaintiffs and making consequential amendments (b). At the same time liberty was given to the defendant to amend his written statement to meet the case of the particular plaintiff who had elected to proceed with the suit (c). It was also held in some cases under that Code that where a suit was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action it was not proper to dismiss the suit without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of amendment (d). If the suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs appealed, the appellate Court might set aside the decree and remand the case to the lower Court with a direction to that Court to return the plaint for amendment (e). As to the procedure to be followed under the present Code, see notes to r. 7 below.

Where the defendant objects to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, but the objection is overruled, and a decree is passed for the plaintiffs and the defendant appeals from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the appellate Court, if it found there had been such a misjoinder, should not interfere with the decree, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.
This is the effect of the provisions of s. 99 of this Code which enjoin inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action, where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case.
The italicized words are new. They did not occur in the corresponding s. 578 of the Code of 1882. They have been added into s. 99 to supersede the practice followed under the old Code. Under that Code, where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit involving a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the course adopted by the appellate Court was to reverse the decree in appeal, and remand the case to the lower Court with the directions to that Court to return the plaint to the plaintiffs for amendment, so that the plaintiffs might elect as to which of them should continue as plaintiffs in the suit (f).

Under the present Code, where a decree is passed for the plaintiffs and causes of action, and the defendant appeals from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action, the appellate Court, if it finds that there has been such a misjoinder, should not interfere with the decree, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case. The effect of the provisions of s. 99 of this Code is to supersede the practice followed under the old Code.

misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action and remanding the case to the lower Court as was done under the old Code, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.

Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action—Where there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action, the rule says that the "plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendants jointly." "Joint interest in the main question raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants" (A). If the causes of action alleged are separate and the defendants are arrayed in different sets, the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, and is technically multifarious (1). "There is no provision in the Code all wing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants, that is to say, causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested to be united in one suit" (2). This rule, however, is to be read subject to the provisions of O 1, r 3, which relates to joinder of defendants. Hence two or more defendants may be joined as parties in one suit, though there are two or more causes of action, provided the right to the relief claimed arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or fact, and this is as although they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action. But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction, or if there be no common question of law or fact the defendants cannot all be joined in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule (3). See notes to O 1, r 3, "New Rule," illa. (4), (5) and (6). The following are instances of cases in which it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action:

Suits held to be multifarious

1. B agrees to sell certain lands to A. A sues B and a third person C on the averment that B was willing to execute the deed of sale, but was unable to do so, as C held possession of the title deeds under a false claim of an equitable lien upon the lands and refused to part with them. As against B, A claims specific performance of the contract, and as against C he asks for a declaration that he has no lien upon the lands and for delivery of the title deeds. The suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. The two causes of action are entirely distinct: they do not arise from the same transaction, nor would their trial involve any common question of law or fact. Luckumsey v Fazulla (1881) 5 Bom 177, following De Houghton v. Money (1876) L.R. 2 Ch App 166, distinguished in Arishnaswami v Sundarappayyar (1895) 18 Mad. 415.

The rule in De Houghton v. Money and Luckumsey v. Fazulla is that if on the face of the plaint, or of the plaintiff's case, it appears that a third party, who was not a party to the contract upon which the suit was brought, had a distinct interest, but which interest is sought to be declared null and void upon some equitable ground, such a claim against the said third party could not be made a part of the suit. In the case of De Houghton v. Money it was admitted by the plaintiff that there was a conveyance in favour of Money, but it was said that that conveyance was executed under such circumstances as would make it a voidable one, and in the case of Luckumsey v. Fazulla, it was clearly admitted by the plaintiff that the third party, who was not a party to the contract, had a distinct interest" (4). The case is different, however, where A (purchaser) sues B (vendor) and C (vendor's benamidar), claiming specific performance against B and a declaration against Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action— Under the Code of 1882 where a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and cause of action, the Judge to whom the plaint was presented might return it for amendment under s 53. If the plaint, having been returned for amendment was not amended, it might be rejected under s 54, cl (d). Such a course would not have been necessary if a misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be condoned under s 578. But the practice referred to developed as the cases were against the application of s 578 (g). The effect of section 99 is to preclude the appellate Court from reversing a decree on the ground of may be by plaintiffs and causes of action and remaining the case to the latter Court as was done under the old Code, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.

Misjoinder of defendants and causes of action—Where there are two or more defendants and two or more causes of action the rule says that the plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendants jointly. Joint interest in the main question raised by the litigation is a condition precedent to the joinder of several causes of action against several defendants. (A) If the causes of action alleged are separate and the defendants are arrayed in different sets the suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action and is technically multifarious. (i) There may be provision in the Code all wing distinct causes of action against distinct sets of defendants that is to say causes of action in which the defendants are not all jointly interested to be united in one suit. (j) This rule however is to be read subject to the provisions of Order 3 which relates to joinder of defendants. Hence two or more defendants may be joined as parties in one suit though there are two or more causes of action, provided the right to the relief claimed arises from the same act or transaction and there is a common question of law or fact and this is so although they may not all be jointly interested in all the causes of action. But if the right to the relief claimed does not arise from the same act or transaction or if there be no common question of law or fact the defendants cannot all be joined in one suit unless they are jointly interested in the causes of action as provided by this rule. (k) See notes to Order 3, New Rule, Rules (4) (i) and (f). The following are instances of cases in which it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action.

Suits held to be multifarious

1. Bagroo to sell certain lands to A. A sues B and a third person C in the agreement that B was willing to execute the deed of sale but was unable to do so as C held possession of the title deeds under a false claim of an equitable lien upon the lands and refused to part with them. As against B A claims specific performance of the contract, and as against C he asks for a declaration that he has no lien upon the lands and for delivery of the title deeds. The suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. The two causes of action are entirely distinct they do not arise from the same transaction, nor would their trial involve any common question of law or fact. Luckumsey v Faulla (1881) 5 Bom 177, following De Houghton v Money (1876) L.R. 2 Ch App 166, distinguished in Krishnaswami v Sundarappayyar (1895) 18 Mad 415.

The rule in De Houghton v Money and Luckumsey v Faulla is that if on the face of the plaint, or of the plaintiff's case, it appears that a third party, who was not a party to the contract upon which the suit was brought, had a distinct interest, but which interest is sought to be declared null and void upon some equitable ground, such a claim against the said third party could not be made a part of the suit. In the case of De Houghton v Money it was admitted by the plaintiff that there was a conveyance in favour of Money, but it was said that that conveyance was executed under such circumstances as would make it a voidable one, and in the case of Luckumsey v Faulla it was clearly admitted by the plaintiff that the third party, who was not a party to the contract, had a distinct interest. (l) The case is different, however, where A (purchaser) sues B (vendor) and C (vendor's benamidar) claiming specific performance against B and a declaration against

2 Seven different salt manufacturers enter into seven different contracts with A to manufacture salt for A and to deliver it in his factory A, alleging that all the seven persons had failed to deliver salt according to the terms of the agreement with them brings one suit against them for a decree that they might be directed to deliver the salt to him The suit is bad for multifariousness for the breach of each contract gives rise to a distinct cause of action and no one defendant is interested in any of the causes of action arising from the breach of contract with the other defendants Namaswamy v Kadir Ammal (1814) 17 Mad 168

3 A and B at Madura enter into an agreement to carry on business in partnership at Silangoor and they send C as their agent to Silangoor to conduct the business there A alleging that C had failed to carry out his instructions and to furnish accounts and that B was colluding with C sues B and C claiming dissolution of partnership as against B and damages for breach of contract as agent as against C The suit is bad for multifariousness for there are two distinct causes of action and neither defendant is liable in respect of the cause of action against the other Muthappa v Muthu (1904) 27 Mad. 80 See this case commented upon in Ajithkuras v Muhamad Meera (1908) 18 Mad. L.J. 236 243 244

4 A joint Hindu family consisting of 3 members A, B and C owns several properties A agrees to sell his share to P A fails to execute the necessary sale deed P sues for specific performance and includes in the suit a claim for partition and possession against all the members of the family namely A, B and C The suit is bad for misjoinder The claim for partition cannot be joined with the claim for specific performance as at the date of the suit the plaintiff had no right to sue for partition not having completed his title by a sale deed Wallis C.J. said The other members of the family were no parties to the alleged contract and therefore were not proper parties to the suit in so far as it is a suit for specific performance and it would in my opinion be a distinct hardship to them to force them to defend a suit for partition which would not be if the plaintiff failed to prove his contract Rangayya v Subramania (1917) 40 Mad. 365 40 L.C. 429 [F.B.] See ill. (1) above

In ill. (1) and (3) what were really two suits were combined into one In ill. (2) what were really seven suits were united in one suit In all these cases it was held that the suit was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action The reason why the law forbids a joinder in one suit of distinct causes of action against different defendants each of whom is unconnected with the cause of action against the others may thus be stated in the words of Peacock C.J. (m) Such a joinder complicates the case before the Judge, and renders it exceedingly difficult for him in dealing with the case of each defendant to exclude from his consideration those portions of the evidence which may not be admissible against him though admissible against one or more of the others Moreover it is vexatious and harassing to the different defendants Such a procedure renders it almost compulsory on all the defendants to be present either in person or by their pleaders, whilst the case is going on against the others in respect of matters in which they are not interested and, moreover it is harassing and inconvenient as regards the attendance of the witnesses of the several defendants as it renders it necessary for the witnesses of each to be present, and to be detained whilst the case of the others is being heard and determined For further illustrations, see notes to O 1, r 3 under the heads New Rule and Severally

Procedure in case of multifariousness that is, misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. Under the Code of 1882 where a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, the Judge to whom the plaint was presented might return it for amendment under s. 53. If the plaint having been returned for amendment was not amended, it might be rejected under sec. 54, cl. (d). If the defect was not noticed when the plaint was presented, but was brought to the notice of the Court at a later stage, the Court might, on the application of the plaintiff and on such terms as to costs as the Court thought proper, permit the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against those defendants who were not interested in the cause of action in respect of which he elected to proceed and grant leave to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (n) [(1) 23 r. 1] or allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint by striking out the names of those defendants and making consequential amendments. Where leave to amend was granted to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff did not amend within the time fixed by the Court, and the suit was dismissed, the appellate Court might confirm the decree if it found that the suit was multifarious (o). As to the procedure to be followed under the present Code, see notes to r. 7 below.

Where the defendants object to the frame of a suit on the ground that the suit is multifarious, but the objection is overruled, and a decree is passed for the plaintiff, and the defendants appeal from the decree on the ground that the suit ought to have been held to be multifarious, the appellate Court, even if it finds the suit to be multifarious, should not interfere with the decree, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case. This is the effect of s. 99, which declares inter alia that no decree shall be reversed or substantially varied in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action where such misjoinder does not affect the merits of the case. The words italicized are new. They did not occur in the corresponding s. 578 of the Code of 1882. They have been inserted in s. 99 to supersede the practice followed by the Courts under the old Code. Under that Code, where a decree was passed for the plaintiffs in a suit which was bad for multifariousness, the course adopted by the appellate Court was either to reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit (p), or to sustain the decree of the lower Court as against a particular set of defendants in respect of the causes of action in which they were jointly interested, and grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit against the other defendants with liberty to bring a fresh suit or suits against them (q). Such a course would not have been necessary had the Court held that a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action was an irregularity such as could be cured by s. 578. But it was held that the section did not apply to a misjoinder of this kind, and that even if it did apply, the misjoinder should be regarded as a defect that must affect the merits of the case within the meaning of that section (r). The insertion of the words 'on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action' in s. 99 makes it quite clear that the appellate Court should not interfere with a decree if the only objection to the decree is that of multifariousness, unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case.

Two or more defendants and one cause of action.—Every case of multifariousness presupposes more than one cause of action. Hence where there is only one cause of action, there can be no multifariousness.

Suits held not to be multifarious

1. A alleging that his brother B mortgaged his (A's) share in his father's property to C without his knowledge and consent, and that C was in possession as mortgagee, sues B and C for a declaration of title to his share of the property, and for possession of the share. The suit is not bad for multifariousness, for there are not two causes of action but only one, namely, the infringement of A's right of ownership by B. The mortgage and dispossession are both acts evidencing the infringement of A's right. Indur Kuar v Gur Prasad (1889) 11 All 33, Mazhar Ali v Sajjid Hussain (1902) 24 All 358, Kulra Jan v Ram Bahi (1908) 30 All 560.

2. A sells three properties by private contract to B. After the sale to B, all the three properties are attached in execution of a decree held by C against A, and they are sold in execution to D, E and F, respectively. A suit by B against A (the vendor) C (the decree holder) and D, E and F (execution purchasers) to set aside the execution sale is not bad for multifariousness. Haranul v Prosunno Chunder (1893) 9 Cal 763, Gunams v Ram Charan (1878) 1 All 555.

Note—In the Calcutta case cited above Garth, C.J., said: "The plaintiff has but one object, namely, to establish his private purchase as against the claim in execution, and the defendants, who contest his claim have but one defence, which is common to them all viz. that the plaintiff's purchase is invalid."

Unnecessary parties added as defendants—Where persons who are not necessary parties are joined as defendants, they should not be reckoned as parties in considering whether or not the suit is bad for multifariousness. A and B are two co-sharers of a village. A and B sell their respective shares to C by two separate deeds of sale. D, alleging that he is entitled to pre-empt the property, sues A, B and C for pre-emption. Here the suit is not bad for multifariousness for A and B being vendors they are not necessary parties to a suit for pre-emption. The suit is really against the vendee, C (s).

Suit for ejectment by real owner against holders under derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source—In a suit for possession all persons claiming by derivative titles from a trespasser as the common source may be joined as defendants. A obtains a lease of a piece of land from B, and enters into possession of the land. Subsequently B, ignoring the lease lets the land in separate portions and by separate leases to C, D and E. A sues B, C, D and E to eject them from the land. The suit is not bad for multifariousness. In this as in every action of ejectment, there is but one cause of action, namely, dispossession. It is immaterial that C, D and E claim under different titles. The title by which they claim forms no part of the plaintiff's cause of action (t). The case is different if the defendants do not all claim under the same trespasser, and the plaintiff does not allege any joint action or community of interest. Thus if A owns lands, and he is dispossessed of one portion by B, of another portion by C and of a third portion by D, A cannot bring one suit for possession against B, C and D (u).

Where two or more persons conspire together to commit a wrong or to commit a breach of several contracts entered into with them separately by the plaintiff, they may all be joined as defendants in one suit. The reason is that the plaintiff has in such a case but one cause of action against all the defendants namely, a conspiracy to do the act complained of. Thus if in ill (2) on p. 496 above, the seven salt manufacturers had conspired together not to deliver the salt to A, A could have brought one suit against them all. Similarly, if A and B conspire together to assault C, C may bring one suit against them for damages for assault (t).

Upon the same joint title where A obtained a decree against B for possession of certain lands in which 50 persons had distinct and separate tenures, and these 50 persons combined together to keep A out of possession and declined to pay the rent to him, it was held that A might join the 50 tenants as defendants in one suit for a declaration of his proprietary right to the lands (x). But separate suits could be brought if there is no collusion or combination between the tenants (x).

Two or more plaintiffs, two or more defendants, and two or more causes of action.—In such a case the plaintiffs must be jointly interested in the causes of action, and the defendants also must be jointly interested in the causes of action. The rule says:—Any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit. If the plaintiffs are not jointly interested in the causes of action, the suit will be bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action. If the plaintiffs are jointly interested in the several causes of action, but the defendants are not, the suit will be bad for multifariousness. And if neither the plaintiffs nor the defendants are jointly interested in the causes of action, the suit will be bad for a double misjoinder, namely, misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action and misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. Thus if I agree to sell and deliver salt to B, and C agrees to sell and deliver salt to D and B and D sue A and C for damages for breach of the contracts entered into with them respectively, the suit is bad for a double misjoinder. Neither plaintiff has any interest in the cause of action of the other, nor has either defendant any interest in the cause of action against the other. But if two contracts are entered into each between B and D of the one part and A and C of the other part, B and D may bring one suit against A and C on the two contracts.

Jurisdiction—Where a plaintiff combines several causes of action against the same defendant in one suit, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit depends on the value of the aggregate subject matters (y). See sub r (2).

Revision—It has been held by the High Court of Madras that a decision on the question whether a suit is bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action is subject to revision (z).

4. [S. 44, R. S. C., O. 18, r. 2.] No cause of action shall unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property except—

Provided that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put into possession of the mortgaged property

Old section This rule corresponds with s. c 44, C P C, 1882, except in the following particulars —

- 1 The rule contained in s. c 44 applied to (1) suits for the recovery of immovable property and to (2) suits to obtain a declaration of title to immovable property. The words, or to obtain a declaration of title to immovable property have been omitted in this rule, so that the operation of the present rule is confined only to those cases where a cause of action is sought to be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property
- 2 Clause (c) of the rule is new. See notes below, 'Claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action'
- 3 The proviso to the rule is also new. It is taken from R S C, O 18, r 2

Joinder of claims—This rule deals with what may be called joinder of claims. It declares that no claims other than those specified in the three exceptions shall be joined without the leave of the Court with a suit for the recovery of immovable property. The object of the rule is to prevent a joinder with a claim for the recovery of immovable property of claims of other and dissimilar character. If it is sought to join such claims with a claim for the recovery of immovable property, the leave of the Court must first be obtained and such leave may be granted if the two classes of claims can be conveniently disposed of in one suit. But no leave is necessary where claims are joined in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action [see cl (c)]

This rule does not apply to a joinder of several claims all for the recovery of immovable property. A plaintiff may therefore bring one suit for possession of several immovable properties without the leave of the Court. Thus if A owns 20 parcels of land, and he is dispossessed of all of them by B, A may without the leave of the Court, bring one suit against B for the recovery of all the plots. Here there is a joinder of 20 claims, but they are all claims for the recovery of immovable property (a). Similarly if A owns two plots of land in respect of which B is entitled to pre-emption, and A sells both the plots to C on the same day by two separate deeds of sale, B may claim pre-emption of both the plots in one suit without the leave of the Court (b). On the same principle, a mortgagee holding two mortgage deeds over separate properties from the same person may join both in one suit for sale or foreclosure, without the leave of the Court (c).

Suit for recovery of immovable property—An action to establish title to immovable property not claiming possession, is not an action for the recovery of immovable property within the meaning of this rule so as to require the leave of the Court for its joinder with another cause of action (d). Similarly, an action to restrain trespass on immovable property is not an action for the recovery of immovable property (e). A suit for a declaration that an alleged mortgage is not a mortgage and for possession, or in the alternative for an account and for redemption, does not require the leave of the Court under this rule. 'In either case he [plaintiff] asks for possession—possession at once if there is no valid mortgage, and possession upon payment of what may be found due if the mortgage is valid' (f). A suit for recovery of a mortgage debt with an

Claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action —

1. Joinder of claims for recovery both of movable and immovable property—This rule is to be read with r. 2 above which directs that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action (h). Hence there is nothing irregular in seeking to recover immovable and movable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, if the cause of action is the same in respect of both. In a suit for possession of an impartible estate a claim to recover the rents, royalties and other monies collected by the defendant since the death of the late Raja can be joined without leave of the Court as it is based on the same cause of action (i). Indeed if the plaintiff who is entitled to sue for the recovery of movable and immovable property in one suit, sues for the one only, he will be precluded from suing for the other by virtue of the provisions of r. 2 above. Thus where a Mahomedan died leaving two heirs A and B, and C purchased from A certain immovable property which had come to A's share and from B certain movable property which had come to B's share, and both the properties were at the time of purchase in the wrongful possession of D, it was held that not only could C sue D for the recovery of both the movable and immovable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, but that if he did not do so, he would be precluded from afterwards suing for the property omitted in the first suit (j). In the above case the cause of action in respect of both the properties was the same, namely, dispossession and refusal to deliver the property on demand. But if the cause of action is not the same, a claim for the recovery of movable property may not be joined with a claim for the recovery of immovable property without the leave of the Court (k). Thus a claim against an administrator for damages for malfeasance under secs 146 and 147 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, cannot be joined with a claim for recovery by the plaintiff of his share of immovable properties alleged to have been bought by the administrator with moneys belonging jointly to the plaintiff and the administrator (l). No leave is necessary in the case of a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased person though it may comprise both movable and immovable property (m).

2. A plaintiff may join, without the leave of the Court, in an action for the recovery of immovable property, other claims, such as a claim for a declaration of title, for an account of the rents and profits, for the appointment of a receiver, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from receiving the rents, provided such claims do not amount to a new cause of action, and are "mere machinery" (n).

Proviso to the Rule—The proviso to the rule enables a plaintiff to claim in one suit redemption or foreclosure and possession (o).

Leave of Court—Objection as to misjoinder.—Leave should be obtained before the plaint is filed (p). But the leave under this rule is not a condition precedent to jurisdiction, and it may therefore be granted on good cause shown even after the institution of the suit (q). Under sec. 44 of the Code of 1882 it was held that an objection that the plaintiff had joined together claims which, under that section could not be joined together

4 Provided that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put into possession of the mortgaged property

- 1 The rule contained in sec 44 applied to (1) suits for the recovery of immovable property, and to (2) suits to obtain a declaration of title to immovable property. The words, or to obtain a declaration of title to immovable property, have been omitted in this rule so that the operation of the present rule is confined only to those cases where a cause of action is sought to be joined with a suit for the recovery of immovable property.
- 2 Clause (c) of the rule is new. See notes below, 'Claims in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action'
- 3 The proviso to the rule is also new. It is taken from R S C, O 18 r 2

Joinder of claims—This rule deals with what may be called joinder of claims. It declares that no claims other than those specified in the three exceptions shall be joined without the leave of the Court with a suit for the recovery of immovable property. The object of the rule is to prevent a joinder with a claim for the recovery of immovable property of claims of other and dissimilar character. If it is sought to join such claims with a claim for the recovery of immovable property, the leave of the Court must first be obtained, and such leave may be granted if the two classes of claims can be conveniently disposed of in one suit. But no leave is necessary where claims are joined in which the relief sought is based on the same cause of action [see cl (c)]

This rule does not apply to a joinder of several claims all for the recovery of immovable property. A plaintiff may therefore bring one suit for possession of several immovable properties without the leave of the Court. Thus if A owns 29 parcels of land, and he is dispossessed of all of them by B, A may without the leave of the Court, bring one suit against B for the recovery of all the plots. Here there is a joinder of 29 claims, but they are all claims for the recovery of immovable property (a). Similarly if A owns two plots of land in respect of which B is entitled to pre-emption, and A sells both the plots to C on the same day by two separate deeds of sale, B may claim pre-emption of both the plots in one suit without the leave of the Court (b). On the same principle, a mortgagee holding two mortgage deeds over separate properties from the same person may join both in one suit for sale or foreclosure, without the leave of the Court (c).

Suit for recovery of immovable property—An action to establish title to immovable property not claiming possession, is not an action for the recovery of immovable property within the meaning of this rule so as to require the leave of the Court for its joinder with another cause of action (d). Similarly, an action to restrain trespass on immovable property is not an action for the recovery of immovable property (e). A suit for a declaration that an alleged mortgage is not a mortgage and for possession or in the alternative for an account and for redemption, does not require the leave of the Court under this rule. "In either case he [plaintiff] asks for possession—possession at once if there is no valid mortgage, and possession upon payment of what may be found due if the mortgage is valid (f). A suit for recovery of a mortgage debt, with an

1 Joinder of claims for recovery both of movable and immovable property—This rule is to be read with r 2 above which directs that every suit shall include the whole of the claim which the plaintiff is entitled to make in respect of the same cause of action (h). Hence there is nothing irregular in seeking to recover immovable and movable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, if the cause of action is the same in respect of both. In a suit for possession of an impartible estate a claim to recover the rents, royalties and other monies collected by the defendant since the death of the late Paja can be joined without leave of the Court as it is based on the same cause of action (i). Indeed if the plaintiff who is entitled to sue for the recovery of movable and immovable property in one suit sues for the one only, he will be precluded from suing for the other by virtue of the provisions of r 2 above. Thus where a Mahomedan died leaving two heirs A and B and C purchased from A certain immovable property which had come to A's share and from B certain movable property which had come to B's share, and both the properties were at the time of purchase in the wrongful possession of D, it was held that not only could C sue D for the recovery of both the movable and immovable property in one suit without the leave of the Court, but that if he did not do so, he would be precluded from afterwards suing for the property omitted in the first suit (j). In the above case the cause of action in respect of both the properties was the same, namely, dispossession and refusal to deliver the property on demand. But if the cause of action is not the same, a claim for the recovery of movable property may not be joined with a claim for the recovery of immovable property without the leave of the Court (k). Thus a claim against an administrator for damages for malfeasance under secs 146 and 147 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, cannot be joined with a claim for recovery by the plaintiff of his share of immovable properties alleged to have been bought by the administrator with moneys belonging jointly to the plaintiff and the administrator (l). No leave is necessary in the case of a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased person though it may comprise both movable and immovable property (m).

2 A plaintiff may join, without the leave of the Court, in an action for the recovery of immovable property, other claims, such as a claim for a declaration of title, for an account of the rents and profits, for the appointment of a receiver, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from receiving the rents, provided such claims do not amount to a new cause of action, and are mere machinery (n).

Leave of Court—Objection as to misjoinder—Leave should be obtained before the plaint is filed (p). But the leave under this rule is not a condition precedent to jurisdiction, and it may therefore be granted on good cause shown even after the institution of the suit (q). Under sec 44 of the Code of 1882 it was held that an objection that the plaintiff had joined together claims which, under that section could not be joined together without the leave of the Court should be taken in the Court of first instance and that if it was not so taken it should be regarded as waived, and it should not be entertained by the Court of appeal (r). Under this Code the objection should be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled, at or before such settlement if it is not so taken it will be deemed to have been waived (r 7 below). And even if the objection is taken in time and disallowed the appellate Court should not interfere with the decree in appeal merely on the ground that claims which ought not to be joined under this rule have been joined in one suit unless the misjoinder has affected the merits of the case (s 99 above).

Where a claim cannot be joined with a claim for the recovery of immovable property without the leave of the Court it is optional with the plaintiff either to obtain the leave and bring one suit in respect of both the claims or to bring separate suits in respect of each of them. The plaintiff is not confined to the first only of these two courses (s).

Counterclaim—This rule applies to a counterclaim as well as to an original action (t).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order under this rule rejecting an application for leave to join a claim with a claim for the recovery of immovable property (u). See s 99 above.

Revision—See notes to r 3. Revision

5. [S 44, R S C, O 18, r 5] No claim by or against an executor, administrator or heir, as such, shall be joined with claims by or against him personally, unless the last mentioned claims are alleged to arise with reference to the estate in respect of which the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued as executor, administrator or heir, or are such as he was entitled to, or liable for, jointly with the deceased person whom he represents.

Scope of the rule—This rule provides that no claim by a person in his representative character shall be joined in the same suit with claims by him personally nor shall claims against a person in his representative character be joined with claims against him personally—

- (1) unless the claims by or against him personally arise with reference to the estate which he represents or
- (2) unless he was entitled to or liable for those claims jointly with the deceased person whom he represents.

The object of the rule is to prevent an executor or administrator from intermingling the assets of his testator with his own monies (t).

Here the first claim is by C as executor and the second claim is by him personally as remainderman. The claim by

C personally does not arise with reference to the estate of A of which C is executor. The two claims therefore cannot be joined together in the same suit. Tredgar v J Jests [1914] 1 K B 283.

(1) A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. By his will A directs B to continue his business. The executor purchases for the purpose of A's business certain goods from C in his own name. C may in such a case sue B for the price of the goods and he may claim the price against B personally or, in the alternative, against him as executor. The reason is that the personal claim against B arises with reference to the estate of which he is the executor. But if B purchased certain goods from C as executor in the course of the administration of A's estate and other goods under a separate contract altogether in his own name and expressly for the purpose of his own business C cannot join both claims against B in one suit (w).

(c) A and B carry on business in partnership. A dies leaving a son S who obtains letters of administration to his father's estate. After A's death S and B continue the business in partnership with the old partnership assets. S, as administrator, sues B for the accounts of the partnership between his father A and B. He also claims dissolution of the partnership between him personally and B, and for his share in the partnership. The suit does not offend the provisions of this rule, as the personal claim of S in respect of the partnership between him and B arises with reference to the estate in respect of which he is suing as administrator. Arunachallam v Arunachallam (1922) 43 Mad L J 218 69 I C 966 (22) A M 430.

(cc) The suit is against A, as executor of I deceased for administration of the estate of I and also for an account of a partnership which had been carried on by I and A. The suit is not bad for misjoinder of causes of action for O 2 r 5 all was a claim against an executor, as such to be joined with a claim against him personally which is alleged to arise out of the estate in respect of which the executor is sued. Nithidas v Narayana Charya (1927) 51 Bom 890 104 I C 764 (27) A B 470.

(d) The second branch of the rule may be illustrated by the following case. A and B jointly purchase goods from C. A dies leaving a will of which B is the executor. Here A and B are jointly liable for the price of the goods. C may therefore sue B for the price in his (B's) personal as well as representative character. If A and B had purchased goods from C under separate contracts, C ought to bring two separate suits against B, one as A's executor to recover the price of goods sold to A and the other against B personally to recover the price of the goods sold to him (B).

Heir as such.—An heir may sue or be sued in his personal capacity or he may sue or be sued in his representative capacity [see notes to O 7 r 4]. The words "claim by an heir as such" in this rule refer to a claim by him in his representative capacity that is, as representing the estate of the deceased whose heir he claims to be (x).

1. A Mahomedan dies leaving a widow and daughters by a predeceased wife. The widow sues the daughters (1) for her dower, and (2) for her share of the inheritance in her husband's estate. It is contended on behalf of the daughters that the first claim is by the widow personally and that the second claim is by her as an heir and that the two claims cannot be joined in one suit. This contention is not sound for the second claim cannot be said to be by an heir as such. The claim is made by the widow not as representing her husband's estate and for the benefit of the estate but for her own and personal benefit. The two claims may therefore be joined in one suit. Ahmad ud din v Sikander (1896) 18 All 206.

6. [S. 45, 2nd para, R. S. C., O. 18, r. 1.] Where it appears to the Court that any causes of action joined in one suit cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, the Court may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient

Power of Court to order separate trials

This rule does not apply to cases of misjoinder, but to cases where several causes of action have been properly joined in one suit and the causes of action so joined cannot be conveniently tried together (z) See notes to r 3, 'One plaintiff, one defendant, and two or more causes of action'

7. [New] All objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity and, in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, unless the ground of objection has subsequently arisen, and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived.

Objections as to misjoinder

Objections as to misjoinder of causes of action—This rule is new. It places objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action on the same footing as objections on the ground of non joinder and misjoinder of parties [O 1, r 13]. Such objections must be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and any such objection not so taken is to be deemed to have been waived (a). Sec 99 provides that no decree shall be reversed or varied on account of any misjoinder of causes of action not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

Under the Code of 1882 when a plaint was presented which was bad for misjoinder of causes of action, it could be returned for amendment under s 53 at any time before the settlement of issues. If the plaint was not amended, it could be rejected under s 54, cl (d). These provisions have not been re-enacted in this Code. The Court, however, may under this Code allow an amendment under O 6, r 17, if the plaintiff applies for it. It may also direct the plaintiff under the same rule to amend the plaint on the application of the defendant or where there are two or more defendants on the application of any one of them. O. C. r. 18 deals with failure to amend after order.

As under the old Code so under this Code the Court may, where a suit is bad for misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action direct the plaintiffs to elect as to which of them shall proceed with the suit and where a suit is bad for misjoinder of defendants and causes of action direct them to elect against which defendants they will proceed and direct all necessary amendments to be made within a time to be prescribed by the Court. If the plaintiff does not comply with the order and amend the plaint, the Court may stay the action.

The misjoinder of causes of action referred to in this rule is not only the misjoinder contemplated by r. 3 above but also that contemplated by rr. 4 and 5 above.

Recognized Agents and Pleaders

1. [S. 36.] Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent or by a pleader appearing applying or acting on his behalf.

Appearance etc. may be in person by recognized agent or by pleader

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person.

Amendments—The words appearing applying or acting were substituted for the words duly appointed to act by the Code of Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act 1926.

Appearing applying or acting—These words as stated above have been substituted for the words duly appointed to act which occurred in the original rule. The changes made in rule 4 below provide for the various purposes for which a pleader may be appointed. The words duly appointed to act appear in the proviso to the amended r. 4 (5) below. See notes to r. 4 below, Pleaders appointed to act and pleaders engaged only to plead.

Appearance—If a recognized agent although able to do so does not conduct the case on behalf of his principal his mere presence in Court is not an appearance in the suit within the meaning of r. 6 or 8 of O. 9 (b). See O. 9 below and notes to O. 9 r. 9. Meaning of Appearance.

Appearance by party in person—A Court is not justified in ordering a party to appear in person under this rule except for very good reason. If one party desires the appearance of the opposite party for examination as a witness he should take out a witness summons under O. 16 (b1). See O. 5 r. 3.

Power of Court to order separate trials

This rule does not apply to cases of misjoinder, but to cases where several causes of action have been properly joined in one suit and the causes of action so joined cannot be conveniently tried together (z). See notes to r 3, "One plaintiff, one defendant, and two or more causes of action"

7. Objections as to misjoinder

Objections as to misjoinder of causes of action—This rule is new. It places objections on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action on the same footing as objections on the ground of non joinder and misjoinder of parties [O 1, r 13]. applies for it. It may also direct the plaintiff under the same rule to amend the plaint on the application of the defendant or, where there are two or more defendants, on the application of any one of them. O. C. r. 18 deals with failure to amend after order.

As under the old Code, so under this Code, the Court may, where a suit is laid for many under of plaintiffs and causes of action, direct the plaintiffs to elect as to which of them shall proceed with the suit, and where a suit is laid for many under of defendants and causes of action, direct them to elect against which defendants they will proceed, and direct all necessary amendments to be made within a time to be prescribed by the Court. If the plaintiff does not comply with the order and amend the plaint, the Court may stay the action.

The many under of causes of action referred to in this rule is not only the many under contemplated by r. 3 above, but also that contemplated by rr. 4 and 5 above.

Recognized Agents and Pleaders

1. [S. 36.] Any appearance, application or act in or to any Court, required or authorized by law to be made or done by a party in such Court, may, except where otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force, be made or done by the party in person, or by his recognized agent or by a pleader appearing, applying or acting on his behalf.

Provided that any such appearance shall, if the Court so directs, be made by the party in person.

Amendments—The words "appearing, applying or acting" were substituted for the words "duly appointed to act" by the Code of Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act, 1926.

Appearing, applying or acting—These words as stated above have been substituted for the words "duly appointed to act" which occurred in the original rule. The changes made in rule 4 below provide for the various purposes for which a pleader may be appointed. The words "duly appointed to act" appear in the proviso to the amended r. 4 (5) below. See notes to r. 4 below. Pleadings appointed to act and pleaders engaged only to plead.

Appearance—If a recognized agent although able to do so, does not conduct the case on behalf of his principal, his mere presence in Court is not an "appearance" in the suit within the meaning of r. 6 or 8 of O. 9 (b). See O. 9 below and notes to O. 9, r. 9. Meaning of Appearance

Appearance by party in person—A Court is not justified in ordering a party to appear in person under this rule except for very good reason. If one party desires the appearance of the opposite party for examination as a witness, he should take out a witness summons under O. 16 (b1). See O. 5 r. 3.

2. [S. 37.] The recognized agents of parties by whom such appearances, applications and acts may be made or done are—Recognized agents

- (a) persons holding powers-them to make and do cations and acts on behalf,
- (b) persons carrying on trade or business for and in the names of parties not resident within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court within which limits the appearance, application or act is made or done, in matters connected with such trade or business only, where no other agent is expressly authorized to make and do such appearances, applications and acts.

Clause (a)—The plaintiff who was of age presented a plaint by his mother acting as guardian and describing him as a minor. The plaintiff was himself present at the presentation and the Court believing that he had acted in good faith held that the defective presentation was an irregularity which did not affect the jurisdiction of the Court to accept the plaint (d)

Clause (a) has been amended by the Bombay High Court under s 122—See Appendix IV below, Rules made by the High Court of Bombay. Where a power of attorney, instead of being a general power as required by r 2 (a) as amended by the Bombay High Court, was a special power, it was held that it was a defect not affecting the merits of the case within the meaning of s 99, and that the decree should not be disturbed in appeal (e). If such a defect is discovered at the hearing, the plaintiff may sign the plaint himself and the suit will proceed (f) even though the period of limitation has expired (g).

Clause (b)—Where a plaint is signed and presented by the plaintiff's clerk who has no authority from the plaintiff to carry on business in the plaintiff's name the plaint cannot be said to have been signed by the plaintiff's "recognized agent." In such a case the Court may rightly dismiss the suit (k).

Service of process on recognized agent.—A person holding a power of attorney is not bound to accept service of summons. He may refuse to do so if he is not bound to act under the power (i)

4. [S. 39] (1) No pleader shall act for any person in any Court, unless he has been appointed for the purpose by such person by a document in writing signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorised by or under a power-of-attorney to make such appointment

(2) Every such appointment shall be filed in Court and shall be deemed to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court by a writing signed by the client or the pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court, or until the client or the pleader dies, or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client

(3) For the purposes of sub-rule (2) an application for review of judgment, an application under section 144 or section 152 of this Code, any appeal from any decree or order in the suit and any application or act for the purpose of obtaining copies of documents or return of documents produced or filed in the suit or of obtaining refund of moneys paid into the Court in connection with the suit shall be deemed to be proceedings in the suit

(4) The High Court may, by general order, direct that, where the person by whom a pleader is appointed is unable to write his name, his mark upon the document appointing the pleader shall be attested by such person and in such manner as may be specified by the order

(5) No pleader who has been engaged for the purpose of pleading only shall plead on behalf of any party, unless he has filed in Court a memorandum of appearance signed by himself and stating—

- (a) the names of the parties to the suit
- (b) the name of the party for whom he appears and
- (c) the name of the person by whom he is authorised to appear

4 Provided that nothing in this sub-rule shall apply to any pleader engaged to plead on behalf of any party by any other pleader who has been duly appointed to act in Court on behalf of such party.

Old rule—The present rule was substituted for the old rule 4 by the Code of Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act, 1926. The old rule was as follows—

“(1) The appointment of a pleader to make or do any appearance, application or act for any person shall be in writing, and shall be signed by such person or by his recognized agent or by some other person duly authorized by power of attorney to act in this behalf

(2) Every such appointment, when accepted by a pleader, shall be filed in Court, and shall be considered to be in force until determined with the leave of the Court, by a writing signed by the client or the pleader, as the case may be, and filed in Court, or until the client or the pleader dies or until all proceedings in the suit are ended so far as regards the client

(3) No advocate of any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act 1861, or of any Chief Court and no advocate of any other High Court who is a barrister shall be required to present any document empowering him to act

Amendment of the rule—This rule is as amended by the Code of Civil Procedure (Second Amendment) Act, 1926. Sub rules (1) and (2) correspond with the previous sub-rules (1) and (2) except that in sub rule (2) the words ‘when accepted by a pleader’ which occurred after the words ‘every such appointment,’ have been omitted. Under the old rule which required an acceptance, it was held that the acceptance need not be in writing, but that if the rules of the Court required a written acceptance the pleader would not be heard unless it was in writing (j). Sub rules (3) to (5) and the proviso are new Pleaders appointed to act and pleaders engaged only to plead—Under the rule as it stood originally every pleader had to be appointed by a writing signed by the party or by his recognized agent, etc. Under the present rule a distinction is drawn between—

(1) a pleader appointed to act in Court,

(2) a pleader engaged for the purpose of pleading only, and

(3) a pleader engaged to plead by a pleader duly appointed to act in Court

(1) As regards a pleader appointed to act in Court, it is provided by sub rule (1) that he cannot act for any person in any Court unless he is appointed by such person by a document in writing signed by such person or his recognized agent, etc. It is only if the appointment is made by a writing signed by the party, etc., that he can act, and it is only where he is so appointed that he can be said to be ‘duly appointed to act’ See the proviso to sub rule (5)

A pleader duly appointed by a person to act in Court on his behalf may appear, or make an application or otherwise act for him

(2) A pleader engaged for the purpose of pleading only has to file a memorandum of appearance signed by himself as provided by sub-rule (5) In a Calcutta case (o) the Court expressed the opinion that a pleader can only be engaged under sub-rule (5) without a document signed by the party when there is a personal appearance in the suit by the party himself or an appearance by a pleader appointed to act The actual decision however was based on the rules framed by the Calcutta High Court under cl. 77 of its Letters Patent

(3) A pleader engaged to plead on behalf of a party by any other pleader who has been duly appointed to act has not to file either a vakalatnamah or a memorandum

But no order granting leave should be made where the costs of the attorney have not been provided for unless it be a case where the attorney has discharged himself by his own misconduct (x) An appeal lies from an order granting leave under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (y)

* Until all proceedings in the suit are ended —Where a suit is dismissed for default, a pleader engaged to act in Court must not require a fresh power of attorney for the purpose of applying for the restoration of the case (z)

5. [S 40] Any process served on the pleader of any party or left at the office or ordinary residence of such pleader, and whether the same is for the personal appearance of the party or not, shall be presumed to be duly communicated and made known to the party whom the pleader represents, and, unless the Court otherwise directs, shall be as effectual for all purposes as if the same had been given to or served on the party in person

6. [S 41] (1) Besides the recognised agents described in rule 2 any person residing within the jurisdiction of the Court may be appointed an agent to accept service of process

(2) Such appointment may be special or general and shall be made by an instrument in writing signed by the principal, and such instrument or, if the appointment is general, a certified copy thereof shall be filed in Court

ORDER IV

Institution of Suits

1. [S 48] (1) Every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf

(2) Every plaint shall comply with the rules contained in Orders VI and VII, so far as they are applicable

Plaint presented to judge at club after office hours—There is nothing in this rule to show that the presentation of the plaint must be during office hours or must be to the officer appointed at the Court or at any particular place. A judge therefore may accept a plaint at his residence or at his club after office hours if presented to him at that place. In so doing the judge constitutes himself an officer to receive the plaint (a)

2. [S 58] The Court shall cause the particulars of every suit to be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose and called the register of civil suits. Such entries shall be numbered in every year according to the order in which the plants are admitted

ORDER V

Issue and Service of Summons

ISSUE OF SUMMONS

1. [S 64] (1) When a suit has been duly instituted a summons may be issued to the defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day to be therein specified

Provided that no such summons shall be issued when the defendant has appeared at the presentation of the plaint and admitted the plaintiff's claim

(2) A defendant to whom a summons has been issued under sub rule (1) may appear—

- (a) in person, or
- (b) by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit, or
- (c) by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions

(3) Every such summons shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court

Decree without issue of summons—The proviso to sub r (1) contemplates cases where a decree may be passed against a defendant without issue or service of summons upon him (b)

Bombay High Court Rule 96—Under this rule as soon as a suit is instituted the defendant, or any person representing himself to be an attorney of the defendant, is entitled to be furnished with a copy of the plaint and exhibits annexed thereto even before he has filed an appearance in Court (c)

2. [S. 65.] Every summons shall be accompanied by a copy of the plaint or, if so permitted, by a concise statement.

Copy or statement annexed to summons

3. [S. 66.] (1) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the defendant, the summons shall order him to appear in person in Court on the day therein specified.

Court may order defendant or plaintiff to appear in person

(2) Where the Court sees reason to require the personal appearance of the plaintiff on the same day, it shall make an order for such appearance.

Consequence of non attendance—As to the consequence of non attendance in person, see O 9, r 12

Non attendance of party on adjourned date—Where an order is made under this rule for the personal appearance of a party on a specified day, he is not bound to appear personally on any adjourned date unless a fresh order is made requiring his appearance on that date. Where no fresh order is made, and the Court disposes of the suit under O 9, r 12, the order is one made without jurisdiction (d)

Purdanashin—As to whether a purdanashin lady can be compelled to attend in Court, see note "Appearance in Court" under s 132

4. [S. 67.] No party shall be ordered to appear in person unless he resides—

No party to be ordered to appear in person unless resident within certain limits

(a) within the local limits of the Court's ordinary original jurisdiction, or

(b) without such limits but at a place less than fifty or (where there is railway or steamer communication or other established public conveyance for five-sixths of the distance between the place where he resides and the place where the Court is situate), less than two hundred miles distance from the court-house

(d) Sundar Nath v Mallu (1917) 39 All. 476, 39 I.C. 634

5. [S. 68.] The Court shall determine, at the time of issuing the summons, whether it shall be for the settlement of issues only, or for the final disposal of the suit; and the summons shall contain a direction accordingly:

Provided that, in every suit heard by a Court of Small Causes, the summons shall be for the final disposal of the suit.

Summons for final disposal—As a general rule summonses for final disposal of suits should be issued only in simple cases (c)

6. [S. 69] The day for the appearance of the defendant shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the defendant and the time necessary for the service of the summons; and the day shall be so fixed as to allow the defendant sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on such day.

7. [S. 70.] The summons to appear and answer shall order the defendant to produce all documents in his possession or power upon which he intends to rely in support of his case

8. [S. 71.] Where the summons is for the final disposal of the suit, it shall also direct the defendant to produce, on the day fixed for his appearance, all witnesses upon whose evidence he intends to rely in support of his case.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS

9. [S. 72] (1) Where the defendant resides within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is instituted, or has an agent within that jurisdiction who is to accept the service of the summons, the summons, unless the Court otherwise directs, be delivered to the proper officer to be served by him or his subordinates.

(c) Tuljaram v. Sutaram (1914) 38 Bom 377, 380, 21 IL 40

(2) The proper officer may be an officer of a Court other than that in which the suit is instituted, and, where he is such an officer, the summons may be sent to him by post or in such other manner as the Court may direct

10. [S 73.] Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf and sealed with the seal of the Court

Mode of service
Object of service—The object of the service of a summons in whatever way it may be effected (other than substituted service to which other considerations apply) is that the defendant may be informed of the institution of the suit in due time before the date fixed for the hearing (f) See notes to r 17 below, Service of summons

11. [S 74] Save as otherwise prescribed, where there are more defendants than one, service of the summons shall be made on each defendant

Service on several defendants

Partners—As to service on partners see O 30 r 3

12. [S 75] Wherever it is practicable, service shall be made on the defendant in person, unless he has an agent empowered to accept service, in which case service on such agent shall be sufficient

Service to be on defendant in person when practicable or on his agent

13. [S 76] (1) In a suit relating to any business or work against a person who does not reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court from which the summons is issued, service on any manager or agent, who, at the time of service, personally carries on such business or work for such person within such limits, shall be deemed good service

Service on agent by whom defendant carries on business

(2) For the purpose of this rule the master of a ship shall be deemed to be the agent of the owner or charterer

Manager or agent personally carrying on business—The manager or agent contemplated by this rule is one who has an initiative and independent discretion albeit subject possibly to general orders for his guidance. A mere servant employed to carry out orders or to execute a particular commission or a factor or commission agent who is not identified with the firm for which he acts is not such an agent (g)

14. [S. 77.] Where in a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to, immovable property, service cannot be made on the defendant in person, and the defendant has no agent empowered to accept the service, it may be made on any agent of the defendant in charge of the property.

15. [S. 78.] Where in any suit the defendant cannot be found and has no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, service may be made on any adult male member of the family of the defendant who is residing with him.

Explanation—A servant is not a member of the family within the meaning of this rule.

Service on adult male member—Where no attempt is made to find the defendant, and the summons is served on his son, the summons cannot be said to be duly served. The inquiry as to the whereabouts of the defendant must not be perfunctory (h).

16. [S. 79.] Where the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, he shall require the signature of the person to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons.

Refusal to sign acknowledgment—A mere refusal to sign an acknowledgment of service is not an offence under s c 173 or sec 180 of the Indian Penal Code (i).

17. [S. 86.] Where the defendant or his agent or such other person as aforesaid refuses to sign the acknowledgment, or where the serving officer, after using all due and reasonable diligence, cannot find the defendant, and there is no agent empowered to accept service of the summons on his behalf, nor any other person on whom service can be made, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and shall then return

(h) Bharam Chand v. Kanak (1911) 26 C. W. N. 359 65 I. C. 991 (1) A. C. 638. (i) Queen Empress v. Arundel (1893) 20 Cal. 352.

7 the original to the Court from which it was issued, with a report endorsed thereon or annexed thereto stating that he has so affixed the copy, the circumstances under which he did so, and the name and address of the person (if any) by whom the house was identified and in whose presence the copy was affixed

The old section.—This section corresponds with sec 80 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

- 1 The words "after using all due and reasonable diligence" are new They give effect to the decisions cited in the notes below under the head "After using all due and reasonable diligence"
- 2 The words "or carries on business or personally works for gain" have been added to remove a doubt which arose under the old section as to whether it was good service to affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the defendant's place of business (j)
- 3 The words "and the name and address, etc., at the end of the rule are also new They merely give effect to the existing practice

Service of summons.—The Code prescribes three modes of service of summons upon a defendant They are as follows —

- 1 In the first case, the summons is served by delivering a copy thereof to the defendant personally, or to an agent or other person on his behalf, and by obtaining the signature of the person to whom the copy is delivered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons See rr 10—16 and r 18
- 2 In the second case, that is, cases mentioned in r 17, service is effected without an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, and it is for the Court to declare after examination of the serving officer that the summons has been duly served When this mode of service is adopted, the provisions of r 19 have to be complied with and the Court concerned has to decide whether the summons has or has not been duly served See rr 17 and 19
- 3 In the third case, that is, cases mentioned in r 20, service is effected after obtaining an order of the Court by affixing a copy of the summons in some conspicuous place in the Court house and also upon some conspicuous part of the house (if any) in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit Service so effected is as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally This is called substituted service See r 20 and the marginal note thereto (k)

Refuses to sign the acknowledgment.—Where a defendant refuses to sign the acknowledgment, the provisions of the present rule must be complied with, namely, the serving officer shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door of the defendant's house, otherwise the summons cannot be said to have been duly served (l)

(j) Chandrasappa v Mainaba (1870) 7 B H C, A C 138

(k) Maruti v Fulhu (1891) 16 Bom 117 (notice of appeal), Dewan Chand v Parbati (1918) Punj Rec no 90 p 327 481 C 28

Thus if the defendant refuses to sign the acknowledgment it is not sufficient to leave a copy of the summons on a table in his house: the copy must be affixed on the outer door of the house (l). In a recent Patna case the Court expressed the opinion that where a copy of the summons is delivered to the defendant under r 10 above and the defendant thinks it but refuses to sign an acknowledgment the provisions of this rule do not apply and that it is not necessary to affix a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant's house: the reason given being that in such a case the serving officer would have no other copy of the summons to be affixed on the outer door: and that the summons must be deemed to be duly served though no copy is so affixed (m). But it has been held by the same High Court that if the copy of the summons is not returned by the defendant the provisions of this rule must be strictly complied with (n).

After using all due and reasonable diligence.—The present rule enjoins that in cases where the defendant cannot be found the mode of service prescribed by this rule should not be resorted to until the serving officer has used all due and reasonable diligence to find the defendant and the defendant could not be found. To justify such service it must be shown that proper efforts were made to find the defendant, e.g., that the serving officer went to the place or places and at the times where and when it was reasonable to expect to find him (o). Thus if a serving officer goes to a defendant's house but does not find him there and the defendant's adult son who is in the house refuses to accept service on behalf of the father these facts by themselves do not justify the officer in resorting to the mode of service prescribed by this rule. He must before effecting such service inquire of the son as to where the defendant is and otherwise exercise due and reasonable diligence in finding the defendant (p). When a defendant is temporarily absent from home and is not represented in his house by an agent or male member of his family the summons should be again taken to the defendant's house to be served upon him at the time when enquiries make it clear that he is likely to be found at home (q). A temporary absence of the defendant does not justify the serving officer in affixing a copy of the summons on the door of the defendant's house (r) especially if the serving officer knows where the absent defendant is (s). See notes above under the head The old section.

Cannot find the defendant.—These words are wide enough to cover the case of a serving officer not being able to obtain access to a pardana-shin lady or to deliver or to tender a copy of the summons to her (t). See notes to r 10 below and notes also to O 9 r 13. Grounds on which ex parte decree may be set aside.

Proof of service.—If the plaintiff appears at the hearing of the suit but the defendant does not appear at the hearing the question whether the summons was duly served arises directly for the determination of the Court for the Court cannot proceed ex parte unless it is proved that the summons was duly served [O 9 r 6 (1)]. Where a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant and the defendant satisfies the Court which passed the decree that the summons was not duly served upon him the Court may set aside the decree [O 9 r 13].

18. [S 81] The serving officer shall, in all cases in which the summons has been served under rule 16, endorse or annex, or cause to be endorsed or annexed, on or to the original summons, a return stating the time when and the manner in which the summons was served, and the name and address of the person (if any) identifying the person served and witnessing the delivery or tender of the summons

Endorsement of time and manner of service

Form of return—See Appendix B to Schedule I Form No 11 The said Form has been altered in certain respects by the Chief Court of the Punjab see Appendix VII below

- 19 [S 82, 1st para] Where a summons is returned under rule 17, the Court shall, if the return under that rule has not been verified by the affidavit of the serving officer, and may, if it has been so verified, examine the serving officer on oath, or cause him to be so examined by another Court touching his proceedings and may make such further inquiry in the matter as it thinks fit, and shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit

Examination of serving officer

Declare that the summons has been duly served—The declaration that the summons has been duly served is an imperative requisition and the Madras High Court has held that in the absence of such a declaration an ex parte order in execution proceedings cannot operate as constructive res judicata (i) i.e., that Explanation IV, section 11 will not apply See p 89 above

Or order such service as it thinks fit—These words empower the Court, even when there has been a technical compliance with the provisions of r 17, to order service in another mode if the Court thinks fit to do so in the interests of justice Thus where the person to be served is a purdanashin lady and the serving officer not being able to obtain access to her fixes a copy of the summons on the outer door of her dwelling house as provided by r 17, yet although the mode of service is not improper the Court may under this rule direct the service of summons by means of notice by registered post so that the cover may in due course reach the lady herself (v)

20. [S 82, 2nd para, Ss 83, 84] (1) Where the Court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that the defendant is keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding service or that for any other reason the summons cannot be served in the ordinary way, the Court shall order the summons to be served by affixing a copy thereof in some conspicuous place in the Court house, and also upon some conspicuous part of the house [if any] in which the defendant is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, or in such other manner as the Court thinks fit.

(2) Service substituted by order of the Court shall be as effectual as if it had been made on the defendant personally.

(3) Where service is substituted by order of the Court, the Court shall fix such time for the appearance of the defendant as the case may require.

"Where the Court is satisfied"—The advisability of effecting service by substituted service is a matter primarily for the trial Court. The Appellate Court has no power to consider whether the order for substituted service was made on sufficient grounds or not. It has only to see whether the order was made according to law and whether the trial Court was satisfied that the conditions mentioned in this rule were fulfilled (c).

"For any other reason."—Where by the custom in India a defendant (being a Hindu woman of rank) could not be personally served with summons, the Judicial Committee allowed service to be substituted on her Dewan [chief servant] (r).

Shall be as effectual—These words do not necessarily mean that the summons has been duly served, but only that such service is as effectual as personal service for the purpose of going on with the proceedings in Court, and in spite of such service it is open to the defendant to shew that he had no knowledge of the claim (y). But substituted service may be due service particularly if the defendant has been evading service (z).

21. [S. 85, 1st para.] A summons may be sent by the Court by which it is issued, whether with- in or without the province, either by one of its officers or by post to any Court (not being the High Court) having jurisdiction in the place where the defendant resides.

Service by registered post.—This rule is to be read with s-c. 27 of the General Clauses Act 10 of 1897 by which it is provided that when any document is required by an Act passed after 11th March 1897 to be served by post, and the expression used is "send" [which is the expression used in the present rule], then, 'unless a different intention appears, [and no such intention appears in the present rule] the service shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, pre paying and posting by registered post, a letter containing the document, and, unless the contrary is proved to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post.'

Reading the present rule with the said sec 27, the High Court of Bombay held in a case in which it appeared that the postal packet enclosing the summons was properly addressed to the defendant, and was registered duly stamped and posted, but the packet was returned endorsed "refused," that the Court was entitled to draw the inference indicated in the said sec 27 and to hold that there was sufficient service (a) In the earlier cases which arose under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882, where a postal packet was returned endorsed "refused," it was held that the service was not sufficient and that further evidence was necessary before the Court could act upon such endorsement (b) As to these cases, however, it is to be noted that they were all decided without any reference to sec 27 of the General Clauses Act as all except one were decided before that Act came into force, and the one decided after that Act came into force was not governed by the provisions of sec 27, as that section did not apply to the Code of 1882 which was an enactment passed before 11th March 1897, the date on which the General Clauses Act came into force

The High Court of Bombay has recently held that the Court must allow the defendant a retrial if, after a decree has been passed against him on evidence that the summons was served by registered post and returned refused he appears and denies receipt of the packet Macleod C J, said Service by registered post is at any time a poor substitute for personal service which is directed by the Court It is allowed to litigants as a matter of convenience (c)

23. [S 85, 2nd para] The Court to which a summons is sent under rule 21 or rule 22 shall, upon receipt thereof, proceed as if it had been issued by such Court and shall then return the summons to the Court of issue, together with the record (if any) of its proceedings with regard thereto

Duty of Court to which summons is sent

Form of Return—See Schedule I Appendix B Form No 10 and note the alterations made in the said Form by the High Court of Bombay in exercise of the powers conferred by sec 122 above

Sufficiency of service—Where a summons has been transmitted by one Court to another for service by the latter, and the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the service has been duly effected the presumption will be that the service was sufficient unless the return itself shows the insufficiency (d) Similarly when the return made by the Court serving the summons states that the summons has not been duly served, and the summons is returned with that declaration to the Court from which it was issued, the presumption is that the service was not sufficient, and the Court from which the summons was issued should act upon that presumption unless there is good and strong evidence which comes or is brought to its notice showing that the summons was duly served (e). According to the Calcutta High Court, however, the Court issuing the summons must not proceed upon any presumption either way, but must determine for itself whether the service was sufficient or not, the reason given being that the present rule does not require the Court to which the summons is sent for service to make any return touching the sufficiency of service (f). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Allahabad on grounds of expediency, and further, on the ground that it ignores the last sentence of rule 19 above, which applies not only to the Court issuing the summons, but also to the Court to which it is sent for service (g).

Service by post—In the case of a defendant living abroad substituted service is inappropriate. When a copy of a notice was ordered to be affixed to the Court house in the 24 Pargannas by way of giving information to a party in South Africa, Rankin, C.J., said that substituted service should not be used in a way which is unbusinesslike and ridiculous (h).

(2) Where from any cause service is impossible, the summons shall be returned to the Court with a full statement of such cause and of the steps taken to procure service, and such statement shall be deemed to be evidence of non-service.

30. [Ss 91, 92.] (1) The Court may, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, substitute for a summons a letter signed by the Judge or such officer as he may appoint in this behalf, where the defendant is, in the opinion of the Court, of a rank entitling him to such mark of consideration

(2) A letter substituted under sub rule (1) shall contain all the particulars required to be stated in a summons and, subject to the provisions of sub rule (3), shall be treated in all respects as a summons

(3) A letter so substituted may be sent to the defendant by post or by a special messenger selected by the Court, or in any other manner which the Court thinks fit, and, where the defendant has an agent empowered to accept service, the letter may be delivered or sent to such agent

ORDER VI.

Pleadings generally

1. [New Cf. Jud. Act 1873, S 100] O. 6
Pleading "Pleading" shall mean plaint or written statement

Introduction of English rules of pleadings—The object of this Order is to introduce into British India the leading rules of pleadings followed in England. The whole of this Order, excepting rr 14 and 15 is new. The rules comprised in this Order, except rr 14 and 15 have been taken most of them from Order 19 and the rest from Order 28 of the English Rules made under the Judicature Acts. In one respect, however, the rigour of the English Rules has been relaxed by providing that the Court may, notwithstanding the absence of any specific denial, require any fact to be proved by the party who alleges it (see O 8, r 5)

Function of pleadings — The whole object of pleadings is to bring the parties to an issue, and the meaning of the rules (relating to pleadings) was to prevent the issue being enlarged, which would prevent either party from knowing when the cause came on for trial what the real point to be discussed and decided was. In fact, the whole meaning of the system is to narrow the parties to definite issues, and thereby to diminish expense and delay especially as regards the amount of testimony required on either side at the hearing (j). To attain this end the plaintiff should state in his plaint all the facts which constitute his cause of action. It is not sufficient to allege what may be a ground of action if something else be added which is not stated in the plaint. 'Upon all sound principles of pleading it is necessary to allege what must, and not what may, be a cause of action (k). The defendant should also state in his written statement the material facts on which he relies for his defence. When the result of the pleading on both sides is that a material fact is affirmed on the one side and denied on the other, the question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of fact. When one party answers his opponent's pleading by stating an objection in point of law, the legal question thus raised between the parties is called an issue of law. See O 14 r 1

A plaintiff's pleading is his plaint (O 7). A defendant's pleading is his written statement (O 8). In some cases a plaintiff who has filed his plaint may, with the leave of the Court, file a written statement, or the Court may require him to file a written statement. In such cases the written statement forms part of the plaintiff's pleadings. Again there are cases in which a defendant who has filed his written statement may, with the leave of the Court, file an additional written statement or the Court may require him to do so. In such cases the additional written statement forms part of the defendant's pleadings. The plaintiff's written statement and the defendant's additional written statement are called subsequent pleadings. See O 8, r 9

2. [New R. S. C. O 19, r 4] Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or

Pleading to state material facts and not evidence defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively. Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures

General rules of pleading — O 6 deals with Pleadings in general. O 7 deals with Plaints and O 8 with Written Statements. The following is a summary of the rules comprised in this order —

- 1 State your whole case in your pleading in other words set forth in your pleading all material facts on which you rely for your claim or defence (r 2)
- 2 State facts and not law (r 2). If any matter of law is set out in your opponent's pleading do not plead to it (l)
- 3 State the material facts on which you rely, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved (rr 2 10 11, 12)

(j) Per Jessel M R in Thorp v Holborn (1876) 3 Ch D 637 639

(k) West London & Central Golf Mining Co v Rex

[1903] 2 K B 391 399

(l) Per Lordson v Major of Oxford (1793) 2 H B 18.

- 4 State material facts only, omit immaterial and unnecessary facts. Do not anticipate your opponent's pleading and plead to any matter which is not alleged against you (r. 2)
- 5 State the facts of your case concisely, but with precision (r. 2)
- 6 It is not necessary to allege the performance of any condition precedent, an averment of performance is now implied in every pleading (r. 6)
- 7 It is not necessary to set out the whole or any part of a document, unless the precise words thereof are necessary. It is sufficient to state the effect of the document as briefly as possible (r. 9)
- 8 It is not necessary to allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in your favour, or as to which the burden of proof lies upon your opponent (r. 13)

Fundamental rule—Rule 2 of this Order is the fundamental rule of pleadings. When analysed, it will be found to require four things—

- I Every pleading must state facts and not law
- II It must state material facts, and material facts only
- III It must state only the facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved
- IV It must state such facts in a concise form

The main object, or one of the main objects, of this rule is that the one party may know what are the facts on which the other party relies in order that he may be prepared to meet the case (m)

I Every pleading must state facts and not law—A pleading must not set forth a public statute, for the Court is bound to take judicial notice of it (n). Nor should parties plead conclusions of law or of mixed law and fact—it is for the Court to declare the law arising upon the facts before it. The parties should only state the facts on which they rely for their claim or defence. If Hindu sons are sued for a debt incurred by their deceased father and late manager of the joint family it is not necessary to formulate in the plaint the Hindu law as to the pious obligation of Hindu sons to pay a father's debt that is not of an immoral character (nl).

It is bad pleading to allege merely that a right or a duty exists, the facts must be set out which give rise to the right or create the duty. Thus in a suit for damages for negligence it is not enough for the plaintiff to state that 'the defendant has been guilty of negligence,' without showing in what respect he was negligent and how he became bound to use care to prevent injury to others. Negligence means a breach of duty to take due care and caution. The plaint, therefore, ought to state facts upon which the supposed duty is founded, and the duty to the plaintiff with the breach of which the defendant is charged (o). Similarly, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to aver that the defendant did the act complained of wrongfully, unlawfully and improperly or 'without any justification therefore or right so to do. He must state the facts upon which he proposes to rely as showing that the act was done wrongfully or unlawfully. 'Those epithets, under the present system of pleading, are useless and redundant. They add nothing whatever to the plaintiff's case. They are merely now epithets of abuse. They were formerly in declarations essential because under that form of pleading legal rights were stated for facts, but facts alone are stated now (p). Upon like principles, it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to say, 'Under and by virtue of a certain deed I am entitled, etc. He must state the facts which go to show his title (q). In like manner, him, would constitute it a valid donatio mortis causa : it is not sufficient to say that the deceased "two days before his death made a good and valid donatio mortis causa to the plaintiff" of the property (r) Where a plaintiff claims by inheritance, it is not sufficient to say, "I am the heir at law." He must state the particulars showing the links of relationship on which he relies as constituting him such heir (s) In a pre-emption suit it is not enough to plead a right of pre-emption, but the pleading must show the basis of the right (s1)

The same principles apply to a defendant's pleading A defendant may not in his written statement say merely, "I am not liable" He must allege facts which show that he is not liable Thus a defendant, who claims privilege in a suit for defamation, must not plead merely that "he published the words on a privileged occasion" He must state the facts which give rise to the privilege (t)

II. Every pleading must state material facts and material facts only.—To begin with, a party should set out in his pleading all material facts on which he relies for his claim or defence "What particulars are to be stated must depend on the facts of each case But... it is absolutely essential that the pleading, not to be embarrassing to the defendant, should state those facts which will put the defendants on their guard and tell them what they have to meet when the case comes on for trial" (u) If a party omits to plead a material fact, he will not be allowed to give evidence of that fact at the trial, unless the Court gives him leave to amend his pleadings under r 17 below "If parties were held strictly to their pleadings under the present system, they ought not to be allowed to prove at the trial, as a fact on which they would have to rely in order to support their case, any fact which is not stated in the pleadings" (v) But only facts that are material should be stated, for "the practice of Courts is to consider and deal with the legal results of the pleaded facts although the particular legal result is not stated in the pleading (w)

Matters affecting damages—The present rule provides that every pleading should contain, and contain only, material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be That is to say, a plaint should contain only those material facts on which the plaintiff relies for his claim and a written statement should contain only those material facts on which the defendant relies for his defence Does this mean that the plaint should be confined to those facts only which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action, and that the written statement should be confined to those facts only which constitute the defendant's defence? It has been held as regards a plaintiff's claim, that the words "material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim," are not confined to those facts which are essential to the plaintiff's cause of action but include any fact which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing Thus facts which merely tend to increase the amount of damages are not essential to the cause of action, but they certainly are facts which the plaintiff is entitled to prove at the hearing as matters in aggravation of damages Such facts are therefore "material" facts within the meaning of this rule and a plaintiff has to state them in his plaint (x) As observed by Brett, L J, in Philipp's v. Philipp's (y), the words of the rule are not "the facts which will be necessary to support the cause of action": they are, "the material facts on which the party relies for his claim" In Millington v. Loring (z), which was a suit for damages for breach of a contract to marry, the plaintiff, after alleging the promise to marry in the first paragraph and the breach thereof in the second, went on to allege in the third paragraph that "the know her, where v the defendant infected her with a venereal disease.' Analysing the above pleadings, it may be stated that the first and second paragraphs stated facts that were essential to the cause of action, viz., facts relating to the making of the contract and facts relating to the breach of the contract, being facts which constitute the cause of action in a suit for damages for the breach of a contract. But the facts stated in the third paragraph were not essential to the cause of action. Nevertheless they were material facts within the meaning of the rule, for the plaintiff was entitled to prove them as matters in aggravation of damages, and it was held that they were properly set forth in the pleadings. Turning now to the defence in a suit for damages, the rule laid down in Wood v Durham (a) is, that a defendant is not in general entitled to plead in his defence matters in mitigation of damages. The ground of the decision in that case is that such matters do not constitute any defence to an action, and a defendant can under the rule allege only those material facts on which he relies for his defence. As to Millington v. Loring, it was said that it was a case where 'there was a good cause of action of a double character stated. In that case there were damages claimed by reason of an alleged breach of promise of marriage, but there was far more, because part of the cause of action no doubt was that by reason of that the plaintiff had been ill through the seduction by the defendant, who had ruined her character, and has infected her with a bad disease.' One may be permitted to doubt whether illness through seduction and infection with disease formed part of the cause of action. Moreover, the decision in Millington v Loring has been followed in a case later than Wood v Durham, where it could not be said that there was a cause of action of a double character (b). However this may be, it is to be remarked that the decision in Wood v Durham turned not only on the construction of the corresponding English rule, but on O 21, r 4, which provides in express terms that 'no denial or defence shall be necessary as to damages claimed or their amount but they shall be deemed to be put in issue in all cases unless expressly admitted. O 21, r 4 of the English rules has not been reproduced in the Code. Therefore just as the plaintiff may plead any matter in aggravation of damages as to which he could give evidence at the trial so the defendant may plead any matter in mitigation of damages as to which he could give evidence at the trial. See notes to O 8, r 3, Except damages.

Facts not yet material to a case—The pleadings should only contain such facts as are material at the present stage of the suit. It is not proper to anticipate the answer of the adversary. To do so is 'like leaping before one comes to the stile' (c). 'It is no part of the statement of claim ['plaint' in our pleadings] to anticipate the defence, and to state what the plaintiff would have to say in answer to it. That would be a return to the old inconvenient system of pleading in Chancery which ought certainly not to be encouraged, when the plaintiff used to allege in his bill imaginary defences of the defendant and make charges in reply to them' (d). Thus it is unnecessary in a suit upon a bond to allege that the defendant was of full age when he executed the bond. For if he were a minor when he executed the bond, it is for him to prove it: it need not be denied by anticipation (e). Similarly a defendant should not plead to any matter which is not alleged against him. Thus if a defendant is sued for slander, the only way to meet the plaintiff's claim is to plead (1) that the words in question were not spoken and published, or (2) that they were spoken and published and are true, or (3) that they were spoken and published and are privileged. If, instead of so doing, he pleads that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint, but that he said something else and that the something else which he said was true and spoken on a privileged occasion, the defence will be struck out under r 16 below as one embarrassing the fair trial of the suit (f).

III Every pleading must state facts, and not the evidence by which they are to be proved—Every pleading must contain a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved. "It is an elementary rule in pleading, that, when a state of facts is relied on, it is enough to allege it simply, without setting out the subordinate facts which are the means of producing it, or the evidence sustaining the allegation" (g) No doubt, evidence also consists of facts, but there is a convenient nomenclature to distinguish the two. The material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence are called facta probanda. The evidence or the facts by means of which they are to be proved are called facta probantia. Every pleading should contain only facta probanda, and not facta probantia. The distinction is taken in the very rule itself, between the facts on which the party relies and the evidence to prove those facts. Erle, C.J., expressed it in this way. He said there were facts that might be called the allegata probanda, the facts which ought to be proved, and they were different from the evidence which was adduced to prove those facts. And it was upon that expression of opinion of Erle, C.J., that rule 4 [of the English rules, corresponding to the present rule] was drawn. The facts which ought to be stated are the material facts on which the party pleading relies (A). Thus where a suit is brought against an insurance Company on a policy on the life of A, and one of the conditions of the policy is that it should be void if the insured committed suicide, the Company should only plead, if the defence is that A committed suicide, that A died by his own hand. It is wrong to state in the written statement that A had been melancholy for weeks, that he bought a pistol and shot himself with it. These facts are merely evidence (facta probantia) facts by means of which the factum probandum, namely, suicide, is to be proved (i). Similarly, it is wrong to set out in the pleading admissions made by the opponent, for admissions are only evidence (j). Thus where a plaintiff alleged that certain windows of his were ancient, and the defendant stated in his defence that the plaintiff had in a former action admitted that they were not ancient, the allegation was struck out (k). Upon the same principle, "where the facts in a pedigree are facts to be relied upon as facts to establish the right or title, they must be set out, but where the pedigree is the means of proving the facts relied on as facts by which the right or title is to be established, then the pedigree is evidence that need not be set out" (l).

Rules 10, 11 and 12 of this Order are special applications of the general principle laid down in this rule.

IV Every pleading must state material facts in a concise form—To attain this end, the forms in Appendix A when applicable, and where they are not applicable, forms of the like character, as nearly as may be, should be used for all pleadings (see r 3 below). At the same time the rules given above under the head 'General rules of pleading,' should be borne in mind. But the pleader should not sacrifice precision to conciseness. For, as observed by Kay, J., 'although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise' (m). In fact, rule 4 expressly required that in all cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms [in Appendix A] particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleadings. As to further information on this subject of "certainty" in pleadings, see notes to rr 4 5 below.

Alternative and inconsistent allegations.—The rule now under consideration does not prohibit inconsistent pleadings. A person may rely upon one set of facts if he can succeed in proving them, and he may rely upon another set of facts if he can succeed in proving them, and it appears to me to be far to stretch a construction of this Order to say that he must make plain his position on which part of the case, when perhaps he is very much in the dark. (n) The rules as to joinder of defendants (O 1 r 3) and causes of action (O 2 r 3) as also the rules as to the reliefs that may be claimed by a plaintiff (O 3 r 5) clearly show that either party may allege in his pleadings two or more inconsistent sets of material facts and claim relief thereunder in the alternative. (o) A plaintiff may rely upon several different rights although they may be inconsistent. (p) But then, as to each of those he ought to set out the facts upon which he will have to rely as facts to maintain that right. (q) So too a defendant may by his written statement raise as many distinct and separate and therefore inconsistent defences as he may think proper. (r) But this is subject to the proviso contained in rule 1C below which provides that the Court may strike out any matter in a plaintiff's written statement which may embarrass the fair trial of the suit. (s) and if there is no reasonable excuse for the inconsistent reliefs the Court may put the plaintiff to the election to choose one or other relief. (t) A pleading however is not embarrassing within the meaning of rule 1C merely because it sets up inconsistent sets of facts. (u) Hence it cannot be struck out solely on that ground.

To go to the length of saying that no inconsistent pleading can be pleaded appears to me not warranted by the rules and contrary to the established practice of the Courts. (v) It must however be noted that if alternative cases are alleged the facts ought not to be mixed up leaving the [other party] to pick out the facts applicable to each case, but the facts ought to be distinctly stated so as to show on what facts each alternative of the relief sought is founded. (w) [See O 3 r 8.] If the facts are so mixed up that they may embarrass the fair trial of the suit the Court may strike out matters which may embarrass the trial. What the rules prohibit are not inconsistent pleadings which set up in one statement embarrassing allegations and inconsistent allegations in defence. See notes to O 7 r 7. After alternative relief

A plea that a policy of fire insurance was not in existence at the time of the fire and that there was no contract of insurance at all coupled with an alternative plea that if there was a contract then by reason of certain conditions precedent to the attaching of the liability the insurance company will not be liable is not contrary to the law of India. (x) A man may plead in the alternative that he is the owner of a piece of land and that if he is not the owner he is entitled to an easement over it. (y)

4. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 6.] In all cases in which the party pleading relies on any misrepresentation, fraud, breach of trust, wilful default, or undue influence, and in all other cases in which particulars may be necessary beyond such as are exemplified in the forms aforesaid, particulars (with dates and items if necessary) shall be stated in the pleading.

Particulars to be given where necessary

Object of particulars—"Although pleadings must now be concise, they must also be precise" (z) For this purpose all necessary particulars must be embodied in the pleadings. Where a plaint contains sufficient averments and indicates with reasonable precision what the claim sued on is, the suit should not fail by reason of the omission or incorrect description of any particular (a) If the particulars stated in the pleadings are not sufficiently specific, the other party may apply for further and better particulars under the next rule. The object of particulars is to prevent surprise at the trial by informing the opposite party what case he has to meet, to define and narrow the issues to be tried and so save unnecessary expense (b) Particulars supplement pleadings which would otherwise be too vague and general, and ensure a fair trial by giving notice of the case intended to be set up (c) "What particulars are to be stated must depend on the facts of each case" (d) As a general rule it may be stated that 'as much certainty and particularity must be insisted on, as is reasonable, having regard to the circumstances and to the nature of the acts themselves. To insist upon less would be to relax old and intelligible principles. To insist upon more would be the vainest pedantry' (e) At the same time the distinction between particulars and evidence must be steadily kept in view. "The Courts have uniformly endeavoured to prevent the plaintiff, or the defendant, as the case may be from prying into the brief of his opponent for finding out what is to be the evidence which is to be produced at the trial. On the other hand, the Courts have uniformly said that the plaintiff or the defendant, is entitled to be told any and every particular which will enable him to properly prepare his case for the trial, so that he may not be taken by surprise' (f) That is to say, whilst particulars may be ordered to prevent surprise, and to inform the opposite party of the case he has to meet, particulars are not ordered of the mode in which it may be proposed to prove the case set up in the pleading (g) To use the phraseology of r 2 above, particulars will be ordered of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, but not of the evidence by which those facts are to be proved. Thus a defendant is not entitled to know the names of the plaintiff's witnesses for that is to require particulars of the evidence by which the plaintiff's case is to be proved. But where the names of witnesses form part of the material facts constituting a party's case, he is bound to state them in his pleading and if he does not, an order may be made requiring him to disclose the names (h) 'If the particulars are those that he ought to give, he cannot refuse to do so merely on the ground that his answer will disclose the names of the witnesses he proposes to call (i) This may be explained by an illustration. A deals in drugs bearing the registered trade mark 'Herbalin'. B uses the word "Herbaline" on drugs manufactured by him. A sues B for infringement of his trade mark, alleging in the plaint that the use of his trade mark by B is calculated to induce, and had in fact induced "diverse persons" to purchase B's goods as and for A's goods. B applies for particulars of the names and addresses of the 'diverse persons'. B is entitled to the particulars, for the names in this case form part of the material facts which constitute A's case. The whole question in such a case is, has the defendant induced diverse persons to buy his goods as and for those of the plaintiff (j)

Fraud and coercion—Where fraud is charged against the defendant, it is an acknowledged rule of pleading that the plaintiff must set forth the particulars of the fraud which he alleges. It is not enough to use such general words as "fraud," "deceit," or "machinations." General allegations, however strong may be the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any Court ought to take notice (k). Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, but no particulars of the fraud are given in the plaint, the Court may allow the plaint to be amended or it may reject the plaint (l) [see O 6, r 17, and O 7, r 11]. A charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind of fraud cannot, upon failure of proof, be substituted for it (m). Nor is it proper for the appellate Court to entertain a case of fraud other than the one specifically alleged in the pleadings (n). The same rules apply when coercion is charged in the plaint (o).

If the particulars of fraud stated in the plaint are not sufficiently specific, the defendant may apply for further particulars under the next rule. Thus where it is alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendants have made false entries in the plaintiffs' books for the purpose of defrauding them, the plaintiffs may be directed to furnish particulars specifying the entries charged to be false, and the nature of their objection to each item (p). See notes to rule 5 below, "Discovery before particulars," ill 1, and notes to O 6, r 17, "Amendment by adding plea of fraud."

"Misrepresentation"—Where it is alleged in the plaint that the defendant represented to the plaintiff etc. it should be stated whether the representation was verbal or in writing (j). It is not enough in an action to restrain infringement of a trade mark to allege that diverse persons were induced by the acts of the defendant to purchase his goods as and for those of the plaintiff. The plaintiff should state in the plaint particulars of the names and addresses of those 'diverse persons' (r).

Breach of trust—Where breach of trust is charged, the pleading must specify the acts constituting the alleged breach of trust. It is not enough to say that the defendant had "in various ways misapplied rent and profits of leaseholds, which he had received on behalf of the plaintiff, and had committed breaches of trust" (s).

"Other cases in which particulars may be necessary"—

Misconduct—Where the dismissal of a servant or an agent is justified on the ground of misconduct, the party so justifying must specify the acts of misconduct (t).

Negligence—Where negligence or contributory negligence is charged, full details must be given of the acts on which the party pleading relies as constituting negligence (u).

4 Agreement—Where an agreement is alleged, the pleading should state the date of the agreement, the names of the parties to it, and whether it was in writing or verbal (c) If it is an implied agreement, it should appear from what facts or circumstances it is to be implied (see r 12 below)

Defamation—In an action for slander, the plaintiff must give particulars of the names of the persons to whom the alleged slander was made (u)

In an act on for libel, where the charge made against the plaintiff in the alleged libel is general in its nature, a defendant who pleads a justification must state in his pleading the facts on which he relies in support of his justification (x) But where in an action of libel the defendant relies on the defence of fair comment, and pleads it in the form now commonly known as the 'rolled up plea'—i.e., "In so far as the said words consist of allegations of fact the said words are in their nature and ordinary meaning true in substance and in fact, and in so far as the said words consist of expression of opinion they are fair comment made in good faith and without malice for the benefit of the public upon the said facts which are a matter of public interest," the Court will not order the defendant to specify which of the words complained of he relies on as being statements of facts, and which as being expression of opinion Nor will the Court order him to give particulars of the facts on which he relies as being the basis of his comments if the plea (as above) limits those facts to the said facts for the plaintiff is thereby given all the information on the subject that he can require (y) A sends a book of which he is the author to B for review B, in reviewing the book prints and publishes, among other statements, the following "I is, by his own confession a most barefaced liar" A sues B for damages for libel B justifies, pleading the truth of the alleged libel B must specify in his pleading the passage in A's work on which he relies in support of the defence of justification (z)

Accounts—Where a plaintiff claims merely to have a general account taken he need not give particulars as to the items But it is otherwise if the plaintiff claims a definite amount instead of an account In the latter case the plaintiff must give particulars as to the items of which it is composed (a)

Where a lump sum is claimed—Where a plaintiff claims a lump sum, the defendant is entitled to particulars of the items composing such sum (b) So also where a plaintiff gives credit for a lump sum, and sues for the balance (c)

Particulars of defence—The general principles upon which the Courts act in requiring particulars to be given of allegations or matters stated in plaints are applicable equally to defences, and the rules relating to the giving of particulars are in general applicable to all pleadings, though from the nature of the case the occasion for particulars arises somewhat less frequently in regard to defences than in regard to claims Thus where a defence consists of traverses or denials of allegations in the claim so that the defendant is not taking upon himself the onus of proving any substantive facts, but instance, if a defendant sets up a defence of payments made, he has to give particulars of the dates and amounts of such payments. So if he justifies a libel, he must state the facts fully in his pleadings or give particulars (e). Similarly where he alleges that he is released from, or exonerated and discharged from, the performance of his contract, he must in his written statement give sufficient information to his opponent as to how and when he was so released or discharged [Bullen and Leake, Precedents of Pleadings, 8th ed., 552, 553]. But where the onus of establishing a positive or negative allegation lies on the plaintiff, the Court will not order the defendant to give particulars of his traverse of that allegation. Thus where the plaintiff alleged that the committee of the Stock Exchange in declining to re-elect him as a member of the exchange did not act bona fide, fairly, reasonably, or judicially in coming to the conclusion they did and the committee in their defence alleged that they acted bona fide and honestly, it was held that the onus of proving that the committee had not acted bona fide being on the plaintiff, he was not entitled to particulars of the facts or grounds upon which the committee based their decision (f).

Failure to give particulars after order.—If the order directing a party to give particulars is not obeyed then, if the plaintiff is in default, he should have his action stayed and if the defendant is in default, his defence should be struck out (g).

5. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 7.] A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to costs and otherwise, as may be just.

Further and better statement of particulars

Application for particulars—The object of particulars is to prevent surprise at the trial and to limit the inquiry at the trial to the matters set out in the particulars. So I think particulars ought to be encouraged. They tend to narrow the issues (h). If a party does not state in his pleading all the particulars required by r 4, the other party may apply under this rule for further and better particulars. If the English practice is to be followed here, the application need not be supported by any affidavit except, perhaps, in a special case (i).

When application should be made—As a general rule a defendant who claims particulars should apply for them with reasonable promptitude (j) and before putting in his defence, but he does not by putting in his defence waive his right to particulars (k). Indeed, in a proper case, the Court may order an application for particulars to stand over till a written statement has been put in to enable the Court to know what the points raised by the defence are, as where the defendant is the plaintiff's agent, and the particulars in question are all in the knowledge of the defendant, but not in the knowledge of the plaintiff (l).

Discovery before particulars—The question often arises, where a defendant has applied for particulars, whether the plaintiff should deliver particulars before obtaining discovery and inspection of the defendant's books or whether discovery should be given before particulars are delivered "There is no hard and fast rule as to the class of cases in which particulars should precede discovery, or discovery be ordered before particulars, but the Judge must exercise a reasonable discretion in every case after carefully looking at all the facts, and taking into account any special circumstances" (m) The result of the authorities appears to be that where the party pleading does not know the facts necessary to enable him to give the particulars, but his opponent knows them, the party applying for particulars may be ordered to give discovery before the party pleading is required to deliver particulars, and the application for particulars may be postponed till after discovery. 'It is good practice and good sense that where the defendant knows the facts and the plaintiffs do not, the defendant should give discovery before the plaintiffs deliver particulars' (n)

1 Suit by principal against agent for accounts charging agent with fraud—A employs B to purchase goods, as his agent, at the lowest possible price. A sues B for an account alleging in the plaint that B had purchased goods at prices higher than the current prices and had secretly received commission from the vendors. The charges against B are stated in general terms, no particulars being given. A is unable to state the particulars of the fraud charged until he sees B's books. A is entitled to inspection of B's books before he can be called upon to deliver particulars of the fraud (o)

2 Suit by a wife's executor against husband—A, who is the executor of J, sues B, J's husband, to recover from him all the furniture and other chattels purchased by J with her separate income and included in an inventory of all the goods in B's house made sometime before J's death. B applies for particulars of the furniture. He is not entitled to the particulars until he declares by an affidavit which of the articles comprised in the inventory belonged to his wife. "Where the plaintiffs are executors who do not know, and the defendant a person who does know, it is right that discovery should come first" (p)

3 Suit by a colliery company against a colliery merchant—A colliery company sues R, a coal merchant, for damages for fraudulently passing off coal not gotten from the company's mines as coal gotten from the company's mines. The plaintiffs in their plaint give one specific instance of fraud, and allege that "on divers other occasions" the defendant had taken orders from "divers other persons" for coal to be supplied from the company's mines, and fraudulently sold coal not purchased from the plaintiff as coal gotten from the company's mines. R applies for particulars of the names and dates. The company then applies for inspection of R's books. The company is entitled to discovery before delivering particulars. Chitty J, said: "Having regard to the circumstance that many of these alleged frauds are within the defendant's means of knowledge and are not within the knowledge of the plaintiffs, I think discovery ought to precede particulars" (q)

The practice followed in the above cases was sought to be applied in a libel case where A sued B for calling him a "charity swindler" and "imposter," and B pleaded justification, and, when called upon to give particulars of the charge, said that he could not unless he was allowed inspection of A's books of account. The Court held that B was not entitled to discovery before he had delivered particulars. Kay, L.J., said: "To apply this practice to the case of a libel would be to sanction the publication of a libel when the libeller knew no facts justifying the libellous statement, because he believed he could by the process of discovery elicit such facts" (r)

Further particulars granted—For cases in which further and better particulars have been ordered, see notes to r. 4 above, "Other cases in which particulars may be necessary."

Objections to particulars:—

- 1 A applies for particulars from B under this rule. It is a valid objection to the application that the particulars applied for by A relate to the manner in which B's case is to be proved, and not to material facts constituting B's case. See notes to r. 4 above, "Object of particulars."
- 2 Particulars will only be ordered of material facts constituting a party's case, but not of any immaterial allegation (s).
- 3 Particulars will only be ordered of material facts alleged by a party in his pleading, but not of those denied by him. See notes to r. 4 above, "Particulars of defence."
- 4 A applies for particulars from B under this rule. It is no objection to the application that A must know the true facts of the case better than B (t).
- 5 Where a party from whom particulars are sought is unable to give the particulars without laborious inquiry, the practice is to make an order for "the best particulars the party can give" (u). This is usually the case where the party fills a representative character (r).

"Upon such terms as to costs or otherwise."—Thus an order may be made directing that unless particulars are delivered within a certain time, the suit shall be dismissed (w).

Penalty for non compliance—If the defendant fails to comply with an order for further and better particulars he is liable to have his defence struck out under rule 16 although the penalty is not explicitly added to the order (x).

Amending or delivering further particulars—Where a party who has delivered particulars under an order afterwards desires to amend them or to deliver further particulars the proper course for him is to obtain an order giving him leave to do so (y). And leave, will, in general, be granted, where the amendment will cause no injury to the opposite party except such as can be sufficiently compensated for by costs (z).

if made at the trial of the suit (c). See s. 153 and r. 17 of this Order.

6. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 14.] Any condition precedent, the performance or occurrence of which is intended to be contested, shall be distinctly specified in his pleading by the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be; and, subject thereto, an averment

6 of the performance or occurrence of all conditions precedent necessary for the case of the plaintiff or defendant shall be implied in his pleading.

Neither party need allege the performance of any condition precedent—A agrees to build a house for B at certain rates specified in the contract. It is a condition of the agreement that payment to A should only be made upon a certificate signed by B's architect as to the amount due. A demands payment upon completion of the building but B refuses to pay. A sues B claiming Rs 5 000. Here the obtaining of the architect's certificate is a condition precedent to A's right of action. Under the present rule it is not necessary for A expressly to aver in his plaint that he has obtained the architect's certificate. Such averment, the rule says, shall be implied in his pleading. The rule further provides that if B intends to contest the fulfilment of the condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his written statement. He must plead that the architect has not certified the amount claimed in the suit. If B does not plead the non-performance of the condition, it will be presumed that the condition has been duly performed. If B pleads non-performance, the burden of proving due performance will be on A.

A condition precedent, it must be observed does not strictly speaking form part of the cause of action. Thus in the case put above A's cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of the breach thereof by B. The condition of obtaining the architect's certificate is but an additional formality introduced by the express agreement of the parties, suspending A's right to sue until the condition has been performed.

A superior landlord's suit for cesses in Bengal is not maintainable without a notice under s 54 of the Bengal Cess Act, and if there is no allegation of service in the plaint this rule does not relieve the plaintiff of the necessity of proving service of notice (d).

The Lahore High Court has held that in a suit for damages for breach of contract, the plaintiff is dispensed, by this rule, from pleading his readiness and willingness to perform his part of the contract (e).

History of the Rule—This rule is a reproduction of O 19, r 14, of the English Rules. Before the year 1852, it was a recognized rule of English pleadings that the plaintiff should allege expressly the performance of each necessary condition precedent to the rights claimed. Then came the Common Law Procedure Act 1852 which modified the earlier practice by enabling the plaintiff to aver performance of conditions precedent generally. For this purpose, the form in use was 'all conditions were performed, and all things happened, and all times elapsed necessary to entitle the plaintiff to have the said promise performed by the defendant, and to maintain his action for the breach thereof hereinafter alleged'. The present rule does away with the necessity of even a general averment of performance of a condition precedent. A general averment of the performance of all conditions precedent is implied in every pleading and therefore it need not be alleged (f). It is for the defendant to object if he intends to dispute the performance of any condition precedent.

"Distinctly"—This rule requires that where a party intends to contest the performance of any condition precedent, he must distinctly specify the condition precedent in his pleading. An allegation in general terms that there was "an express condition" is not enough. The pleading must state the terms of the condition, the names of the parties to it, and whether it was in writing or verbal (g).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 16.] No pleading shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same.

Departure

Departure in pleading.—This rule provides against what is called “a departure in pleading.” It is a reproduction of O 19, r. 16, of the English Rules. Its importance in this country is not likely to be so great as in England where the practice is for each party in turn to state his own case, and answer that of his opponent before the hearing. Not that the Code does not recognize subsequent pleadings (see O 8, r 9), but such pleadings are seldom resorted to in this country even in the Presidency towns. The general principles on which the system of pleading (in England) is founded are as follows—

- 1 The plaintiff by his statement of claim alleges the material facts on which he relies in support of his case.
- 2 The defendant, in answer thereto, delivers a defence, in which he may take all or any of the following courses—first, he may deny or refuse to admit the facts stated by the plaintiff, secondly he may confess or admit them, and avoid their effect by alleging fresh facts which afford an answer thereto, thirdly he may admit the facts stated by the plaintiff, and may raise a question of law as to their legal effect
 If the defendant adopts the first or third of these courses, a question of fact or of law is at once raised between the parties
- 3 If the defendant adopts the second of the three courses, the plaintiff may reply— first, by denying the fresh facts alleged by the defendant, or secondly, by admitting them, and alleging other facts which avoid their effect,
 or
thirdly, by raising a question of law as to their effect
- 4 If the plaintiff pleads a reply of the second kind, that is, if he replies by way of confession and avoidance the defendant has the same courses open to him in pleading a rejoinder (h). A rejoinder is now seldom pleaded
- 5 It is very seldom that further proceedings are taken, but there may be sur rejoinders, rebutters, and surrebutters

Under the Code, a plaintiff commences his suit by presenting a plaint. The defendant then puts in his written statement in answer to the plaintiff's claim. There is nothing corresponding to a Reply or Rejoinder in our system of pleadings. But the plaintiff may, with the leave of the Court, tender a written statement, and the defendant may, with like leave, tender an additional written statement (O 8, r 9). The Code of 1882 also contained a similar provision (i), but pleadings in this country seldom go beyond the defendant's written statement.

The word “pleading” at the commencement of this rule refers to subsequent pleading. Thus in England a plaintiff may not raise in his Reply a ground of claim different from that raised in his Statement of Claim, nor can he in his Reply set up facts inconsistent with those set up in his Statement of Claim. A reply is not the proper place in which to raise new claims. A plaintiff who wishes to add new claims can do so only by amending the Statement of Claim. Similar remarks apply to a defendant's Rejoinder. As a plaintiff's Reply must be consistent with his Statement of Claim, so a defendant's Rejoinder must be consistent with his Defence. Thus if a plaintiff alleges merely a negligent breach of trust in his Statement of Claim, the Reply must not assert that the breach of trust was fraudulent (j). Similarly, if the Defence alleges that the arbitrators did not make any award, the Rejoinder must not assert that the award was not tendered by the proper time, 'for it is one thing not to make an award, and another thing not to tender it when made' (k). Upon the same principle, a plaintiff who claims rent on the basis of a lease cannot claim the same sum in his Reply as damages for unlawfully 'holding over', for by his Statement of Claim he treats the defendant as his tenant, and he cannot turn round in his Reply and say 'If the defendant is not liable as a tenant, he is liable as a trespasser' (l).

8. [New. R. S. C., O 19, r. 20] Where a contract is alleged in any pleading, a bare denial of the same by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial in fact of the express contract alleged or of the matters of fact from which the same may be implied, and not as a denial of the legality or sufficiency in law of such contract.

Denial of contract—All matters which go to show that the contract sued on is void or unlawful must be specifically pleaded. If such matters are not expressly pleaded, no evidence thereof can, as a rule, be given at the trial. Thus if A sues B on a contract, and B in his written statement merely denies the contract, such denial will be taken to mean only that there was in fact no such contract as alleged: it will not be construed as a denial of the legality of the contract. The result is that if A proves the contract sued upon, B will not be allowed to contend at the hearing that the contract was a wagering contract, and therefore void. B ought to have specifically pleaded in his written statement that the contract was a wagering contract (m). But where at the hearing of a suit the plaintiff's case discloses that the transaction which is the basis of his claim is illegal, the Court cannot properly ignore the illegality, even if the illegality be not pleaded or relied on by the defendant (n). 'No Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality. It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality the Court ought not to assist him' (o). Note that an agreement by way of wager is void but not illegal [see Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss 23 and 30]. See O 8, r 2.

setting out the whole or any part thereof, unless the precise words of the document or any part thereof are material.

Effect of document to be stated.—This rule directs what should be the proper method of pleading where a material fact (r. 2) is evidenced by a document (p). The intention expressed by the first part of the rule seems clearly to be that, where a document is material, it shall not be necessary to set it out at length, but only to state the legal effect of it, the object apparently being to prevent long pleadings (q). Thus it is sufficient if a plaintiff in a suit for the recovery of immovable property under a will states in his plaint the effect of the will under which he claims. He is not bound to set out the precise words of the will, although a question has arisen as to the true construction of those words (r). At the same time, it is not enough for a plaintiff to say that, under and by virtue of a certain deed, he is entitled to the property claimed by him. He must state the effect of the document on which he relies (s).

Precise words.—In an action of libel or slander it is always necessary to set out the exact words alleged to be libellous (t).

10. [New R. S. C., O. 19, r. 22.] Wherever it is material to allege malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge or other condition of the mind of any person, it shall be sufficient to allege the same as a fact without setting out the circumstances from which the same is to be inferred.

Malice, knowledge, &c

Condition of mind—Rules 10, 11 and 12 are no more than practical applications of the general principle laid down in r. 2 above. Malice, fraudulent intention, knowledge, etc., constitute in some cases the material facts of a party's case, they must therefore be alleged in the party's pleading. But the circumstances from which they are to be inferred need not be stated in the pleading.

Malice.—Malice is a necessary part of the cause of action in suits for slander of title and for malicious prosecution. It must therefore be alleged by the plaintiff in his plaint. Similarly, where a defendant in an action of libel claims privilege, alleging that the words complained of were used on a privileged occasion, the plaintiff may allege and prove malice, that is, improper motive.

Knowledge—In a suit by a servant against his master for injury caused by the dangerous condition of a building where he is employed, the plaint must not only affirm the master's knowledge of the danger, but must also negative the servant's knowledge of it (u). To support an action for damages for the bite of a dog, the plaintiff must allege and prove that the dog had to the defendant's knowledge bitten or attempted to bite some person before it bit the plaintiff (v).

11. [New R. S. C., O. 19, r. 23.] Wherever it is material to allege notice to any person of any fact, matter or thing, it shall be sufficient to allege such notice as a fact, unless the form or the precise 13 terms of such notice, or the circumstances from which such notice is to be inferred, are material.

Notice as part of cause of action—Notice, where it forms part of the cause of action, must be pleaded as a fact, e.g., notice of suit proposed to be brought against the Secretary of State for India [see s. 80], or against a Railway Company (iv), or against a Municipality, notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange, notice to a tenant to quit, etc. It is not necessary to set out the notice verbatim in the plaint.

12. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 24.] Whenever any contract or any relation between any persons is to be implied from a series of letters or conversations or otherwise from a number of circumstances, it shall be sufficient to allege such contract or relation as a fact, and to refer generally to such letters, conversations or circumstances without setting them out in detail. And if in such case the person so pleading desires to rely in the alternative upon more contracts or relations than one as to be implied from such circumstances, he may state the same in the alternative.

Implied contract, or relation
 Implied contract—A contract may be expressed in one document or it may have to be implied from a series of documents or conversations or from a number of other circumstances. Rule 9 applies in the former case; the present rule, in the latter case (circumstances in the conduct of two parties may establish a binding contract between them, although the agreement, reduced into writing as a draft, has not been formally executed by either (x)). As regards contracts to be implied from a series of letters, it is to be noted that where a Court has to find a contract in a correspondence and not in one particular note or memorandum formally signed, the whole of that which has passed between the parties must be taken into consideration (y).

13. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 25.] Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side, unless the same has first been specifically denied (e.g., consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim).

Presumptions of law.—A plaintiff need not, in his plaint, allege the consideration for which a bill of exchange was given to him, when he sues only on the bill, for it will be presumed in his favour that the bill was made for consideration (z). It will be for the defendant to plead that there was no consideration for the bill. But if the plaintiff sues on the consideration as a substantive ground of claim, he must allege the consideration specifically.

16. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 27.] The Court may at any stage of the proceedings order to be struck out or amended any matter in any pleading which may be unnecessary or scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit

Striking out pleadings

Amending your opponent's pleading—This rule deals with amendments which a party desires to be made in his opponent's pleading. The next rule deals with amendments which a party desires to make in his own pleading.

Striking out and amending pleadings—"It seems to me," said Bower, L.J., in Knowles v. Roberts (f) "that the rule that the Court is not to dictate to parties how they should frame their case, is one that ought always to be preserved sacred. But that rule is, of course, subject to this modification and limitation, that the parties must not offend against the rules of pleading which have been laid down by the law, and if a party introduces a pleading which is unnecessary, and it tends to prejudice, embarrass and delay the trial of the action, it then becomes a pleading which is beyond his right." It is a recognized principle that 'a defendant may claim ex debito justitiæ to have the plaintiff's case presented in an intelligible form, so that he may not be embarrassed in meeting it, and the Court ought to be strict even to severity in taking care to prevent pleadings from degenerating into the old oppressive pleadings of the Court of Chancery' (g).

"Unnecessary."—This rule has been reproduced verbatim from O. 19, r. 27, of the English Rules. According to the English practice, the mere fact that a pleading contains matters which are unnecessary is no ground for striking out those matters (h). It only affects the costs of the pleading (i). An allegation in a pleading will not be struck out merely because it is unnecessary, unless it is scandalous or tends to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the action. Thus where in a suit against a Local Board the plaint alleged that a member of the Board had used his influence with the Board for be struck out under this rule (l). In an action to enforce a compromise of a former action, it is unnecessary and embarrassing to set out in the plaint the original disputes between the parties, such allegations will therefore be struck out (l). Where a statement of claim contained immaterial facts and set out at great length documents which could not be material except as evidence by way of admission so that the defendant could not know what case he had to meet, it was held that the whole statement of claim should be struck out as being unnecessarily prolix and embarrassing (m). In an action for slander it is unnecessary and embarrassing for the defendant to state in his defence that he did not say the words alleged in the plaint, but that he said something else, and that the something else which he said was true, such statements will therefore be struck out (n).

"Scandalous"—Every Court has an inherent power, quite independently of this rule, to strike out scandalous matter in any record or proceedings. 'The Court has a duty to discharge towards the public and the suitors, in taking care that its records are kept free from irrelevant and scandalous matter" (n). "Scandal is calculated to do great and permanent injury to all persons, whom it affects, by making the records of the Court the means of perpetuating libellous and malignant slanders; and the Court, in aid of the public morals, is bound to interfere to suppress such indecencies, which may stain the reputation and wound the feelings of the parties and their relatives and friends" (p). Thus where an application for bail to the High Court contained defamatory allegations against the trying Magistrate which were all irrelevant, the High Court of Bombay refused to allow the application to be filed, and ordered it to be returned (q). Similarly where a memorandum of appeal alleged partiality against the Judge whose decree was in question, the High Court of Madras ordered the objectionable passages to be expunged (r). It must, however, be noted that "nothing can be scandalous which is relevant" (s). Thus matters in aggravation of damages are relevant, they will not, therefore, be struck out, though scandalous (t). Similarly, allegations of dishonesty or fraud or conspiracy will not be struck out as scandalous, if they are relevant to the facts in issue. They will be struck out only if they are irrelevant (u). An application to strike out scandalous matter may be made by any person, whether or not he is a party to the suit or personally affected by the scandalous matter (r).

"Tend to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit."—In considering the question whether a pleading tends "to prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the suit," a liberal interpretation should be given to the words "trial of the suit". Hence not only a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at the actual trial of a suit but a pleading which tends to prejudice or embarrass a party at any stage of the proceedings in the suit, would be within this rule (w).

A pleading is embarrassing if it is so drawn that it is not clear what case the opposite party has to meet at the trial (x). But a pleading is not embarrassing merely because it is prolix (y). Nor is a pleading embarrassing merely because it contains allegations that are inconsistent or stated in the alternative (z). But if there is no reasonable excuse for the inconsistent reliefs the Court may put the plaintiff to his election to choose one or other relief (a). See notes to r 2 above, Alternative and inconsistent allegations". See also notes above, Unnecessary.

The power of the Court under this rule should be exercised with great care and caution. Where a defendant sets up a contemporaneous oral agreement, the Court should not strike out his pleading on the ground that evidence of such agreement is inadmissible under s 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, and that the pleading is therefore embarrassing. Whether an oral agreement contemporaneous with a written document is admissible in evidence depends to some extent on how the case is presented at the trial (b).

Practice—The Court may, under this rule, order the whole pleading to be struck out as was done in the undermentioned cases (f) where the statement of claim consisted partly of unintelligible matter, partly of irrelevant matter, and the rest of scandalous matter, or it may order the objectionable matter only to be struck out, which appears to be the usual practice (g). Where the defect can be remedied by amendment, the Court may give leave to amend (h). Where a pleading is not so specific as it ought to be, the Court may direct the party to amend his pleading or give further particulars (i).

costs or other terms to be imposed by the order (j) "I have had much to do in Chambers," said Bramwell, L. J., "with applications for leave to amend, and I may perhaps be allowed to say that this humble branch of learning is very familiar to me. My practice has always been to give leave to amend unless I have been satisfied that the party applying was acting mala fide, or that, by his blunder, he had done some injury to his opponent which could not be compensated for by costs or otherwise" (l). It does not matter that the original omission arose from negligence or carelessness. "However negligent or careless may have been the first omission, and, however late the proposed amendment, the amendment should be allowed if it can be made without injustice to the other side. There is no injustice if the other side can be compensated by costs" (l). "I have found in my experience," said Bowen, L. J., "that there is one panacea which heals every sore in litigation, and that is costs" (m). It is immaterial whether the error sought to be amended was accidental or not. There is no rule limiting amendment to accidental errors. The rule says, "all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy." Thus in a suit on a promissory note the plaintiff may amend his plaint and sue on the original consideration (n). There is no kind of error or mistake which, if not fraudulent or intended to overreach the Court ought not to correct if it can be done without injustice to the other party (o). Thus a plaintiff in a suit for debt may be allowed to amend the plaint by setting out an acknowledgment passed to him by the defendant even after the defendant has filed his written statement raising the plea of limitation (p). A delay in making an application for an amendment may be ground for doubting the genuineness of the acknowledgment, but is not a good ground for refusing the application (pl). Even an admission made by mistake may be allowed to be withdrawn, and the pleading amended accordingly (q). Misdescription of immovable property in a plaint may be corrected even in appeal (r). The party applying, however, must not be acting mala fide the application to amend must be bona fide and made in good faith (s). In a case where the application was made in good faith and supported by unimpeachable documents an amendment was allowed although the plaintiff had attempted to support his original case by a forged document (t). Where in a suit on a breach of contract the plaintiff sues for the difference between the contract price and the price realized on re-sale, but it transpires at the hearing that the property in the goods had not passed to the defendant, the plaintiff may be allowed to amend the plaint and to claim damages for the breach being the difference between the contract price and the market price on the date of the breach. The Calcutta High Court has held that the plaintiff is not entitled to damages unless the plaint is amended (u). The High Court of Bombay has held that the plaintiff is entitled to damages without amendment of the plaint (v). If a plaintiff who by his plaint has claimed pursuant to sec 19 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 specific performance of a contract and compensation in addition or in substitution, subsequently gives notice

17 abandoning his claim for compensation, he cannot recover damages for breach of the contract without amending his plaint, since relief under sec 29 of that Act can be decreed only where the plaintiff is ready and willing to perform the contract, and it is therefore still subsisting (y)

The Court should not deliver a judgment inconsistent with the pleadings and issues without insisting on an amendment of the pleadings and if necessary raising fresh issues (z)

LEAVE TO AMEND WHEN REFUSED

It follows from what has been stated above that leave to amend should be refused—

- (1) Where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties, as where it is—
 - (i) merely technical, or
 - (ii) useless and of no substance
- (2) Where the plaintiff's suit would be wholly displaced by the proposed amendment
- (3) Where the effect of the amendment would be to take away from the defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time
- (4) Where the amendment would introduce a totally different, new and inconsistent case and the application is made at a late stage of the proceedings
- (5) Where the application for amendment is not made in good faith

1 Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment is not necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties—This happens where the amendment is merely (1) technical or (2) of no substance

Where the amendment is merely technical—If after the evidence for the plaintiff has been taken, the defendant applies for an amendment merely for the purpose of enabling him to raise a purely technical objection to the plaintiff's right to sue, the application should be refused (y) B and C wrongfully remove A's furniture. A sues B for damages and recovers judgment against him [B and C being joint wrong doers the judgment against B according to English law, precludes A from suing C for the same wrong] A afterwards sues C for damages for the same wrong. C does not plead the judgment against B in his defence but after the evidence for A has been taken applies for leave to amend his written statement by pleading that the judgment against B is a bar to the suit against him. The application must be refused (z) for the amendment is not necessary to bring out the real questions between the parties but purposes merely to enable C to avail himself of a technical rule of law (a)

Where the amendment is useless and of no substance—As the object of the present rule is to enable the real questions in dispute to be raised on the pleadings leave to amend should be refused to the plaintiff where the proposed amendment would not help him in substantiating his claim (b) and to the defendant where the proposed amendment would not help him in supporting his defence (c). Thus where A sues B, and finding that the suit against B would fail applied to join C as a defendant the application was refused on the ground that even if the plaint were amended by adding C as a party, the nature of the case precluded A from claiming relief even against C. Vaughan Williams, L.J., said "One good reason for our not doing so is that looking at the case that he [plaintiff] tells us he would wish to present, that case, if presented by amendment, would in my judgment, also fail, so that there is nothing to be gained by amendment" (d). Similarly, where A sues B for libel, and B pleaded justification, and B afterwards applied to amend his defence by adding a paragraph which virtually contained a plea in mitigation of damages, but was no answer to the action, the application was refused (e). See notes to r 2 above, "Matters affecting damages."

2. Leave to amend will be refused if the plaintiff's suit would be wholly displaced by the proposed amendment.—In Steward v The North Metropolitan Tramways Co (f), the plaintiff sued a tramway company for damages caused by their negligence in allowing their tramway to be in a defective condition. By their defence the company denied negligence. It was no part of the defence that the company were not the proper parties to be sued. More than six months after the delivery of the defence the company applied for leave to amend the defence by adding an allegation that by a contract between the company and the local authority of the district, the liability to maintain the roadway had been transferred to the local authority and that the company had ceased to be responsible for the roadway. At the date of the application the plaintiff's remedy against the local authority had become barred by limitation. If the agreement had been pleaded earlier, the plaintiff could have maintained an action against the board. Under these circumstances the application was refused. It is clear from the above facts that if the amendment were allowed, the plaintiff might fail against the company, as they were not the proper defendants, and if he brought an action against the local authority, it would be too late. That would be an injury to the plaintiff such as could not be compensated for by any costs that the Court might order the company to pay to the plaintiff. The test as to whether the amendment should be allowed, said Pollock, B., is, whether or not the defendants can amend without placing the plaintiff in such a position that he cannot be recouped, as it were, by any allowance of costs or otherwise. Here the action would be wholly displaced by the proposed amendment and I think it ought not to be allowed.

3. Except in very special cases—Leave to amend will be refused where the effect of the proposed amendment is to take away from the defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time (g).—The leading English case on the subject is Weldon v Neal (h). The facts of that case may be stated in the form of an illustration. A sues B for damages for slander. A afterwards applies for leave to amend the plaint by adding fresh claims in respect of assault and false imprisonment. These, although they were not barred by the effect of allowing it, would be barred by the limitation and therefore unjustly to prejudice him. We must act, said Lord Esher, M.R., on the settled rule of practice which is that amendments are not admissible

4 Leave to amend will be refused where the amendment would introduce a totally different, new and inconsistent case—In Ma Shue Mya v Moung Mo Hnaung (m), their Lordships of the Privy Council said “All rules of Court are nothing but provisions intended to secure the proper administration of justice, and it is therefore essential that they should be made to serve and be subordinate to that purpose, so that full powers of amendment must be enjoyed and should always be liberally exercised, but none the less no power has yet been given to enable one distinct cause of action to be substituted for another, nor to change, by means of amendment, the subject matter of the suit.” This proposition follows directly from r 17. The object of r 17 is to allow an amendment for the purpose of determining the real questions in dispute between the parties. That being the purpose for which an amendment is allowed, no amendment should be allowed which would introduce a totally new and different case (n). Thus where a suit is brought against the members of a joint Hindu family for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of family property alleged to have been made by the karta, or for damages, namely, the earnest money with interest, and the karta dies pending the suit and the suit title is amended by adding as his heirs his sons and grandsons who are already parties, it is not permissible by amendment to change the suit into one for money had and received or one to recover a debt (o). The result of the English cases is thus summed up in Bullen and Leake’s Precedents of Pleadings (p).

Leave to amend may be refused where at the trial or hearing the party seeks to alter the whole nature of his case by an unexpected amendment which may require further evidence to be adduced by his opponent.”

The above proposition may be split into two parts —

- A Leave to amend a plaint should not be granted, if the amendment would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character
- B Leave to amend a written statement should not be granted if the amendment would convert the defence into another of a different and inconsistent character

We shall deal with these propositions in order

A Leave to amend a plaint should not be granted if the amendment would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character—A institutes a suit against B. B files his written statement. At the hearing of the suit, A finds that his case as laid in the plaint must fail, and that he can only succeed on a different case. He then applies for leave to amend the plaint. Should the leave be granted? It has been held under the corresponding English rule that no amendment should be allowed if it would introduce an entirely different case from that which the defendant came to meet (q) or, to put it in another form if it would “change one action into another of a substantially different character (r).” Section 53 of the Code of 1882 which dealt with amendment of plaints, expressly provided that ‘a plaint shall not be amended so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character.’ That section has been omitted in this Code, and the present rule (which is a reproduction of O 28, r 1, of the English Rules) now takes its place. But the decisions under the old section on the point now under consideration are still good law, and should be considered

It must be observed at the outset that a plaintiff must in general be limited to the case which he puts forward in his plaint. There are, however, cases in which by some mistake or misapprehension the plaintiff has failed to state his case correctly and properly in the plaint. In such cases the Court may allow the plaint to be amended (s), for if the amendment is refused the plaintiff may have to bring another suit, and the object of the rule allowing amendment of plaints is to avoid multiplicity of suits (f). But the Court cannot allow an amendment if the suit is premature (u) and ought not to allow an amendment, if it would convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character. "We cannot countenance the notion," said Straight, J., "that a plaintiff, coming into Court with one case, and hopelessly failing to prove it, should be permitted to succeed upon another, and that directly in antagonism with his primary allegation" (t). The law prohibits every amendment that would change the fundamental character of the suit (w). It is not, however, to be supposed that if the fundamental character of the suit is not altered, a plaintiff is entitled as of right to amend the plaint. As stated by the High Court of Bombay, "the power to get a plaint amended is subject to the discretion of the judge, and is not claimable as a right of the suit or in all circumstances" (x).

Rules—The general rule is that any amendment allowed must be such as is either raised in the pleadings or is consistent with the case as originally laid, and that the state of facts and the equities and ground of relief originally alleged and pleaded by the plaintiff should not be departed from. This is the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Eshen Chunder Singh v Shama Churn Bhutto (y), and this rule has been followed in numerous decisions of our Courts (z).

From the general rule stated above, we deduce the following three rules each of which is borne out by the cases cited under it—

Rule I—Where a plaintiff bases his claim upon a specific legal relation alleged to exist between him and the defendant, he may not be allowed to amend his plaint so as to base it on a different legal relation.

Note—Even if the legal relation between the plaintiff and the defendant is unchanged, the plaint will not be allowed to be amended, if it completely alters the cause of action [ill (7)].

Rule II—Where a plaintiff bases his claim on a specific title he may not to amend the plaint so as to base it on a different title. But this is subject and when the title by which the plaintiff claims remains unaltered, the plaint may be allowed to be amended, if it completely alters the cause of action.

Rule III—When one kind of fraud is charged another kind of fraud cannot, in the absence of proof, be substituted for it.

1. A, alleging that B hired cargo boats from him, and that a balance of Rs 3 000 is due to him on that account, sues B for the amount. It is proved at the hearing that B did not himself hire the boats but that he was merely A's agent to let the boats on hire. A then applies to amend his plaint by claiming an account from B on the footing

2 A sues B for the rent of a house alleged to have been let by A to B. B denies the lease and contends that he is the owner of the house. I will not be allowed to amend the plaint by converting the suit into one for a declaration of ownership. Bas Shri Majumdar v Maganlal (1890) 19 Bom 303

3 A sues B for damages for wrongful occupation of his land and for injury done to his land. After the issues are framed A applies to amend the plaint by claiming from B rent for the land on the basis of a subsisting tenancy. The amendment should not be allowed because it will convert a claim based on trespass into a claim on the basis of a subsisting lease. Narayan v Hari (1889) 13 Bom 664, Jhari Singh v Pirthi Nath (1917) 2 Pat LJ 69 35 IC 191 (a). 5 A suit for rent will not be allowed to be converted at the hearing into a suit for use and occupation. — A sues B to recover Rs. 1,000 alleged to be rent due under a lease executed by B. The Court finds that B was in occupation of the premises during the period for which the rent is claimed but that the alleged lease was not executed by B. At this stage A applies to amend his plaint by alleging that though the lease was not executed by B he is entitled to recover the amount for use and occupation of the premises. The amendment will not be allowed. (b)

6 A suit for possession will not be allowed to be converted into a suit for redemption. In the former case the plaintiff sues as owner of the land in the latter as mortgagor. Laxmishankar v Hanjabhai (1920) 44 Bom 510 57 IC 426

7 A who is P's agent to manage certain property belonging to I appoints S to act as a sub-agent for I and gives him Rs. 1,000 belonging to P for the payment of Government revenue and other purposes. S fails to account for the money. P sues A to recover the amount paid by A to S claiming the same on the ground that S was appointed sub-agent without P's authority. It is found at the hearing that S was appointed sub-agent with P's authority. P will not be allowed to amend the plaint so as to base his claim on the ground that A had not exercised ordinary prudence in selecting S as a sub-agent for P. Hamilton v Land Mortgage Bank (1883) 5 All 456. [This is an illustration of the proposition that rule 11 is subject to Rule 1. If the amendment were allowed the legal relation between the plaintiff and the defendant which is that of principal and agent would no doubt remain unchanged but the cause of action would be wholly changed.]

1 A alleging that B was the adopted son of C and that he (A) is the heir of B sues D to recover certain property forming part of the estate of B. The Court finds that the adoption of B was not valid. A then contends for the first time in appeal to the Privy Council that even if the adoption was not valid he is entitled to recover the property as the heir of C. 2 A obtains a decree against λ, and after the death of the latter, attaches certain immovable property in execution of the decree. B and C, sons of λ, sue A for a declaration that the property is joint family property, and it is not liable to be attached and sold in execution of the decree against the father, on the ground that the debts contracted by their father were for immoral purposes. It is proved that the debts were not incurred for immoral purposes. Thereupon B and C apply to amend the plaint by alleging that they had separated from their father before the date of the decree, and that they were not therefore liable to pay the amount of the decree. The amendment cannot be allowed, because the plaintiffs' claim as originally laid was on the footing that there was no partition between them and their father. Narayanrai v Jatherrahu (1888) 12 Bom 431

3 A, a Hindu, claiming as the heir of his uncle, sues the executors of his uncle's widow for possession of property left by the widow, alleging that the same belonged to the estate of his uncle, and that the widow had no power to dispose of it by will. The Court holds that the widow had power to will away the property. A will not be allowed to amend the plaint by adding that even if the widow had the power to dispose of the property by her will he was entitled to the residue as his uncle's heir as the same was left to charitable objects of an unspecified and general character, and could not therefore be legally applied to charity. Damodar v Purmanandas (1883) 7 Bom 155. [This is an illustration of Rule 11 being subject to Rule 1. It is proved that A's predecessor was aware of the payment. A applies to amend the plaint by alleging that though his predecessor consented to the payment such consent was illegal as being a fraud, though of a different kind, upon the Court. The amendment cannot be allowed because to allege fraud of one kind and to substitute fraud of another kind is to convert the suit into one of an inconsistent character. Abdul Hossain v Turner (1887) 11 Bom 620, 14 I A 111. B Leave to amend a written statement should not be granted, if the amendment would convert the defence into another of a different and inconsistent character.—As in the case of a plaint so in the case of a written statement, the Court will not allow an amendment that would involve 'a complete change of front in the defence' (c)

A agrees to grant a lease of a brickfield to B. No lease is executed but B enters into possession under the agreement. B then sues A for specific performance of the agreement, alleging that A, though frequently asked to do so had neglected and refused to grant the lease. A denies that he was asked to grant the lease and expresses his readiness to execute the lease. A also counter claims for Rs. 1,500 by way of rent. After the suit is set down for trial, A applies for leave to amend his defence and counter claim, and to join therewith a claim for possession of the land. The application must be refused. To allow A to amend would be to allow him to present a totally distinct, new and inconsistent case". Clark v Wray (1886) 11 C D 68

Want of bona fides may be inferred from a great delay in making the application (f).

Amendment of plaint by adding new reliefs.—The amendment of a plaint by adding a new prayer may or may not convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character. If the amendment converts the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character, it will not be allowed. If the amendment does not convert the suit into another of a different and inconsistent character, it may or may not be allowed at the discretion of the Court. Similarly, a purchaser suing for specific performance may be allowed to amend his plaint by asking in the alternative for a refund of the earnest money (k). Where a plaintiff has framed his suit bona fide, believing that consequential relief is not open to him and that he is entitled to a declaration, the plaint may be allowed to be amended even in appeal by adding a prayer for possession (l). which the defendant has been prevented by sec 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, from dealing with the property. An amendment which leaves standing an averment that the plaintiff is ready and willing to perform the contract, and the claim to specific performance, does not make the plaint appropriate to a suit for damages for its breach (g)

" AT ANY STAGE OF THE PROCEEDINGS "

Leave to amend may be granted at any stage of the proceedings. It may be granted on appeal [s 107, sub s (2)] (r), or even on second appeal (s 108) (s). In the under mentioned case (t), the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint in appeal before the Privy Council. In a later case where the suit was brought upon a mortgage of the property of a joint Hindu family, and the suit was dismissed on appeal to the High Court on the ground that necessity was not proved, the Privy Council refused to entertain a new contention raised before them for the first time, that the plaintiff was at least entitled to a decree against the mortgagor manager upon his personal admission, on the ground that it involved a radical amendment of the plaint (u). The appellate Court may allow an amendment whether leave to amend was asked for in the Court below or not. It may also allow an amendment even if the Court below offered leave to amend but the offer was declined (v).

Mere delay is not a ground for refusing an amendment. As a general rule, however, late the amendment is sought to be made it should be allowed except in the five cases mentioned above (w). In order to avoid multiplicity of proceedings the tendency is to allow amendment at any stage if it can be done without injustice to the other side, a new case of fraud paying all the costs is little difficulty, in ordinary cases, in a party obtaining leave to amend on payment of the costs of and occasioned by the amendment and the application (y). Leave to amend may also be given at the hearing on proper terms as to the costs and the postponement of the hearing if necessary, except, again in the five cases mentioned above. Thus leave to amend has been granted at the trial where there was a defect in the parties and it became necessary to amend the proceedings in the suit (z). It would also be granted where both parties knew what the case was and there was no surprise (a).

Revision—See notes to s 115, " Interlocutory orders "

Appeal—No appeal lies under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order amending the title of a plaint by omitting the word ' Summary ' before the word ' Suit ', and transferring the case to the Short Causes List (b).

18. [New. R. S C., O. 28, r. 7.] If a party who has obtained an order for leave to amend does not amend accordingly within the time limited for that purpose by the order, or if

Plaint.

Particulars to be contained in plaint

1. [S 50, para 1] The plaint shall contain the following particulars —

- (a) the name of the Court in which the suit is brought,
- (b) the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff,
- (c) the name, description and place of residence of the defendant, so far as they can be ascertained,
- (d) where the plaintiff or the defendant is a minor or a person of unsound mind a statement to that effect,
- (e) the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose,
- (f) the facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction,
- (g) the relief which the plaintiff claims,
- (h) where the plaintiff has allowed a set off or relinquished a portion of his claim, the amount so allowed or relinquished, and
- (i) a statement of the value of the subject matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court fees, so far as the case admits

Facts constituting the cause of action —The plaintiff must give such particulars as will enable the defendant and the Court to ascertain from the plaint whether in fact and in law the cause of action did arise as alleged or not. The plaintiff's mere statement that it did arise or that he has a good cause of action is useless for this purpose (c). As to the meaning of cause of action see notes to sec 20. Cause of action. See also notes to O 6 r 2

"Facts showing that the Court has jurisdiction."—If the plaintiff relies on the defendant's residence or place of business as giving jurisdiction the facts showing this must be stated in the body of the plaint (d) The statement of these facts in the title to the suit is not sufficient, as the title to the suit is not covered by the verification clause (e) See ss 16, 19 and 20, and cl. 12 of the Charter set forth in Appendix II.

"Relief which the plaintiff claims."—See r 7 below and notes thereto

"Relinquished a portion of his claim."—See O 2, r. 2, sub r. (2).

Statement of value—See notes to sec. 15, "Where the subject matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued"

2. [S. 50, paras. 2, 3.] Where the plaintiff seeks the recovery of money, the plaint shall state the precise amount claimed:

In money suits

But where the plaintiff sues for mesne profits, or for an amount which will be found due to him on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant, the plaint shall state approximately the amount sued for.

Suit for mesne profits or accounts—See notes to sec 6, "Pecuniary jurisdiction in passing decrees"

3. [New.] Where the subject-matter of the suit is immovable property, the plaint shall contain a description of the property sufficient to identify it, and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, the plaint shall specify such boundaries or numbers.

Where the subject matter of the suit is immovable property

4. [S. 50, para. 4.] Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character the plaint shall show not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps (if any) necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it.

When plaintiff sues as representative

"Where the plaintiff sues in a representative character."—Where a person dies leaving a will, the executor named in the will may obtain probate of the will Where a person dies intestate, his heirs may apply for letters of administration The person to whom letters of administration are granted is called administrator. The executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person, is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased vests in him as such A suit by a person as executor or administrator of a deceased person is a suit by him in a representative character There are some cases in which the law requires probate or letters of administration, as the case may be, to entitle a person suing in a representative character to a decree in respect of the estate of the deceased In a large number of cases,

4. INDIAN CHRISTIANS—Up to the year 1901, Indian Christians were governed by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, 1865. Hence it was necessary, where the deceased left a will, that the executor should obtain probate before he could establish any right as such to the property of the deceased (Indian Succession Act, 1865, s. 187) and if the deceased died intestate, it was necessary to obtain letters of administration before any right could be established to any part of the property of the deceased in a Court of law (Indian Succession Act, 1865, s. 190). In 1901, an Act was passed called the Native Christian Administration of Estates Act (VII of 1901), declaring that the provisions of section 190 of the Succession Act, 1865, shall not apply to any part are reproduced in s. 212 and 213. Under sec. 213 a probate is necessary where the deceased has left a will. Under sec. 212 no letters of administration are necessary where the deceased has died intestate. But if a suit is brought to recover a debt due to the estate of a deceased Indian Christian, no decree can be passed against the debtor except on production of a probate or letters of administration or a succession certificate; see Indian Succession Act, 1925, s. 214.

"Has taken the steps."—In those cases where a probate is necessary, and those are cases specified in s. 213 of the Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925, it has been held by the Privy Council that the grant of probate is not a condition precedent to the institution of the suit, and that the executor or legatee may institute the suit without obtaining a probate, but that he will not be entitled to a decree until he obtains a probate (g).

If the deceased has left no will, and the case is one governed by sec. 212 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, so that letters of administration are necessary to establish a right to the property of the deceased in a Court of law, the question arises whether it is necessary that letters of administration to the estate of the deceased should be obtained before the institution of the suit, or whether it is sufficient if they are obtained before the decree is passed. The High Court of Bombay has held that if letters of administration are not obtained before the institution of the suit, and the plaintiff does not show that the plaintiff has obtained letters of administration, the plaintiff should be rejected on pre-entation, but if the plaintiff is not rejected, and the hearing has been allowed to proceed, there is nothing to prevent the Court from passing a decree for the plaintiff if letters of administration are obtained before the decree (h). The English law on the subject may thus be stated in the language of the Judicial Committee in Meyappa v Supramaniam (i). "An administrator derives title solely under his grant, and cannot, therefore, institute an action as administrator before he gets his grant. The law on the point is well settled (see Common Law Digest Administration, B 9 and 10, Thompson v Reynolds (j), Woodley v Clark (k))."

Title of suit.—See Appendix A. (2) Description of Parties in Particular Cases, the last two forms. See also r 9 (2) below.

5. [S. 50, para 5] The plaintiff shall show that the defendant is or claims to be interested in the subject-matter, and that he is liable to be called upon to answer the plaintiff's demand.

Defendant's interest and liability to be shown.

6. [S. 50, para 6.] Where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation the plaintiff shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Ground of exemption from limitation law

Grounds of exemption from limitation law.—These grounds are set forth in section 12 to 20 of the Limitation Act, 1908. If no ground of exemption is shown in the plaintiff and the suit appears from the statement in the plaintiff to be barred by limitation the plaintiff shall be rejected (see r 11, cl (d) below). But a plaintiff should not be rejected merely because the exemption is not claimed specifically. All that the rule requires is that the plaintiff shall show the ground of exemption (l). If a plaintiff does not show any ground of exemption, the Court of first instance should allow the plaintiff to be amended save under very exceptional circumstances (m). But a plaintiff should not be allowed to rely upon a ground of exemption from the law of limitation for the first time in appeal (n) See notes to O 41, r 2, below

The High Court of Bombay has held that when a plaintiff does satisfy the requirements of this rule by stating what is in his opinion the ground upon which he intends to get over the bar of limitation, he ought not to be precluded from taking another and not inconsistent ground, should he be later advised that the latter is the true ground (o) According to the Calcutta (p) and Lahore (q) rulings, a plaintiff who has stated one ground of exemption may be allowed to take another and inconsistent ground The Madras High Court agrees, but in order to do so the plaintiff must obtain the leave of the Court to amend his plaint (r)

7. [New R. S. C., O. 20, r. 6.] Every plaint shall state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims either simply or in the alternative, and it shall not be necessary to ask for general or other relief which may always be given as the Court may think just to the same extent as if it had been asked for. And the same rule shall apply to any relief claimed by the defendant in his written statement.

Relief to be specifically stated

Relief—Every plaint must state specifically the relief which the plaintiff claims whether it be damages, or specific performance, or an injunction, or a declaration, or an account, or the appointment of a receiver, or possession of land, or relief of any other kind A plaintiff who omits, except with the leave of the Court, to sue for all the reliefs to which he may be entitled in respect of the same cause of action will not afterwards be allowed to sue for any relief so omitted [O 2 r 2, sub r (3)] But it is not necessary to ask for general or other relief

Where a relief is claimed upon a specific ground the Court may grant it upon a ground different from that on which it is claimed in the plaint, if the ground is disclosed by the allegation in the plaint and the evidence in the case (s) Thus in a case in which a plaintiff claimed an easement by prescription, and it was found that he was not entitled to the easement by prescription, their Lordships of the Privy Council dealing with the case as a special appeal, decreed the claim on the presumption of title arising from a grant (t)

Where a plaint asks for more than what the plaintiff is entitled to, the Court may give him only as much relief as he is entitled to, but the suit must not be dismissed (u) Where a plaint asks for less than what the plaintiff is entitled to, the Court cannot give him relief in excess of the plaint, unless the plaint is amended before judgment Thus if a suit is brought upon a balance of accounts or for mesne profits, and the plaintiff, instead of claiming whatever may be found due on the taking of accounts and stating an approximate amount [O 7, r 2], states a specific sum as the amount claimed, the Court cannot, without an amendment of the plaint [O. 6, r. 17], pass a decree for more than what is claimed (t)

General or other relief.—Under the system of pleadings hitherto followed in India, it was usual to add in the plaint a prayer for general relief called general prayer which ran thus “The plaintiff claims such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require” Under the present rule it is no longer necessary specifically to ask for such relief. Such relief may now always be given to the same extent as if it had been asked for, provided it is not inconsistent with that specifically claimed, and with the case raised by the pleading (x). In order, however, to entitle a plaintiff to a relief under the claim for general relief, it is necessary that the ground for such relief should be disclosed by the allegations in the plaint (x). “A plaintiff cannot be entitled to relief upon facts or documents not stated or referred to by him in his pleadings” (y). Thus where a plaintiff sues for a declaration of title to certain property under a deed of sale he cannot be allowed to succeed on the basis of title by adverse possession (z).

With regard to the nature of the general or other relief which a plaintiff may have, the rule is that if the plaint contains allegations, offering issues on facts that are material, the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which those facts will sustain, but he cannot desert the specific relief claimed, and under the claim for general relief ask for specific relief of another description, unless the facts and circumstances alleged on the pleadings will consistently with the rules of the Court, maintain that relief (a).

Where a suit is brought by a reversioner against a Hindu widow (1) for an injunction restraining her from waste, (2) for appointment of a receiver, and (3) for ‘further relief,’ the plaintiff, if he fails in the substantial heads of his claim, is not entitled, under cover of a request for ‘further relief,’ to obtain a declaration that he is the next reversionary heir (b).

In a suit by a mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee may relinquish his claim for sale, and ask for a simple money decree, though such relief is not specifically claimed. This he may do under the claim for general relief. The Court has the power to grant that relief, provided the mortgage contains a personal covenant to pay the mortgage debt (c). The Court may also under this rule award interest on a balance of account from the date of the institution of the suit, although interest is not specifically asked for in the plaint (d). But the Court has no power under a claim for general relief, to grant to a pro forma plaintiff the relief claimed by the active plaintiff, if it turns out that the pro forma plaintiff, and not the active plaintiff, is entitled to the relief claimed. This may be explained by an illustration. B sells his interest in certain property in the possession of C to A. A and B then sue C to recover possession of the property. B makes no claim, and he is joined merely as a formal party to the suit. The Court finds the sale to A void as champertous (Contract Act, s. 23). On these facts no decree can be passed in favour of A for possession. Nor should any decree be passed in favour of B awarding possession of the property to him under the claim for

(e) “The Court has no power under a claim for general relief, to grant to a pro forma plaintiff the relief claimed by the active plaintiff, if it turns out that the pro forma plaintiff, and not the active plaintiff, is entitled to the relief claimed”

(f) “This may be explained by an illustration. B sells his interest in certain property in the possession of C to A. A and B then sue C to recover possession of the property. B makes no claim, and he is joined merely as a formal party to the suit. The Court finds the sale to A void as champertous (Contract Act, s. 23). On these facts no decree can be passed in favour of A for possession. Nor should any decree be passed in favour of B awarding possession of the property to him under the claim for general relief, though the Court finds that C is in wrongful possession of the property, and that the person really entitled to the property is B. B must bring a separate suit against C to recover possession (e).

Alternative relief—A plaintiff may rely “upon several different rights alternatively, although they may be inconsistent” (f), provided that his pleading is not thereby rendered embarrassing. A pleading is not embarrassing within the meaning of O 6, r 16, because it contains inconsistent sets of facts (g). Thus a plaintiff may in the same suit claim to have a partnership agreement with the defendant cancelled on the ground that he was induced to enter into it by the fraud of the defendant, or in the alternative, for a dissolution of partnership and accounts (h). Similarly a plaintiff may claim over the same plot of land a right of ownership, or in the alternative, a right of easement (i). A plaintiff may in a suit for pre-emption base his claim in the alternative on contract, or on custom, or on Mahomedan law (j). He may also in such a suit set up an alternative claim as owner (k).

In Mahomed Bakh v Hosseini Bibi (l), the Judicial Committee observed that where a plaintiff sues alleging that a deed purporting to be executed by herself is a forgery, the Court ought not to admit the inconsistent issue whether it was executed under undue influence. These observations were explained away in an Allahabad case where it was held that a plaintiff may sue for the cancellation of a bond on the ground that it was a forgery, or, in the alternative, that it was void for want of consideration (m). But quære whether the allegations of forgery and want of consideration are, not inconsistent and embarrassing. The High Court of Calcutta has held that a plaintiff may sue to set aside a deed of gift on the ground that she executed it under a fraudulent representation that it was a power of attorney, or, in the alternative on the ground that it was obtained by undue influence (n).

A plaintiff in a suit for specific performance may claim in the alternative that if the contract cannot be enforced it should be rescinded and delivered up for cancellation (o). A purchaser in a suit for specific performance may claim in the alternative a return of the earnest money, and he may at the hearing give up his prayer for specific performance, and ask for a return of the earnest money, and the Court may direct the defendant to return the earnest money (p). In England in a case under the old practice it was held that a suit to set aside a transaction for fraud, or, in the alternative for specific performance of a compromise, could not be sustained (q). It seems probable that the same conclusion would still be arrived at on the ground that the claims were inconsistent and embarrassing (r).

For a fuller discussion of this subject see notes to O 6 r 2. Alternative and inconsistent allegations.

Relief not founded on pleadings.—See notes under the same head to O 14, r 1.

Events happening after institution of suit.—Ordinarily the decree in a suit should accord with the rights of the parties as they stand at the date of its institution. But where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change

Return of plaint

(2) On returning a plaint the Judge shall endorse thereon the date of its presentation and return, the name of the party presenting it, and a brief statement of the reasons for returning it.

Procedure on returning plaint

Return of plaint.—Where a suit filed in a Revenue Court is not triable by that Court, the Court should not dismiss the suit, but return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court (c). A suit against two defendants, cognizable by a Civil Court as against the first, and by a Revenue Court as against the second, was filed in a Civil Court. The Patna High Court directed the plaint to be returned for presentation to the Revenue Court, and that a copy of it should be retained on the record for trial of the suit as against the second defendant (c).

"At any stage of the suit."—These words are new. They have been added to give effect to the undermentioned decision (x) in which it was held that a plaint may be returned to be presented to the proper Court at any stage of the suit even after the trial has begun and concluded. But a plaint should not be returned unless the Court finds that it has no jurisdiction (y).

Court fee.—If the Court has no jurisdiction it should return the plaint even though the claim is undervalued (z), and when it is presented to the proper Court, the latter Court is bound to give credit for the fee levied by the former Court (a).

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 40, r 3 cl (1)].

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, whether the order is made by the Court of first instance [O 43, r 1, cl (a)] or by the Court of first appeal in the exercise of powers conferred upon it by s 107 (b). But no second appeal lies from the order of the first appellate Court (c) [see s 104 (2)].

A files his plaint in a District Munsif's Court. The Munsif returns the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, holding that the suit is beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. On the plaint being presented to a Subordinate Judge's Court, it is again returned by that Court on the ground that the Munsif's Court had jurisdiction. Is A of circumstances become inappropriate or that it is necessary to have the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties, it is incumbent upon a Court of justice to take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and to mould its decree according to the circumstances as they stand at the time the decree is made (s) Leave to amend may be granted under O 6, r 17, for this purpose (t)

8 [New R S C, O 20, r. 7.] Where the plaintiff seeks relief in respect of several distinct claims or causes of action founded upon separate and distinct grounds, they shall be stated as far as may be separately and distinctly.

9. [S. 58.] (1) The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a list of the documents (if any) which he has produced along with it, and if the plaint is admitted, shall present as many copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants, unless the Court by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason, permits him to present a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief claimed in the suit, in which case he shall present such statements

Procedure on a admitting plaint

Concise statements

(2) Where the plaintiff sues, or the defendant or any of the defendants is sued, in a representative capacity, such statements shall show in what capacity the plaintiff or defendant sues or is used

(3) The plaintiff may, by leave of the Court, amend such statements so as to make them correspond with the plaint

(4) The chief ministerial officer of the Court shall sign such list and copies or statements if, on examination, he finds them to be correct

Sub rule (2) representative capacity.—It is not necessary to state in the title of the suit the representative capacity in which the plaintiff or the defendant sues or is sued although no doubt that is a convenient place to make such a statement. It is enough if the pleading shows that the plaintiff or the defendant sues or is sued in a representative capacity (u) See O 7, r 4 and Appendix A (2) Description of Parties in Particular Cases, the last two forms

10. [S 57] (1) The plaintiff shall be bound to return the suit to the Court in which the suit was instituted.

Return of plaint

(2) On returning a plaint the Judge shall be bound to return the name of the party presenting it and a brief statement of the reasons for returning it.

Procedure on return of plaint

Return of plaint.—Where a suit filed in a Revenue Court is not to be tried by that Court, the Judge is bound to return the plaint to be presented to the proper Court. A suit against two defendants, originally brought in a Civil Court, was returned by a Revenue Court as against the second, was filed in a Civil Court. The District Judge ordered the plaint to be returned for presentation to the Revenue Court, and a copy of it should be retained on the record for trial of the suit as against the first defendant (a).

—At any stage of the suit.—These words are new. They have been added to refer to the unexplained decision (x) in which it was held that a plaint may be returned to be presented to the proper Court at any stage of the suit even after the trial has begun and completed. It is a plaint which may be returned unless the Court finds it to be inadmissible (y).

Court before which a plaint may be presented.—The words "the proper Court" are used to refer to the Court to which the plaint may be presented. In the proper Court, the latter Court may order it to be presented to the proper Court (a).

Chartered High Courts.—The words "Chartered High Courts" are used to refer to the High Courts of the Chartered High Courts (b) (c) (d) (e) (f) (g) (h) (i) (j) (k) (l) (m) (n) (o) (p) (q) (r) (s) (t) to file the plaint in the Subordinate Judge's Court, he forfeited his right of appeal (d) Yes, according to the Madras High Court (e)

The merits of an order refusing leave under s. 20, cl. (b), cannot be attacked in an appeal from an order returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court (f)

Return of plaint by Small Cause Court—Revision—The Allahabad High Court has held that an order of a Small Cause Court returning a plaint under this rule may be subject to revision by the High Court under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act (g)

Rejection of plaint

11. [S. 54.] The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases :—

- (a) where it does not disclose a cause of action :
- (b) where the relief claimed is undervalued, and the plaintiff on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so :
- (c) where the relief claimed is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp-paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so ;
- (d) where the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any law.

Scope of the rule—The rule is mere procedure. It is not meant to enlarge any taxing section but only to ensure the proper application of the Court fees Act. It does not touch upon the plaintiff's right to pay Court fee on the footing of his own valuation in cases coming within s. 7 (iv) of the Court Fees Act (h)

Change of law—Clause (a) is new. See notes below, " Clause (a) "

Chartered High Courts.—Clauses (b) and (c) of this rule do not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction. See O 49, r. 3 (i)

Duty of Court to examine plaint—It is the duty of the Court under O 7 to examine a plaint before issuing summonses and to ascertain whether any cause of action has been pleaded and whether any relief has been claimed against the defendants and to determine whether the plaint should be rejected or returned for amendment (j)

" Shall be rejected."—This rule may be applied at any stage of a suit. Therefore, a plaint may be rejected under this rule even after it has been numbered and registered as a suit (j). The power to reject a plaint or to return it for amendment should not be exercised except in a clear case. If there is any serious question to be decided, the proper course is to let the suit proceed to written statement and discovery, and then determine the matter on preliminary issues (l).

The provision contained in this rule that the plaint shall be rejected in the four cases mentioned in the rule is mandatory. In a case, therefore, where the relief claimed was properly valued, but the plaint was written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp paper, failed to do so, it was held that the plaintiff should not be allowed to amend the plaint by omitting the prayer in respect of which the extra court fee was directed to be paid and that the plaint should be rejected (l).

Rejection of plaint in part.—This rule does not justify the rejection of any particular portion of a plaint (m).

Clause (a) Where plaint does not disclose a cause of action.—Under the Code of 1882, s. 53, it was not obligatory upon the Court to reject a plaint if it did not disclose a cause of action. Under the present rule the Court is bound to reject a plaint if it does not disclose a cause of action. As to the meaning of "cause of action," see notes to s. 20, "Cause of Action," on p. 116 above.

Clause (b): Where the relief claimed is undervalued.—If the correct valuation would render the Court incompetent to entertain the suit, clause (b) does not apply. In such a case the plaint must be returned under rule 10 to be presented to the proper Court and the deficient Court fee will be paid in the Court having jurisdiction to hear the suit (n).

Clause (c): Where a plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, — The following points are to be noted in connection with this clause:—

1 Where a plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, the Court is bound to give the plaintiff time to make good the deficiency. This follows from the terms of cl. (c) itself (o). Reasonable time must be allowed after the Court has decided that the Court fee paid is insufficient (p), and within the time allowed if the plaintiff cannot pay he may apply to continue the suit as a pauper (q).

2 If the plaintiff fails to supply the requisite stamp paper within the period fixed by the Court, the plaint may be rejected under this rule, even after it has been numbered and registered as a suit. The reason is that the power to reject a plaint under this rule is not exhausted when the plaint has been admitted and registered (r). See notes above "Shall be rejected."

3 A plaint is presented on the last day allowed by the law of limitation. It is written upon paper insufficiently stamped. The plaintiff is ordered to supply the requisite stamp paper within a week. The order is complied with on the fourth day after the date of presentation of the plaint. This would necessarily be after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed for the institution of the suit. Can the plaint be admitted under 11 these circumstances. Under this Code it can be [see s. 149]. Under the Code of 1852 there was a conflict of decisions on the point. The High Courts of Calcutta (e), Madras (f) and Bombay (g) holding that the Court had power to admit the plaint while the Allahabad High Court held that the Court had no such power (r). The view taken by the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay High Courts was that the Court had power under s. 54 of that Code at any time and without any regard to limitation, to fix a time within which the requisite stamp paper should be supplied, and if the stamp was made good within the period fixed by the Court the suit was to be deemed to be instituted when the plaint was first presented and not when the requisite stamp paper was supplied. On the other hand, the view taken by the Allahabad High Court was that though the Court had the power to give time to a plaintiff within which to supply the requisite stamp paper it must be a time within limitation and that s. 54 did not give any power to the Court to extend the period of limitation. This conflict has now been set at rest by the provisions of s. 149 of this Code. That section gives effect to the Calcutta, Madras and Bombay decisions. The Allahabad decisions are no longer law (w). S. 149 empowers the Court at any stage to allow a plaintiff to make up the deficiency of Court fees and provides in effect that when the deficiency has been made up the plaint is as valid as if it had been properly stamped when presented. It follows from the provisions of s. 149 that where a plaint written upon paper insufficiently stamped is presented to the Court on the last day allowed by the law of limitation and the Judge to whom the plaint is presented directs extra court fee to be paid but fixes no time for payment and the plaintiff pays the extra court fee though it be after the expiration of the period of limitation and the Court accepts it the plaint should be treated as if the full fee had been paid in the first instance and the suit cannot be held to be barred by limitation (z). In a recent Patna case the plaintiff was given a week's time in which to make up the deficiency before the expiry of the week the Court closed for the vacation. The amount in deficit was tendered two days after the re-opening of the Court and accepted and the plaint was registered. The period of limitation for the claim had expired prior to the date of the acceptance of the deficit. It was held that the acceptance of the fee, although tendered late and the subsequent registration of the plaint amounted to an exercise by the Court of its discretion to allow the deficiency to be paid on the day when it was tendered and, therefore, the suit was not barred by limitation (y).

The procedure prescribed by the present rule is not applicable to a case in which an appellate Court acts under s. 12 of the Court Fees Act 1870 (v).

Memorandum of appeal insufficiently stamped.—Under s. 7 (3) of the Court Fees Act the plaintiff may put his own valuation in a suit for a declaratory decree and consequential relief. In a case where a plaintiff valued the declaration and the injunction Clause (d) :—Suit barred by any law.—Where a suit appears from statements in the plaint to be barred by the law of limitation but the plaintiff is not rejected when presented, the Court may in a proper case allow the plaint to be amended at the hearing (1). Where a suit is brought against the Secretary of State without giving the notice required by sec. 80 the plaint shall be rejected under this clause (c).

Enlargement of time—The Court may enlarge the time fixed under cl. (1) and (c). See sec. 148.

Appeal—An order rejecting a plaint is a decree [s. 2 (2)], and appealable as such (d). An order rejecting a plaint was said in an Allahabad case to be an appealable order (e). This must be per incuriam for it is not one of the orders enumerated in O. 43.

Where a plaint is rejected under cl. (b) the order rejecting the plaint is not appealable when the order is based on a question of valuation pure and simple. But if the order necessarily involves a decision of the category or class under which a suit falls, even though it incidentally decides a question of valuation the order is appealable (f). These decisions turn on (n) sec. 12 of the Court Fees Act, 1870.

Revision—The Chief Court of the Punjab has held that an order directing a plaintiff to pay additional Court fee is not open to revision as the plaintiff will have his remedy by way of appeal from the consequential order rejecting the plaint (g). The same view has been taken in the undernoted cases (h). On the other hand it has been held that the demand of an improper Court fee is a refusal to exercise jurisdiction to try the case and is therefore open to revision (i), and that the payment of the unjustifiable Court fee may be an irreparable injury to the plaintiff (j). An order as to Court fee which is favourable to the plaintiff is not open to revision (k). See in this connection note 'Court fee' under sec. 115.

Review—An order rejecting a plaint under cl. (c) of this section is open to review (l). So also in a proper case an order rejecting a plaint under cl. (b) of the section (m).

12. [S 55] Where a plaint is rejected the Judge shall record an order to that effect with the reasons for such order.

Procedure on rejecting plaint

Procedure on rejecting memorandum of appeal—The same procedure is to be followed when a memorandum of appeal is rejected (n).

13. [S 56] The rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action.

Where rejection of plaint does not preclude presentation of fresh plaint

14. [S. 59.] (1) Where a plaintiff sues upon a document in his possession or power, he shall produce it in Court when the plaint is presented, and shall at the same time deliver the document or a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint.

Production of document on which plaintiff sues

(2) Where he relies on any other documents (whether in his possession or power or not) as evidence in support of his claim, he shall enter such documents in a list to be added or annexed to the plaint

List of other documents

Documents in sub rule (2)—The Bombay and Madras High Courts have held that the documents in the list under sub rule (2) are the documents referred to in the pleadings of which the defendant is entitled to inspection under rule 15 (o). The Calcutta High Court holds that rule 15 does not apply to such documents (p). A horoscope does not require to be entered in the list of documents mentioned in sub r (2). The reason is that it is not a document to be relied upon as a probative document in itself but it is a record made by the maker of the horoscope to which he is entitled to refer for the purpose of refreshing his memory in the witness box (q).

Failure to produce documents—The penalty for not producing the documents referred to in this rule is that prescribed in r 18 below, and not the reject on of the plaint (r).

Loss of document after production—Where a promissory note sued upon was produced and delivered to the Court as required by this rule but subsequently disappeared from the file the Judicial Committee held that the plaintiff was entitled to give secondary evidence under sec 65 (2) of the Evidence Act, 1872, without showing how it disappeared (s).

16. [S. 61.] Where the suit is founded upon a negotiable instrument, and it is proved that the instrument is lost, and an indemnity is given by the plaintiff, to the satisfaction of the Court, against the claims of any other person upon such instrument, the Court may pass such decree as it would have passed if the plaintiff had produced the instrument in Court when the plaint was presented, and had at the same time delivered a copy of the instrument to be filed with the plaint

17. [S. 62.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Bankers' Books Evidence Act, 1891, where the document on which the plaintiff sues is an entry in a shop-book or other account in his possession or power, the plaintiff shall produce the book or account at the time of filing the plaint together with a copy of the entry on which he relies

(2) The Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, shall forthwith mark the document for the purpose of identification, and, after examining and comparing the copy with the original, shall if it is found correct certify it to be so, and return the book to the plaintiff and cause the copy to be filed

Bankers' Books Evidence Act 18 of 1891—The Bankers' Books Evidence Act provides a special mode of proof of entries in bankers' books by dispensing with the production of the books. Sec 4 of the Act provides that a certified copy of any entry in a bankers' book is to be received as prima facie evidence of the existence of such entry and that it should be admitted as evidence of the matter contained therein to the same extent as the original entry

18. [S. 63.] (1) A document which ought to be produced in Court by the plaintiff when the plaint is presented or to be entered in the list to be added or annexed to the plaint, and which is not produced or entered accordingly, shall not, without the leave of the Court be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit

(2) Nothing in this rule applies to documents produced for cross examination of the defendant's witnesses or in answer to any case set up by the defendant or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory

In what cases leave may be granted under this rule—The object of rr 14 and 18 is to provide against false documents being set up after the institution of a suit. In these cases therefore where there is no doubt of the existence of a document at the date of the suit the Court should as a general rule admit the document in evidence though it was not produced with the plaint or entered in the list of documents annexed to the plaint as required by r 14 (1). But the Court may even in such a case refuse to receive it in evidence if it is produced at a very late stage of the proceedings, e.g. ten years after the date of the suit and a day before the judgment was delivered as was done in the undermentioned case (u)

ORDER VIII.

Written Statement and Set-off.

1. [S. 110.] The defendant may, and, if so required by the Court, shall, at or before the first hearing or within such time as the Court may permit, present a written statement of his defence.

Written statement

Written statement—The written statement must contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his defence, but not the evidence by which those facts are to be proved (O 6, r 2) A defendant may, by his written statement, raise as many distinct and separate, and therefore inconsistent, defences as he may think proper, provided the pleading is not embarrassing (v) A written statement is not embarrassing within the meaning of O 6 r 16 merely because it sets up inconsistent defences (w) But where the defendant relies upon several distinct grounds of defence they must be stated separately and distinctly (r 7 below) See notes to O 6, r 2, "Alternate and inconsistent allegations"

2. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 15.] The defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which show the suit not to be maintainable, or that the transaction is either void or voidable in point of law, and all such grounds of defence as, if not raised, would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise issues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as, for instance, fraud, limitation, release, payment, performance, or facts showing illegality.

New fact must be specifically pleaded

Fraud—See notes to O 6, r 4, "Fraud and coercion"

Facts showing illegality—When a plaintiff sues upon a bond and the defence is that there was no consideration, the Court should not entertain the plea that the consideration was unlawful, e g, stifling a criminal prosecution if it is raised for the first time in the argument of counsel at the close of the hearing The illegality of the consideration must be specifically pleaded (x) See notes to O 6, r 8

Limitation—In India, a suit instituted after the expiry of the period of limitation shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence, Limitation Act, 1908, s 3 In England limitation must be specifically set up as a defence

Claim against joint contractors for breach—Where in a suit against joint contractors separate defences are put in, a successful defence pleaded and proved by one only enures for the benefit of all (y)

3. [New. R. S. C., O. 19, r. 17.] It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his written statement to deny generally the grounds alleged by the plaintiff, but the defendant must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he deems it necessary to state the truth, except damages.

Denial to be specific

"Deal specifically with each allegation of fact" - The defendant must deal with each fact which is alleged against him separately, and say that he admits it, denies it, or does not admit it. It is not merely denial with his mouth open, but a non-admission, for [the defendant] is to deal specifically with every allegation of fact which he does not admit the truth. (2) Every allegation of fact is to be taken to be admitted if it is not denied specifically or by necessary implication. (3) It is stated to be not admitted (r. 5)

A defendant ought not to deny, by his written statement, facts which it is neither to his interest nor in his power to dispute or plead to any matter which is not alleged against him (b). See the (c) of the not yet material to a case."

"Except damages"—It is not necessary for a defendant to deny the damages, to deny specifically the damages, it is quite sufficient if he pleads in general that he is not liable for the damages (c). See notes to O. 6, r. 2, "Matters affecting damages."

4. [New R S C, O 19, r. 21.] Where a defendant does not

an allegation of fact in the pleadings, he must not do so evasively, but at the point of substance. Thus, if it is alleged that he received a certain sum of money, it shall not be sufficient to deny that he received that particular amount, but he must deny that he received that sum or any part thereof, or else set out how much he received. And if an allegation is made with details of circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it along with those circumstances.

Evasive denial—Where the plaintiff sets up an agreement, and the defendant denies that the terms of the agreement between himself and the plaintiff were different.

specific denial at all (d). Similarly, where the plaintiff alleges that the defendant offered to the plaintiff's agent a bribe of Rs 500 on 17th July, 1908 at his office, it is an evasive traverse for the defendant to plead the defendant did not offer to the plaintiff's agent a bribe of Rs 500 on 17th July, 1908 at his office if the defendant might have offered any other sum on another day and in another place. Here the point of substance is that a bribe was offered. The details as to the time and place are only circumstances. The defendant should plead that he never offered a bribe of Rs 500 or any other sum (e). Where a denial is evasive, it is to be treated as a denial under O 6 r 17, unless the Court is satisfied that the defendant was entitled to make a full and frank disclosure of the facts (f).

facts which have been expressly admitted by the defendant or which must be taken to have been admitted by him within the meaning of this rule (see Evidence Act, 1872, s. 58). The admission itself being a proof, no other proof is necessary. In the case, however, of facts which may be taken to be admitted by the defendant within the meaning of this rule, the Court may in its discretion require any facts so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission. That is to say, the Court may require the plaintiff to adduce such proof of the fact as it would have been necessary for him to adduce if no such admission had been made. This power which has been conferred upon the Court by the proviso to the rule is not new. The matter, it will be seen, is one of evidence, and a similar power is contained in the Indian Evidence Act I of 1872. The proviso to the rule, in fact, is a reproduction of the proviso to section 58 of the Evidence Act. That section runs as follows:—

“No fact need be proved in any proceeding which the parties thereto or their agents agree to admit at the hearing or which, before the hearing, they agree to admit by any writing under their hands, or which by any rule of pleading in force at the time, they are deemed to have admitted by their pleadings. Provided that the Court may, in its discretion, require the facts admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admissions.”

The proviso to section 58 as well as the proviso to the present rule indicates the intention of the Legislature that pleadings in India ought not to be construed with the same strictness as in England. Upon this principle, the defendant has been allowed under special circumstances to traverse at the hearing allegations in the plaint which he had omitted to traverse in his written statement (f). The rule of pleadings in England is very stringent. According to that rule a defendant who omits to traverse in his defence any allegation of fact in the statement of claim is not allowed to traverse that fact at the hearing. The fact will be taken to be admitted by him, and the Court has no power to require the plaintiff to prove it in any case. Strike out the proviso to the present rule, and you have the rule of English law. In fact the first paragraph of this rule is a reproduction of O 19 r 13 of the English Rules made under the Judicature Acts. The proviso has been added to modify the rigour of that rule.

But though pleadings in India are not to be construed as strictly as in England neither party will be allowed to set up at the hearing an entirely new and inconsistent case. The plaintiff must be held to the state of facts alleged in his plaint or consistent therewith (m). Similarly, the defendant must be held to the state of facts alleged in his written statement or consistent therewith (n).

Omission to file written statement.—This rule applies only where a pleading has been put in by the defendant. Omission to file a written statement does not amount to an admission of the facts stated in the plaint (o).

6. [S III] (1) Where in a suit for the recovery of money the defendant claims to set off against the plaintiff's demand any ascertained sum of money legally recoverable by him from the plaintiff, not exceeding the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, and both parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's

(2) The written statement shall have the same effect as a plaint in a cross-suit so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in respect both of the original claim and of the set-off: but this shall not affect the lien, upon the amount decreed, of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree.

(3) The rules relating to a written statement by a defendant apply to a written statement in answer to a claim of set-off.

Changes in the rule—Sub rule (3) is new See r 9 below

Conditions of applicability of the rule—A defendant may claim a set off under this rule if the following conditions are satisfied, but not otherwise —

I The suit must be one for the recovery of money

II. As regards the amount claimed to be set off—

- (a) it must be an ascertained sum of money [see ill. (c) (1) and (e) and (v)]
- (b) such sum must be legally recoverable;
- (c) it must be recoverable by the defendant or by all the defendants if there is more than one [see ill. (c)]
- (d) it must be recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff or all the plaintiffs if more than one [see ill. (f)]
- (e) it must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit is brought, and
- (f) both parties must fill in the defence and counter-claim as they fill in the plaintiff's suit [see ill. (a) (1) and (b)]

The suit must be one for the recovery of money. In Shankar v. Shankar (p) their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that it would not be a suit for an account was a suit for recovery. In a well-known case, Attalabhai v. Attalabhai, it was held that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for payment of the balance due to the plaintiff by the defendant was a suit for recovery and that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for payment of the balance due to the plaintiff by the defendant was a suit for recovery and that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for payment of the balance due to the plaintiff by the defendant was a suit for recovery.

The amount claimed to be set off must be an ascertained sum of money, and not unliquidated damages. It does not mean a sum limited by the plaintiff. In Shankar v. Shankar (p) it was held that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for payment of the balance due to the plaintiff by the defendant was a suit for recovery and that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for payment of the balance due to the plaintiff by the defendant was a suit for recovery. In Shankar v. Shankar (p) it was held that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for payment of the balance due to the plaintiff by the defendant was a suit for recovery and that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for payment of the balance due to the plaintiff by the defendant was a suit for recovery.

A clerk sues B for employment for a year. B sues A for a year's salary. A left his employment without notice. B claims to set off. The amount to be set off is the salary for the year. A. (3) on the next page.

Equitable set off—There are cases in which the set off is not a legal set off even in respect of an unascertained sum which is a legal set off. In such cases where the cross-claims arise out of the same transaction or are connected by their nature and circumstances that they can be looked upon as part of one transaction. In such cases Courts of Equity in England have held that it would be inequitable to drive the defendant to a separate cross-suit and that he may be allowed to set off though the amount may be unascertained. Such a set off is called an equitable set off as it is allowed by Courts of Equity as distinguished from a legal set off which is allowed by Courts of Common Law in respect only of an ascertained sum. It will thus be seen that the present rule is restricted to a legal set-off for it requires that the amount

II. As regards the amount claimed to be set off—

- (a) it must be an ascertained sum of money [see ill. (c), (d), and (e) above];
- (b) such sum must be legally recoverable;
- (c) it must be recoverable by the defendant or by all the defendants if more than one [see ill. (c)];
- (d) it must be recoverable by the defendant from the plaintiff or all the plaintiffs if more than one [see ill. (d)];
- (e) it must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought, and
- (f) both parties must fill, in the defendant's claim to set off, the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit [see ill. (a), (b), and (h)].

The suit must be one for the recovery of money.—In Nan Karay v. Ka Htau (p), their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that it was doubtful whether a suit for an account was a suit for money. In a subsequent Allahabad case, it was held that a suit for a dissolution of partnership and for partnership accounts with a prayer that such balance as may found due to the plaintiff upon taking the partnership accounts may be paid to him was a suit for money, and that a plea of set off might therefore be raised by the defendant in such suit (q).

The amount claimed to be set off must be an ascertained sum of money, and not unliquidated damages.—The expression "ascertained sum" does not mean a sum admitted by the plaintiff. It is used in contradistinction to unliquidated damages (r). In ill. (d) and (e) the claim is for an ascertained sum, not so in ill. (c) where the amount claimed to be set off is for unliquidated damages. In the case mentioned in ill. (c) the defendant may bring a cross suit against the plaintiff. In ill. (d) the amount claimed to be set off by B is the amount of a decree, and this may be set off against A's claim. It is not necessary that B should have taken any steps to enforce the decree (s). But if B's decree had been a decree for sale on a mortgage there could have been no set off, for such a decree is not for an ascertained sum but for an account to be taken of what is due on the mortgage for principal and interest and costs (t).

A, a clerk, sues B, his employer, for arrears of wages due to him. B alleges that A left his employment without notice and that A is therefore liable to pay damages which he claims to set off. The amount not being ascertained cannot be set off (u). See ill. (3) on the next page.

Equitable set off.—There are cases in which the defendant may be allowed a set off even in respect of an unascertained sum which sounds in damages. These are cases where the cross demands arise out of the same transaction, or are so connected in their nature and circumstances that they can be looked upon as part of one transaction. In such cases Courts of Equity in England have held that it would be inequitable to drive the defendant to a separate cross suit, and that he may be allowed to plead a set off though the amount may be unascertained. Such a set off is called an equitable set-off, as it is allowed by Courts of Equity, as distinguished from a legal set off which is allowed by Courts of Common Law in respect only of an ascertained sum. It will thus be seen that the present rule is restricted to a legal set off, for it requires that the amount to be set off shall be an ascertained sum. The question therefore arises whether an equitable set off can be pleaded in Indian Courts, in other words, if the defendant's claim is for an unascertained sum, but has arisen from the same transaction as the plaintiff's claim the defendant can set off such demand against the plaintiff's claim. It has been held that he can do so not under the provisions of the present rule which is limited to a legal set off, but in the exercise of the general right of a defendant to plead a set off whether it is legal or equitable. The provisions of the Code regulate procedure only and they have not the effect of taking away any right of set off which a defendant may have independently of its provisions. O 20 r 19 (3), recognizes an equitable set off. The leading case on the subject is Clark v Ruthnacaloo (t). In a suit for an account the defendant can claim an equitable set off on payment of Court fee (u). But the right of set-off does not exist when the cross demand relates to a different transaction (x).

The amount claimed to be set off must be "legally recoverable—". The amount claimed by way of set-off under this rule must be "legally recoverable". It follows from this that if the defendant's claim is barred by the law of limitation at the date of the suit, it cannot be pleaded by way of set-off under this rule. (a) But this rule relates only to a legal set-off. The question arises whether a claim by way of equitable set-off can be allowed if it is barred by limitation at the date of the suit. It has been laid down that in cases where the plaintiff's claim and the defendant's claim relate both to the same estate or there is a fiduciary relationship between the parties, the defendant's claim to set-off, though barred by limitation at the date of the suit, may be entertained as an equitable set-off. It has thus been held that in a suit by an heir against his co-heirs for his one-sixth share of the estate of the deceased, the latter are entitled to set off one-sixth of the Government revenue payable by them in respect of the estate, though a separate suit by them to recover from the plaintiff the proportionate part of the revenue payable by him would be barred by limitation (b). Similarly in mortgage suits sums are allowed to be set off in taking accounts of the mortgage, even though barred by limitation (c). Upon the same principle it has been held that a trustee in possession of the trust estate is entitled to set up his right to be indemnified out of the trust estate when called upon for an account although his right to set off the amount claimed by him by way of indemnity is barred by limitation (d). In a recent case (e) the High Court of Madras held that in a suit by a lessor for rent it is not open to the lessee to claim by way of equitable set-off an unpaid claim for damages which was barred at the date of the suit. See Seetha Bai Ayyar v. S. S. A. Anon. An exception to this rule (namely, that a time barred claim cannot be pleaded by way of equitable set-off) has been recognized in some cases. Where there is a fiduciary relationship between the parties as in the case of trustee and cestui que trust and there is a co-extensibility even barred claims may be taken into account in adjusting the final accounts. This exception has been extended in some of the decided cases in India to mortgages presumably on the ground that there is accountability between the parties. See Prasanna Bai v. Venkatesh Rao (f), Chidambaram Pillai v. Krishnaswami Pillai (g) and Isaiah Singh v. Perumanil Singh (h). It is not necessary to say now whether these cases have been rightly decided. I see no reason for extending the exception to suits between a lessor and a lessee.

In a Madras case (J) an agent used his principal's money that he had found in his pocket taking for his own use. The defendant pleaded in his written statement that money would be found in his pocket taking accounts and in the case of a decree for such sum as might be found to him. The defendant's claim was that he was entitled to the sum as it was found in the late of the written statement. It was held that if the sum was found to be all well as an equitable set off to the plaintiff's claim, then the defendant was not entitled to a decree for the sum found to him as his sum was found in the late of the written statement. It was a decree for the sum found to him as it was found to enable the defendant to equal the plaintiff's claim. It was held to be taken by the High Court of Bombay (J) in an Allahabad case (G) that the principle of the opinion that the set off is to be made at the time of the trial and not merely to the extent of the sum found to the plaintiff.

Costs awarded to a tenant in a suit brought against him by the benamidar of the landlord cannot be set off by the tenant in a subsequent suit for rent brought against him by the landlord. The costs having been awarded against the benamidar, they are not legally recoverable from the landlord (j)

A separate debt cannot be set off against a joint and several debt.—Thus in ill (g) B cannot set off the debt due to him alone by A, for it is a separate debt, while the suit is to recover a joint and several debt. It has similarly been held that in a suit by a company against its directors, no individual director is entitled to set off the amount due to him alone from the company (l)

The amount claimed to be set off must not exceed the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is brought.—The valuation of a set off for the purpose of jurisdiction must be taken as relating to the whole amount pleaded as a set off, and without reference to any portion of the plaintiff's claim admitted by the defendant. A sues B in a Presidency Small Cause Court for Rs 1,000. B claims to set off a sum of Rs 2,700 and claims judgment for Rs 1,700 after giving A credit for Rs 1,000, admitted by B to be due to A. The Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try the claim as to set off, the value of the amount claimed as set off being above Rs 2,000 (i)

A plea of payment is distinct from a plea of set off. A sues B to recover Rs 1,500 in a Court of which the pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 2,000. B alleges that he has paid Rs 1,000 to A on account, and admits his liability for the balance of Rs 500, but he claims a set off of Rs 1,700 being the amount due on a promissory note passed to him by A, and asks for a decree for Rs 1,200. The amount claimed to be set off is not Rs 1,000 plus Rs 1,700 = Rs 2,700, but Rs 1,700 only, and it is therefore within the jurisdiction of the Court (m)

Not only the amount, but also the nature of the set off, must be within the cognizance of the Court in which the suit is brought. Hence a Court cannot entertain a claim to a set off unless such claim, if made the subject of a suit, would fall within its jurisdiction (n). But it has been held that as a set off is a ground of defence a Court may entertain a set off on a cause of action arising outside the local limits of its territorial jurisdiction (o)

Same character.—Ills (a) and (b) are cases in which the parties do not fill the same character (p)

A suit is brought by a Hindu son as the heir and representative of his father to recover from B a debt due by B to the father. B claims to set off a debt due to him by A's father. B may do so, for both the parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit (q). Similarly in a suit by A against B for an account for goods supplied by A to B B may claim a set off of the amount due to him from A in respect of wages as A's gumasta (r)

Set-off in winding up proceedings—Though a director has no right to set off a debt due to him from the company against a claim made against him by the liquidator under s. 214 of the Indian Companies Act, 1882 [Ind. Co. Act, 1912, s. 215] which provides a summary remedy (i), he is entitled to set off the amount due to him if a regular suit is brought against him by the company in respect of that claim (u). In a suit by a liquidator against a debtor of the company, the debtor is entitled to set off the amount of a fixed deposit made by him with the company provided the deposit had matured at the date of the suit, though it had not matured at the date of the order for winding up the company (v), but he cannot set off a deposit in the name of a firm of which he is a partner (w).

Solicitor's lien for costs—Before the year 1832 the Courts in England had a discretionary power as regards set off and a discretion as to the terms upon which they would allow it (y). This discretion was taken away under the General Rules of 1832 and the General Rules of 1853. Rule 93 of the General Rules of 1832 was in these words: "No set-off of damages or costs between parties shall be allowed to the prejudice of the attorney's lien for costs in the particular suit against which the set-off is sought; provided nevertheless that interlocutory costs in the same suit, awarded to the adverse party may be deducted." This rule was reproduced in identical terms in 1853. That state of things continued until the Judicature Act, 1873, came into force. O. 65, r. 14, made under that Act, was directly contrary to the previous rule. The previous rule allowed no set off; O. 65, r. 14, says that a set off may be allowed. The result is that in England the Courts under O. 65, r. 14, exercise now in matters of set off the discretion which was taken away by the General Rules of 1832 (z).

See 111 of the Code of 1877 provided that the Court may pronounce a final judgment in the same suit both on the original and on the cross claim but it shall not affect the lien upon the amount decreed of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree. This provision was reproduced in sec. 111 of the Code of 1882, and it is reproduced in the present rule also. It is clear from the language of this rule that the Courts of this country have no discretion in the matter of a solicitor's lien in cases falling within this rule.

A solicitor has at common law a lien for his costs over property recovered or preserved or the proceeds of any judgments obtained for the client by his exertions (a) The lien attaches to property of every description, such as, for instance, money payable to the client under a judgment including costs ordered to be paid to the client, or the proceeds of an execution in the hands of a Sheriff, money paid into Court, whether as security for costs or by way of defence, or otherwise, and money received by way of compromise (b) The lien does not extend to general costs for all business done by a solicitor for his client, but only to costs of the suit in which the property has been acquired or preserved by his exertions (c) Where there are assets of a partnership in the hands of a receiver appointed in a partnership suit the solicitors engaged in that suit are entitled to a lien on those assets in priority to the creditors of the partnership. But a solicitor's lien does not prevail against the claim of a mortgagee who advances money to the client to enable him to pay off prior encumbrances on the property in suit (d).

It is to be borne in mind that the solicitor's lien in the High Courts of India is governed exclusively by the law prevailing in English Courts before the passing of 23 and 24 Vict. ch. 127 by which that lien was very much extended (e). At common law a solicitor had no lien on realty. Lien on realty was first conferred by the above statute. The High Court of Calcutta has held that in India an attorney is entitled to a lien on immovable property recovered for his client in the suit (f). The High Court of Bombay has held otherwise (g) and this view seems to be correct.

A solicitor's lien for his costs extends to all the moneys of his client which are lying in Court. It makes no difference that the moneys are brought into Court by attachment at the instance of a decree holder. The lien, however, does not exist when moneys are once distributed to the creditors of the client. So long as the moneys are in Court the Court has power to direct payment to the solicitor of his costs out of the moneys (h). A obtains a decree against B. C who has obtained a decree against A attaches the amount of the decree obtained by A against B in B's hands. A's attorney is entitled to a lien for his costs on the sum so attached but the only order that can be made in such a case is an order to the defendant not to pay the sum attached to any one without notice to the attorney (i). A solicitor's lien does not entitle him to a set off against a general balance of an account due by him (j).

Parties to an action may compromise without the intervention of the solicitor but there must be no intention to deprive the solicitor of his charges and the Courts will exercise its equitable interference to enable a solicitor to proceed in the action for his costs though no notice of his lien has been given in cases where it is made out that there is an intention to cheat the solicitor, but unless there has been notice or collusion the unfair to any of the parties or compel the Courts to go into complicated questions of fact, especially when charges of fraud or collusion are made or where a solicitor has deliberately taken additional fresh security for the purpose of securing his costs and has not relied on his lien under the summary jurisdiction. In such a case the Court will refer the solicitor to a regular suit (k).

opposite party of such costs. Thus a case where the original client was dead and it appeared that his legal representatives were not men of substance and that they were unable to pay was held by the High Court of Calcutta to be a proper one for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to make a direct order for payment of costs to the solicitor by the opposite party (l).

- 6 of a receiver appointed in a partnership suit, the solicitors engaged in that suit are entitled to a lien on those assets in priority to the creditors of the partnership. But a solicitor's lien does not prevail against the claim of a mortgagee who advances money to the client to enable him to pay off prior encumbrances on the property in suit (d)

It is to be borne in mind that the solicitor's lien in the High Courts of India is governed exclusively by the law prevailing in English Courts before the passing of 23 and 24 Vict. ch. 127 by which that lien was very much extended (e). At common law a solicitor had no lien on realty. Lien on realty was first conferred by the above statute. The High Court of Calcutta has held that in India an attorney is entitled to a lien on immovable property recovered for his client in the suit (f). The High Court of Bombay has held otherwise (g), and this view seems to be correct.

A solicitor's lien for his costs extends to all the moneys of his client which are lying in Court. It makes no difference that the moneys are brought into Court by attachment at the instance of a decree holder. The lien, however, does not exist when moneys are once distributed to the creditors of the client. So long as the moneys are in Court, the Court has power to direct payment to the solicitor of his costs out of the moneys (h). A obtains a decree against B. C who has obtained a decree against A attaches the amount of the decree obtained by A against B in B's hands. A's attorney is entitled to a lien for his costs on the sum so attached, but the only order that can be made in such a case is an order to the defendant not to pay the sum attached to any one without notice to the attorney (i). A solicitor's lien does not entitle him to a set off against a general balance of an account due by him (l).

Parties to an action may compromise without the intervention of the solicitor, but there must be no intention to deprive the solicitor of his charges, and the Courts will exercise its equitable interference to enable a solicitor to proceed in the action for his costs, though no notice of his lien has been given, in cases where it is made out that there is an intention to cheat the solicitor, but unless there has been notice or collusion, the solicitor, if the client has compromised, can look only to his client for his costs (j).

Although the High Courts possess a summary jurisdiction to enforce a solicitor's lien upon the fruits of his exertion, it will not do so when the circumstances would make it unfair to any of the parties or compel the Courts to go into complicated questions of fact, especially when charges of fraud or collusion are made or where a solicitor has deliberately taken additional fresh security for the purpose of securing his costs and has not relied on his lien under the summary jurisdiction. In such a case the Court will refer the solicitor to a regular suit (k).

On an application by a solicitor made in a suit in which costs have been awarded to his client against the opposite party, the Court has jurisdiction to enforce, in a proper case, the solicitor's lien by making a direct order for payment to the solicitor by the opposite party of such costs. Thus a case where the original client was dead and it appeared that his legal representatives were not men of substance and that they were unable to pay, was held by the High Court of Calcutta to be a proper one for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to make a direct order for payment of costs to the solicitor by the opposite party (l).

By a decree passed in a suit for redemption of a mortgage brought by A against B, A is directed to pay the mortgage debt to B, but B is directed to pay to A the costs of the suit. The High Court of Calcutta held that the suit being one for redemption, B's attorney is not entitled to a lien for his costs on the whole of the mortgage money, but to the mortgage money less the costs payable by B to A, which costs A is entitled to set-off against the mortgage money (m). See O 20, r 19, and O 21, r 19.

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that where A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1,451, and B subsequently obtains a decree against A for Rs 1,000 A is entitled to have satisfaction of B's decree entered, notwithstanding the lien of B's attorney for his costs. Reliance was placed in the judgment on the fact that B's attorney had not stated that there was no chance of recovering his costs from his client [B] and that the decree which B had against A was the only property out of which his claim could be satisfied (n). This case was approved by the Bombay High Court in a case where it was held that an attorney's lien should not prevail over the rights of the parties themselves and that in India it was a matter of discretion whether an attorney's lien should or should not intercept a set off between the parties (o). But in a case where a petitioning creditor was indebted to the insolvent for costs it was held that the attorney's lien for such costs prevails over the petitioning creditor's right to set off such costs against the debt due to him by the insolvent (p). Again it has been held that a solicitor's lien for costs prevails over the claim of an attaching creditor (q).

Appeal.—Unless the whole suit is disposed of, an appeal does not lie from an order disposing of a defendant's claim to set off made under this rule, even though the question as to that claim may have been tried as a preliminary issue. Such an order is not a preliminary decree. See O 20, r 19, which shows that there should be only one decree drawn up in a suit in which a set off is claimed (r).

Res judicata.—A defendant is under no obligation to claim a set off. His omission therefore, to do so does not preclude him from bringing a separate suit in respect thereof (s).

Counterclaim.—Though the Code does not provide for counterclaims, there is nothing to prevent a Court from treating the counterclaim as a plaint in a cross suit, and hearing the two suits together, provided the requisite court fee on the counterclaim has been paid (t).

7. [New. R. S. C., O. 20, r. 7.] Where the defendant relies upon several distinct grounds of defence or set off founded upon separate and distinct facts, they shall be stated, as far as may be, separately and distinctly.

claiming a set-off may be raised by the defendant or plaintiff, as the case may be, in his written statement.

See r 9 below

9. [S. 112.] No pleading subsequent to the written statement of a defendant other than by way of defence to a set-off shall be presented except by the leave of the Court and upon such terms as the Court thinks fit, but the Court may at any time require a written statement or additional written statement from any of the parties and fix a time for presenting the same.

Additional written statement—The additional written statement should not set up a totally new case or state facts at direct variance with the original written statement so as completely to change the issue in the case (u) See O 6, r 7, and notes.

10. [S 113.] Where any party from whom a written statement is so required fails to present the same within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may pronounce judgment against him, or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

Decree against defendant where no written statement filed—This rule enables the Court to pronounce judgment against the defendant on failure to file a written statement such as is required by r 9. Failure to file a written statement in other cases does not come within this rule (v), and the Court cannot in those cases pass a decree against the defendant unless the plaintiff proves his case (w). In a Bombay case the defendant was served with a summons which required him to file his written statement within four weeks from the date of service. The date fixed for the hearing was 27th November 1907. The defendant failed to file his written statement within four weeks. It was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to apply for and obtain an ex parte decree before the returnable date of the summons, namely, 27th November 1907 (x).

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule pronouncing judgment against a party [O 43, r 1, cl (b)]

ORDER IX.

Appearance of Parties and Consequence of Non-appearance

1 [S. 96.] On the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer, the parties shall be in attendance at the Court-house in person or by their respective pleaders, and the suit shall then be heard unless the hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court.

2. [S. 97.] Where on the day so fixed it is found that the summons has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed :

Dismissal of suit where summons not served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay costs

Provided that no such order shall be made although the summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the day fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

Defendant.—The expression "defendant" in this rule does not include the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant (v).

Appeal—The order or dismissal under this rule is a form of dismissal for default. It is not a decree [s. 2 (2)], and no appeal lies from it. The plaintiff's remedy is under r. 4 of this Order (z).

Revision—The Court has no power under this rule to dismiss the suit in a case where the plaintiff has paid the requisite Court fee, for the service of the summons, but the office does not issue the summons in time. If the Court dismisses the suit in such a case, the High Court has power to set aside the order in revision (a)

3. [S. 98.] Where neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed.

Where neither party appears suit to be dismissed

Where neither party appears — A sues B and C. A and C do not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, but B appears. The Court makes an order dismissing the suit. As between A and B the order is one under r. 8, so as to attract the applicability of r. 9. But as between A and C, the order is one under the present rule so that r. 4 applies, and not r. 9 (b).

If the plaintiff appears on the date fixed for the hearing, but the defendant does not appear, and the suit is dismissed owing to failure on the part of the plaintiff to adduce evidence in support of his claim, the dismissal is on the merits and not under this rule (c) claiming a set-off may be raised by the defendant or plaintiff, as the case may be, in his written statement.

This rule does not apply after a preliminary decree has been passed and a suit cannot be dismissed for default of appearance on an application for a final mortgage decree (d)

"May make an order that the suit be dismissed."—These words have been substituted for the words "the suit shall be dismissed" [Code of 1882, s 98] to make it clear that the dismissal under this rule is not a decree, but an order. See s 2 (2).

See r 9 below

9. [S. 112.] No pleading subsequent to the written statement of a defendant other than by way of defence to a set-off shall be presented except by the leave of the Court and upon such terms as the Court thinks fit, but the Court may at any time require a written statement or additional written statement from any of the parties and fix a time for presenting the same.

Subsequent pleadings

Additional written statement.—The additional written statement should not set up a totally new case or state facts at direct variance with the original written statement so as completely to change the issue in the case (u) See O 6, r 7, and notes.

10. [S 113.] Where any party from whom a written statement is so required fails to present the same within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may pronounce judgment against him, or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

Procedure when party fails to present written statement called for by Court

Decree against defendant where no written statement filed—This rule enables the Court to pronounce judgment against the defendant on failure to file a written statement such as is required by r 9 Failure to file a written statement in other cases does not come within this rule (v), and the Court cannot in those cases pass a decree against the defendant unless the plaintiff proves his case (w) In a Bombay case the defendant was served with a summons which required him to file his written statement within four weeks from the date of service The date fixed for the hearing was 27th November 1907 The defendant failed to file his written statement within four weeks It was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to apply for and obtain an ex parte decree before the returnable date of the summons, namely, 27th November 1907 (x)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule pronouncing judgment against a party [O 43, r 1, cl (b)]

ORDER IX.

Appearance of Parties and Consequence of Non-appearance.

O. 9, r. 1

1 [S. 96.] On the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer, the parties shall be in attendance at the Court-house in person or by their respective pleaders, and the suit shall then be heard unless the

Parties to appear on day fixed in summons for defendant to appear and answer hearing is adjourned to a future day fixed by the Court.

2. [S. 97.] Where on the day so fixed it is found that the summons has not been served upon the defendant in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court-fee or postal charges (if any) chargeable for such service, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed :

Dismissal of suit where summons not served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay costs

Provided that no such order shall be made although the summons has not been served upon the defendant, if on the day fixed for him to appear and answer he attends in person or by agent when he is allowed to appear by agent.

Defendant—The expression "defendant" in this rule does not include the guardian ad litem of a minor defendant (y).

Appeal—The order or dismissal under this rule is a form of dismissal for default. It is not a decree [s. 2 (2)], and no appeal lies from it. The plaintiff's remedy is under r. 4 of this Order (z).

Revision—The Court has no power under this rule to dismiss the suit in a case where the plaintiff has paid the requisite Court fee, for the service of the summons, but the office does not issue the summons in time. If the Court dismisses the suit in such a case, the High Court has power to set aside the order in revision (a).

3. [S. 98.] Where neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing, the Court may make an order that the suit be dismissed

Where neither party appears dismissed

Where neither party appears—A sues B and C. A and C do not appear when the suit is called on for hearing, but B appears. The Court makes an order dismissing the suit. As between A and B the order is one under r. 8, so as to attract the applicability of r. 9. But as between A and C, the order is one under the present rule so that r. 4 applies, and not r. 9 (b).

If the plaintiff appears, the order is one under r. 8.

This rule does not apply after a preliminary decree has been passed and a suit cannot be dismissed for default of appearance on an application for a final mortgage decree (d).

"May make an order that the suit be dismissed"—These words have been substituted for the words "the suit shall be dismissed" [Code of 1882, s. 98] to make it clear that the dismissal under this rule is not a decree, but an order. See s. 2 (2).

4. [S. 99.]

Plaintiff may bring fresh suit or Court may restore suit to file

Where a suit is dismissed under rule 2 or rule 3, the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit or he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and if he satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for his not paying the court-fee and postal charges (if any) required within the time fixed before the issue of the summons, or for his non-appearance, as the case may be, the Court shall make an order setting aside the dismissal and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit.

Sufficient excuse for plaintiff's non-appearance.—A bona fide mistake which is not unreasonable is a sufficient excuse within the meaning of this rule (c). If the order of dismissal is set aside, the defendant is entitled to notice of the date fixed for the hearing of the suit (cl).

Interlocutory orders.—When the suit is restored, all interlocutory orders are also restored in the absence of something expressly appearing to the contrary (c2).

Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution—See notes to r. 9 below under the same head.

5. [S. 99A.]

Dismissal of suit where plaintiff after summons returned unserved fails for three months to apply for fresh summons

(1) Where, after a summons has been issued to the defendant, or to one of several defendants, and returned unserved, the plaintiff fails, for a period of three months from the date of the return made to the Court by the officer ordinarily certifying to the Court returns made by the serving officers, to apply for the issue of a fresh summons the Court shall make an order that the suit be dismissed as against such defendant, unless the plaintiff has within the said period satisfied the Court that—

- (a) he has failed after using his best endeavours to discover the residence of the defendant who has not been served, or
- (b) such defendant is avoiding service of process, or
- (c) there is any other sufficient cause for extending the time, in which case the Court may extend the time for making such application for such period as it thinks fit.

(2) In such case the plaintiff may (subject to the law of limitation) bring a fresh suit.

return made by the serving officer or from the date of return made by the officer whose duty it is to certify to the Court returns made by the serving officer. It was held that the period was to be calculated from the date of return made by the latter officer and not that made by the serving officer (f). The words italicized above were added to give effect to that decision. The procedure is this after the writ of summons is issued it is delivered to an officer of the Court for service on the defendant. The officer then delivers the summons to the serving officer whose duty it is to serve summonses. After effecting service the serving officer has to endorse on the original summons a return stating the manner in which the summons was served. If for any reason the summons cannot be served upon the defendant the serving officer has to make a return to that effect. This return is countersigned by the officer to whom the summons was delivered by the Court and the summons is then returned by him to the Court. It is from the date of the co intersignature that the period of three months is to be calculated and not from the date of the return made by the serving officer.

' Make an order that the suit be dismissed —These words were substituted in the Code of 1908 for the words may dismiss the suit which occurred in s 99 A of the Code of 1882 in order to make it clear that a dismissal under this rule is not a decree but an order. See s 2 (2)

Appeals —This rule does not apply to appeals (g)

6. [S. 100] (1) Where the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear when the suit is called on for hearing then—

Procedure when only plaintiff appears

When summons duly served

(a) If it is proved that the summons was duly served, the Court may proceed ex parte,

When summons not duly served

(b) if it is not proved that the summons was duly served, the Court shall direct a second summons to be issued and served on the defendant,

When summons served but not in due time

(c) if it is proved that the summons was served on the defendant, but not in sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on the day fixed in the summons the Court shall postpone the hearing of the suit to a future day to be fixed by the Court, and shall direct notice of such day to be given to the defendant

(2) Where it is owing to the plaintiff's default that the summons was not duly served or was not served in sufficient time, the Court shall order the plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by the postponement.

Ex parte decree—If the defendant does not appear, and it is proved that the summons was duly served upon him, the Court may proceed ex parte. If the plaintiff makes out a prima facie case, the Court may pass a decree for the plaintiff. If the plaintiff fails to make out a prima facie case, the Court may dismiss the plaintiff's suit. Every Judge in dealing with an ex parte case should take good care to see that the plaintiff's case is at least prima facie proved. The mere absence of the defendant does not of itself justify the presumption that the plaintiff's case is true (A). The Court has no jurisdiction to pass an ex parte decree without any evidence being given by or on behalf of the plaintiff (s) and the provisions of O 8, r 10, only apply when the Court has under O 8, r 9, required the defendant to file a written statement (j). The Court has no power to pass an ex parte decree before the returnable date mentioned in the summons (i).

Ex parte decree for amount in excess of sum actually due—If the plaintiff obtains an ex parte decree for a sum in excess of that which is due to him, the defendant is entitled ex debito justitiae to have such decree set aside (l) except where the error was due to an accidental slip within the meaning of s 152 in which case the Court may on the plaintiff's application allow the decree to be amended by reducing it to the proper amount (m).

Subsequent appearance of defendant pending suit—When a defendant files a written statement but does not appear on the day fixed for the hearing and it is in consequence declared ex parte, he should not be precluded from appearing at a later stage of the suit while it is still pending, he should be allowed to come in at the stage which the suit has reached (n).

"Appears."—As to the meaning of the word 'appears,' see note to r 9 below, 'Appearance'

Remedies open to a defendant in the case of an ex parte decree—See note to r 13 below, 'Remedies in case of ex parte decree'

7. [S. 101.] Where the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance

This rule was applied in the undermentioned case (o)

establish his case by reason of non attendance of his witnesses (b) or for want of evidence (c), the dismissal is not one under r 8, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the remedy provided by this rule

There is a conflict of decisions whether if a plaintiff does not apply under this rule within the 30 days allowed by law, he is entitled to apply for a review under O 47, r 1, after the expiration of that period. The Patna High Court has held (d), following an earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court (e), that he is not, on the other hand, the Calcutta High Court has held in a later case that he is (f). The ground of the Patna decision is that to allow a review in such a case would be an evasion of the rule of limitation. See note below "Limitation"

"Appearance."—A plaintiff or a defendant will be deemed to have "appeared" on the day fixed for the hearing of the suit, if he appears—

- (1) in person, or
- (2) by a pleader either himself duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit or accompanied by some person able to answer such questions [O 5, r 1, sub r (2)]

First, as regards Appearance of a party in person—The mere presence of a party in Court at the hearing is sufficient to constitute "appearance" within the meaning of this Order. It does not matter for what purpose he appears or what action he takes on the appearance. A plaintiff appearing and applying for an adjournment on the ground that his witnesses are not present will be deemed to have appeared. If the application is refused, and the suit is dismissed owing to his inability to establish his case in the absence of witnesses, the dismissal is not one under r 8 for the plaintiff did appear, and he cannot therefore avail himself of the provisions of this rule (g). Similarly a defendant appearing and applying for an adjournment on the ground that he had no time to prepare his case, will be deemed to have appeared. If the application is refused, and a decree is passed against him owing to his unpreparedness to defend the suit the decree is not ex parte under r 6, for he did appear and he cannot therefore avail himself of the provisions of r 13 below (h).

Next, as regards Appearance of a party by a pleader—Different considerations arise when a party is represented by a pleader. Appearance by a pleader within the meaning of this Order does not, like appearance by a party in person mean mere presence in Court, it means appearance by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit or by a pleader accompanied by some person able to answer all such questions" [O 5, r 1]. Hence a party cannot be said to "appear" by a pleader, if the pleader appears at the hearing and states that though he has filed his vakalatnama, he has not received any instructions from his client with regard to the case, and that he is therefore unable to go on with the suit (i). Similarly a party cannot be said to "appear" by a pleader if the pleader has no instructions other than to apply for an adjournment, and, on the adjournment being refused, withdraws

O. 9, r. 9 from the suit, stating that he has no further instructions to go on with the suit (j) In neither case can it be said that the party appeared by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit. But what if the party himself is also present in person in Court at the time? According to the Madras (k) and Patna (l) and Calcutta (m) High Courts, it makes no difference that the party himself is present in Court for mere physical appearance does not constitute "appearance." According to the Bombay High Court, he must be deemed to have "appeared," the reason given being that if the pleader is not duly instructed to answer material questions, the Court may, under O 10 r 1, ask questions relating to the suit to the party himself and may examine his witnesses (n).

A pleader appears at the hearing on behalf of a plaintiff and applies for an adjournment on the ground that he had no time to prepare himself with the case or on the ground that the papers being left with his senior he could not proceed with the case. The application is refused and the pleader being unable to go on with the case, the suit is dismissed. Can it be said under these circumstances that the plaintiff appeared by a pleader? It has been held in the undermentioned cases that the plaintiff must be held to have appeared by a pleader, and that the order of dismissal could not therefore be said to be one made under r 8 so as to entitle the plaintiff to apply under this rule (o).

"Suit.—An application under sec 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 is not a 'suit' within the meaning of r 8 or this rule (p).

Fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action—If the plaintiff fails to appear, and the suit is in consequence dismissed under r 8 the dismissal does not operate as res judicata (q). In such a case, however the plaintiff is precluded by this rule from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of a contract, and the suit is dismissed for default of A's appearance, A cannot bring a fresh suit to recover damages for breach of the same contract. A's only remedy in such a case is to apply for a review, or to apply under this rule for an order to set aside the dismissal. But if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the first suit, the subsequent suit will not be barred under this rule. Thus the dismissal for default of a suit by a reversioner against a Hindu widow for an injunction to restrain her from making a gift of immovable property inherited by her from her husband is no bar to a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff against the widow for a declaration that a gift of the property made by the widow after the first suit is inoperative (r). Similarly if A sues B for the rent of certain lands and the suit is dismissed for default of A's appearance under r 8 the dismissal does not operate as a bar to a suit by A against B for enhanced rent (s) or for

This rule does not apply to a suit for partition The reason is that the right to enforce partition is a legal incident of a joint tenancy, and as long as such tenancy subsists any of the joint tenants may sue for partition of the joint property (x)

The dismissal under r 8 of a suit filed by the Voluntary Liquidator against a shareholder for the recovery of money alleged to be due to the company is a bar to a subsequent application by the Official Liquidator to have the name of the defendant placed on the list of contributories in respect of the same claim (y)

The rule does not apply when an application for probate is dismissed for default (z) nor when an adjudication order is annulled under sec 43 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 for default of appearance of the insolvent on the day fixed for hearing his application for discharge (a)

Fresh suit by plaintiff's assignee—Does the dismissal of a suit under rule 8 preclude an assignee of the plaintiff from suing on the same cause of action? This question was discussed in a Patna case and answered in the affirmative, but the judgment proceeded on the ground that the assignee had taken advantage of the procedure under rule 9 and had substituted himself on the record of plaintiff's appeal from an order rejecting plaintiff's application under rule 9 to set aside the dismissal (b)

Minor plaintiff—A fresh suit notwithstanding the provisions of this rule may be instituted in respect of the same cause of action where the first suit was brought by a next friend on behalf of a minor and was dismissed under r 8 for default of the next friend's appearance owing to gross want of care and diligence on his part (c) See notes to r 13 below. Ex parte decree against minor defendant

Sufficient cause—What is sufficient cause is in each case a question of fact—

(1) A plaintiff left the Court house, believing that a part heard case which preceded his case would occupy some time, he returned in about half an hour, and found that his suit had been called on and dismissed owing to his absence He then applied to set aside the order of dismissal Hell, refusing the application, that the above circumstances did not amount to sufficient cause for non appearance Manilal v Gulam Husain (1889) 13 Bom 12

O. 9, r. 9 from the suit, stating that he has no further instructions to go on with the suit (j) In neither case can it be said that the party appeared by a pleader duly instructed and able to answer all material questions relating to the suit. But what if the party himself is also present in person in Court at the time? According to the Madras (l) and Patna (h) and Calcutta (i) High Courts it makes no difference that the party himself is present in Court for mere physical appearance does not constitute appearance. According to the Bombay High Court he must be deemed to have appeared the reason given being that if the pleader is not duly instructed to answer material questions the Court may under O. 10 r. 1, ask questions relating to the suit to the party himself and may examine his witnesses (n).

A pleader appears at the hearing on behalf of a plaintiff and applies for an adjournment on the ground that he had no time to prepare himself with the case, or on the ground that the papers being left with his senior he could not proceed with the case. (3) In two cases the High Court of Bombay said that the rule of practice to be observed in the subordinate Courts in the Bombay Presidency is that when a party arrives late before the Judge, and finds that his suit has been dismissed before his arrival, he is entitled to have his suit restored, though there may be no "sufficient cause" for his late arrival, on payment of such costs as may have been incurred by reason of his default by the defendant. *Chhotalal v. Inherent power to restore suit dismissed for default—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (e), Bombay (f), and Rangoon (g) that this rule does not take away the inherent power of a Court to restore a suit dismissed for default, if there be a just and reasonable cause for restoring it, even if no "sufficient cause" is shown within the meaning of this rule for the plaintiff's non appearance. Thus where a case was called on at 12 o'clock, and the plaintiff's pleader being under the impression that the case would be taken up at 2 o'clock was engaged in other cases in other Courts, and the plaintiff himself was waiting in his pleader's room and the suit was dismissed for default of appearance, it was held that though there was no "sufficient cause" for non appearance within the meaning of this rule, the case was one in which the Court should in the exercise of its inherent powers restore the suit to the file (h). Similarly where a plaintiff believing that his case which was fourteenth on the list would not be reached immediately did not attend the Court, but went to bring his principal the meaning of this section, the Court had inherent power to restore the suit having regard to the special facts of the case (i).

Appeal.—An appeal lies under O. 43, r. 1 (c), from an order rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) made under this rule, but no appeal lies from an order granting the application (j). As regards an order rejecting an application to set aside the dismissal of a suit made by a single Judge sitting on the original side of the High Court, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that it is appealable not only under O. 43, r. 1 (c), but also as a "judgment" or "order" of the Court (k). an application to restore a suit dismissed under this rule is open to revision, but in a case where the order was on terms that the plaintiff shall pay the defendant's costs and the defendant adopted the order by accepting payment or costs it was held that he was precluded from attacking it (m)

Where an application is made by a plaintiff under this rule, but the application is dismissed for default, no appeal lies from the order of dismissal (n)

Revision—If there is no sufficient cause for setting aside the dismissal, the Court cannot do so as a matter of grace because it involves a heavy claim and if it does so, the High Court will set aside the order in revision, even though the suit has been tried and decreed (o) A suit cannot be dismissed after a preliminary decree has been passed, but if such an order is made and the application to restore the suit is rejected the order of rejection is subject to revision (p)

Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution—As has already been stated in the notes on sec 141, the provisions of O 9 do not apply to proceedings in execution. Therefore, if an application for execution is dismissed for default, it cannot be restored under this rule (q) It is competent, however, to the applicant to present a fresh application for execution (r) The High Court of Lahore has held that if an application for execution is dismissed for default, the Court may restore it in the exercise of its inherent power under sec 151 of the Code (s) The Allahabad High Court has also held that an execution application dismissed for default may be restored under the inherent power (s1) A different view has been taken by the High Courts of Patna and Madras (t)

An application to set aside a sale on the ground of irregularity under O 21, r 90, is also a proceeding in execution and the provisions of this Order do not apply to it. A judgment debtor, whose property is sold in execution of a decree, applies under O 21, r 90, to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in conducting the sale. Notice of the hearing of the application is given to B, the decree holder and to C, the auction purchaser. Three cases might occur. First, where none of the parties appears at the hearing of the application and the application is dismissed for non-appearance. Secondly, where B and C appear at the hearing but A does not, and the application is dismissed for A's non-appearance. Thirdly, where A alone appears at the hearing, and an ex parte order is made granting A's application and setting aside the sale. Since O 9 does not apply, the dismissal of the application in the first case cannot be treated as a dismissal under O 9, r 3, and the provisions of O 9, r 4, do not apply (u) Similarly the dismissal in the second case cannot be treated as a dismissal under O 9, r 8 and the provisions of O 9, r 9, do not apply (v) For the same reason the ex parte order made in the last case cannot be treated as one under O 9, r 6 and the provisions of O 9, r 13, do not apply

O. 9, r. 9 inform the master, and no one appearing for the plaintiff, the suit was dismissed, it was held that the absence was caused by a bona fide mistake, and the suit was restored on payment by the attorney of the costs of the hearing The Oriental Corporation v The Mercantile Corporation, Ltd (1860) 2 B H C 267

(3) In two cases the High Court of Bombay said that the rule of practice to be observed in the subordinate Courts in the Bombay Presidency is that when a party arrives late before the Judge, and finds that his suit has been dismissed before his arrival, he is entitled to have his suit restored, though there may be no "sufficient cause" for his late arrival, on payment of such costs as may have been incurred by reason of his default by the defendant Chhotalal v Ambalal (1925) 27 Bom LP 685 89 IC 225 (23) A B 423, Sorabji v Ramjilal (1924) 26 Bom LR 321, 80 IC 237, (24) A B 392 In a later case it was held that there was no such hard and fast rule, and that the Court had a discretion in each case to deal with the matter Currimbhoy v Moos (1929) 31 Bom LR 468, 117 IC 593, (29) A B 250

(4) A litigant should not be deprived of a hearing unless there has been something equivalent to misconduct or gross negligence on his part Arunachala v Subbaramiah (1923) 46 Mad 60, 63, 68 IC 971, (23) A M 63 [delay caused by inevitable accident] As to negligence of pleader see the undermentioned case (d)

Inherent power to restore suit dismissed for default—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (e), Bombay (f), and Rangoon (g) that this rule does not take away the inherent power of a Court to restore a suit dismissed for default, if there be a just and reasonable cause for restoring it, even if no "sufficient cause" is shown within the meaning of this rule for the plaintiff's non appearance. Thus where a case was called on at 12 o'clock, and the plaintiff's pleader being under the impression that the case would be taken up at 2 o'clock was engaged in other cases in other Courts, and the plaintiff himself of appearance, it

ance within the exercise of its inherent powers restore the suit to the file (h) Similarly where a plaintiff believing that his case which was fourteenth on the list would not be reached immediately did not attend the Court but went to bring his principal

Appeal—An appeal lies under O 43, r 1 (c) from an order rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) made under this rule, but no appeal lies from an order granting the application (j) As regards an order rejecting an application to set aside the dismissal of a suit made by a single Judge sitting on the original side of the High Court, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that it is appealable not only under O 43, r 1 (c) but also as a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent (l), but that an order granting the application is not appealable either under O 43, r 1 (c) or as a "judgment" under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (l) An order granting

12. [S 107] Where a plaintiff or defendant, who has been ordered to appear in person, does not appear in person, or show sufficient cause to the satisfaction of the Court for failing so to appear, he shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing rules applicable to plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, who do not appear

Consequence of non attendance without sufficient cause shown of party ordered to appear in person

Where party directed to appear in person—This rule applies to all cases where a party has been ordered to appear in person and fails to do so. This is clear from the fact that the words 'under the provisions of section 66 or section 436' [now O 5 r 3 and O 29, r 3 respectively] which occurred in the corresponding s 107 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted from the present rule (f). The Court has power to strike out the defence of a defendant who disobeys an order for personal appearance under O 3 r 1 but this is a highly penal procedure which cannot be adopted if the defendant disobeys a witness summons (f1).

Setting aside Decrees ex parte

13. [S 108] In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the Court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside, and if he satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him upon such terms as to costs, payment into Court or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit

setting aside decree ex parte against defendant

Provided that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants also

Old section—This rule corresponds with s 108 of the Code of 1882. The words 'as against him' have been added after the words 'shall make an order setting aside the decree'. The proviso to the rule is also new. See as to the effect of these changes, notes, Proviso to the Rule.

Remedies in case of ex parte decree—A defendant against whom an ex parte decree has been passed under r 6 for default of appearance at the hearing, has the following courses open to him (g) —

(1) he may appeal from the ex parte decree under s 96,

(2) he may apply for a review of judgment under O 47, r 1 (A),

(3) he may apply under this rule for an order to set aside the ex parte decree, provided the application is made, in cases to which the Limitation Act, 1908, applies,

1. 9, r. 13 within 30 days from the date of the decree, or where the summons was not duly served when he has knowledge of the decree (i), and in cases to which the Limitation Act, 1877, applies within 30 days from the date of executing any process for enforcing the judgment (j). As to "knowledge of the decree," it has been held that it must be knowledge of a particular decree passed against the defendant in a particular Court in favour of a particular person and for a particular sum, and not merely the knowledge that a decree has been passed by some Court against him (k).

Where the right to make the application is barred under the Act of 1877, and the law arose before the Limitation Act of 1908 came into force, the provisions of that Act could not revive the right (l). But where the right is not barred, the law of limitation to be applied to applications under the present rule made after January 1, 1909, is art 164 of the Limitation Act of 1908, and not art 164 of the Limitation Act of 1877, though the ex parte decree was passed when the Limitation Act of 1877 was in force (m).

The first two remedies, that is the remedies by way of appeal and review, are open to any person against whom a decree is passed, whether the decree is ex parte or not. But the third remedy, the one provided by this rule can only be resorted to if the decree is passed ex parte, that is to say, passed against the defendant for default of appearance under r 6. If the decree is passed on grounds other than his non appearance the remedy is not by this rule but by way of appeal (n). An ex parte decree passed on an award under Sch II para 20 may be set aside under this rule (o).

Whether remedies concurrent—A defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed is at liberty as stated above, to apply to set aside the decree under this rule, or to appeal from the decree, or to apply for a review of the judgment. He is entitled to apply under this rule to set aside the decree and at the same time to appeal from the decree. Further, he is entitled to appeal from the decree without a previous application to set aside the decree under this rule (p). Similarly he is entitled to apply for a review without previously applying under this rule (q). If he applies under this rule and his application is rejected, he is entitled under O 43, r 1 (d), to appeal from the order rejecting the application. But he is not bound to appeal from the order, he may appeal under s 96 from the ex parte decree itself.

If a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed does not apply under this rule to set aside the decree, but appeals from the decree two questions arise, namely,—

- (1) Whether the reason for the defendant's failure to apply to set aside the decree remains whether the lower Court had sufficient evidence to support the decree, or whether the only question which it could consider is whether the evidence on the record is sufficient to support the ex parte decree, in other words, whether the decree can be sustained on the merits, and
- (2) whether if the appellate Court comes to the conclusion that the suit ought not to have been heard ex parte, it has the power to remand the case for rehearing to the lower Court.

Upon these points there is a conflict of decisions. In a case under the Code of 1882 the Calcutta High Court held that the only question which the appellate Court could consider was whether the decree was wrong in law or based on insufficient evidence.

and that it could not deal with the question whether the lower Court was right in proceeding ex parte (r) But in a recent case (s) under the present Code, the Calcutta High Court has treated this decision as obiter, and holds that the Court of Appeal can deal with the reason for the defendant's non-appearance and if not satisfied with the ex parte order can remand the suit for trial on the merits In a Bombay case also decided under the Code of 1882, it was held that the appellate Court could consider the reason for the defendant's non-appearance, but it had no power to remand the case to the lower Court for a re-hearing, the reason given being that an order of remand could only be made under s. 562 [now O 41, r 23] when a suit was disposed of on a preliminary point and that the disposal of a suit ex parte was not a disposal on a preliminary point (t) In Sadhu v Kuppen (u), which also was a case under the Code of 1882, a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that the appellate Court could consider the reason for the defendant's non-appearance and that if it came to the conclusion that the lower Court ought not to have proceeded ex parte, it had the power to remand the case to that Court for a re-hearing The Madras ruling was followed by the High Court of Bombay in Jethilal v Varajlal (v), and also by the Patna High Court (w) The High Court of Rangoon has followed the first Calcutta ruling (x)

If an application to set aside an ex parte decree is rejected, and the defendant does not appeal from the order under O 43, r 1 (d), he cannot, according to an Allahabad ruling, re-agitate the matter in appeal from the ex parte decree, the reason given being that the appellate Court has no power to consider the reason for the defendant's non-appearance, but it can only hear the appeal on the merits (y)

As to review, see notes to r 9, "Remedies in case of dismissal under rule 8"

Where written statement filed—A defendant against whom a decree is passed ex parte for default of appearance is entitled to apply under this rule to set aside the decree though he may have filed his written statement (z)

Prevented from appearing—As to the meaning of appearing, see notes to O 9 r 9, Appearance

Hearing of application pending appeal—The High Courts of Calcutta (a), Madras (b), and Allahabad (c) have held that where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed applies under this rule to set it aside, and at the same time prefers an appeal from it, the proper Court to hear the application is the Court which passed the decree, and not the appellate Court A obtains an ex parte decree against B B applies under this rule to have the decree set aside At the same time he prefers an appeal from the decree Which Court has jurisdiction to hear the application—is it the Court which passed the decree or is it the appellate Court? According to the above decisions, the only Court which has jurisdiction to hear the application is the Court which passed the decree The reason given is that the matter to be considered in a proceeding under this rule is entirely distinct from the matter to be considered in an appeal from the ex parte decree, the one being concerned with the due service of summons and the

O. 9, r. 13 other with the determination of the merits of the controversy between the parties. Similarly if A sues B and C, and C alone appears, and an ex parte decree is passed against B, and a decree on the merits is passed against C, B a application to set aside the ex parte decree can only be heard by the Court which passed the decree, although an appeal by C may be pending in the appellate Court. It makes no difference that the application is made by one defendant and the appeal is preferred by another defendant (d).

Hearing of application after disposal of appeal.—But if the appeal is disposed of, other considerations arise. The High Courts of Calcutta (e), Allahabad (f) and the Chief Court of Oudh (g) have held that where an appeal is preferred from an ex parte decree, and the decree is confirmed or otherwise disposed of in appeal under O. 41, r. 32, the Court which passed the ex parte decree has no longer any power to entertain an application to set it aside even if the application was made before the appeal was filed. This is because the decree of the lower Court is merged in that of the appellate Court. But if the appeal is dismissed for default, there is no merger and the original Court can entertain the application (h). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that the Court which passed an ex parte decree has jurisdiction to entertain an application to set it aside even after an appeal therefrom has been dismissed (i). See notes to s. 36, "Merger of decree."

Where a defendant against whom an ex parte decree is passed is not joined as a party to the appeal preferred by other parties to the suit, and the appellate Court does not adjudicate upon his case, the ex parte decree against him does not merge in the decree of the Court of appeal so as to preclude him from applying under this rule to the Court which passed the ex parte decree to set aside the decree. A sues B, C and D, and obtains an ex parte decree against B and a decree on the merits against C and D. C and D appeal from the decree. B is not joined as a party to the appeal. The appellate Court confirms the decree of the Court of first instance passed against C and D. This does not preclude B from applying to the Court of first instance to set aside the ex parte decree against him (j).

Ex parte decree obtained by fraud.—A regular suit does not lie to set aside an ex parte decree merely on the ground of non service of summons (l). But where an ex parte decree is alleged to have been obtained by a plaintiff by fraud, the defendant is entitled to institute a regular suit to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud (l). The suit is maintainable even though the defendant was unsuccessful in his application made under this rule to set aside the ex parte decree and though he did not appeal from the order rejecting his application (m). But if the very fraud that is set up by the defendant in his suit was set up in his application, and the Court after going into the question of fraud rejected the application, the suit would be barred as res judicata unless the fraud alleged was of such a nature that it could not properly come within the scope of enquiry under this rule. A applies under this rule to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground of fraud in respect of the service of summons upon him. The Court, after going into the question of fraud, rejects the application. A then institutes a regular suit to set aside the ex parte decree, basing his suit on the very fraud that was alleged by him in the application. The suit is barred as res judicata (n). In a recent Calcutta case A sued B in a Munsif's Court on a hand note and obtained an ex parte decree for Rs 59. B applied to set aside the decree, but the application was refused. B then sued A in the Munsif's Court to set aside the decree on the grounds, (1) that the summons was not duly served, and (2) that the decree was obtained by perjured evidence. It was held that the issue as to service of summons was not res judicata, the reason given being that the suit included matters which could not have been raised on the application to set aside the decree (o). This decision, it is submitted, is not good law.

Application by legal representative of deceased defendant.—Under the Code of 1882, it was not settled whether his legal representative could apply for an order to set aside the ex parte decree against a deceased defendant. The High Court of Calcutta held that he could (p). The High Courts of Madras (q), and Allahabad (r), held that he could not. But the Allahabad Court conceded that if the application was made by the defendant, and he died during the pendency of the application, the proceedings could be continued by his legal representative (s). Under this Code (s 146) such an application may be made by the legal representative of the deceased defendant (t).

Grounds on which ex parte decree may be set aside.—These are stated in the second paragraph of the rule, the one being that the summons was not duly served upon the defendant (u), and the other that though the summons was duly served, the defendant was prevented by sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing (v). A summons cannot be said to be duly served if it is a misleading document having no relevance to the real proceedings which are contemplated and having no reference to the order ultimately passed (u). When a summons was served upon a jurdanashin lady, to whom the serving officer was not able to obtain access, by affixing a copy of the summons on the outer door of her dwelling house under O 5, r 17, and it appeared that the lady had no knowledge of the suit against her, the Court set aside the ex parte decree passed against her on the ground that she was prevented by "sufficient cause" from appearing at the hearing of the suit (x). Substituted service is as effectual as personal service for the purpose of going on with the proceedings of the Court. It is not necessarily due service and it is open to the defendant to shew that he had no knowledge of the claim (y).

"Sufficient cause."—Where an ex parte decree has been passed against a defendant who has failed to appear at the hearing, he is not entitled to have the decree set aside as a matter of course even if he applies on the same day for the purpose. It is a matter for the discretion of the Court (z). The fact that a defendant was contemplating an appeal from a preliminary decree in a suit for partition is no ground for his failure to attend proceedings in connection with the division of property and for setting aside the part of the guardian ad litem were proved (a), and in the case of (c) through another guardian to set aside the decree (c) but not (d).

Proviso to the rule—Cases under this proviso fall into two classes.

- I Where the decree is ex parte against all the defendants, and the application to set aside the decree is made only by some of them.
- II Where against some of the defendants the decree is passed against others who have appeared and defended the suit on their merits, and the application to set aside the decree is made by some of the defendants against whom the decree was passed.

In cases under both classes the question is whether, if the decree is set aside against the applicant, the Court can set aside the decree as against the other defendants also, so as to reopen the whole suit, and if so, in what cases? The present rule expressly provides for two cases. The first para of r. 13 says that where a defendant against whom an ex parte application is made for an order to set it aside, and satisfies the Court that he was not duly served upon him, etc., the Court shall make an order as against him [that is the applicant] (p). The proviso to r. 13 says that the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant, or may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants. This is for cases where it may be necessary in the ends of justice to set aside the decree only against the applicant but also against the other defendants (q). The general rule be so,

- (1) where the decree is one and indivisible (r)
- (2) where the suit would result in inconsistent decrees if the decree were set aside as against the other defendants also (s)
- (3) where the relief to which the applicant is entitled in the suit cannot be given otherwise, than by setting aside the decree as against the other defendants also (t)
- (4) where the decree proceeds on a ground common to all the defendants (u).

These four cases may be considered under the two classes referred to above.

Class I—Where the decree is passed ex parte against all the defendants but the application to set aside the decree is made by some of them only.

O. 9, r. 13 final decree for partition (a) The Bombay High Court has held that if the defendants are present in person the mere fact that their counsel are engaged in other Courts in the same building is not sufficient cause within the meaning of this section (b) In a Iangoon case under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, the Collector failed to appear as he was on tour at that time and there was considerable pressure of work. One of the Judges of a Division Bench held that this was a sufficient cause for his non appearance while the other Judge held that it was not (c) For other cases see note to O 9 r 9 Appearance

Upon such terms as to payment into Court —In restoring a case under this rule the Court may make it a condition that costs (d) or the decretal amount or some portion thereof be paid into Court (e) If a decree is set aside on failure to comply with a condition imposed by a Court an appeal will lie under O 43 r 1 (d) and the appellate Court will consider whether the condition was a reasonable one (f)

High Court of Calcutta Original Side —The High Court of Calcutta has held that this rule does not apply in terms on the Original Side of the High Court. The principle however of this rule is applied on that side and Rankin C.J. said that the High Court on its Original Side has a discretion which it may exercise independently of the rule and that it may set aside an ex parte decree even in a case in which there has been an element of negligence (g) The same High Court has also held that an application to set aside an ex parte decree not being one under this rule is not governed by art 164 of the Limitation Act (h)

Has the Court inherent power to set aside an ex parte decree —A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that the Court has no power apart from the provisions of this rule to set aside an ex parte decree (i) The Calcutta and Patna High Courts take the same view (j) In one of the Calcutta cases (j1) Rankin C.J. said I entirely dissent from the view that if no case is made out under that rule (O 9 r 13) it is open to the learned Judge to enlarge the rule by talking about sec 151. On the other hand an inherent jurisdiction is recognized by the Bombay High Court (k) In Allahabad the cases are conflicting. In one case a Bench of that Court approved of the Madras Full Bench ruling (l) In another case a single Judge said that the inherent jurisdiction undoubtedly existed (m)

Ex parte decree against minor defendant —It is no ground for setting aside an ex parte decree passed against a minor defendant that the Nazir who was appointed guardian ad litem of the minor did not appear and defend the suit if the failure to defend was owing to the fact that the Nazir did not receive instructions from any person to defend the suit. It would be otherwise if fraud, collusion or gross negligence on the part of the guardian ad litem were proved (n), and in such a case the minor may apply through another guardian to set aside the decree (o). See notes to r. 9, "Minor plaintiff."

Proviso to the rule—Cases under this proviso fall into two classes

- I Where the decree is ex parte against all the defendants, but the application to set aside the decree is made only by some of them
- II Where against some of the defendants the decree is passed ex parte, but against others who have appeared and defended the suit, it is passed on the merits, and the application to set aside the decree is made by one or more of the defendants against whom the decree was passed ex parte

In cases under both classes the question is whether, if the decree is set aside as against the applicant, the Court can set aside the decree as against the other defendants also, so as to reopen the whole suit, and if so, in what cases? No provision was made in the old section as to these cases. The present rule expressly provides for these cases. The first para. of r. 13 says that where a defendant against whom a decree is passed ex parte applies for an order to set it aside, and satisfies the Court that the summons was not duly served upon him, etc., the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him [that is the applicant] (p). The proviso to r. 13 says that where the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such defendant only, it may be set aside as against all or any of the other defendants. The object is to provide for cases where it may be necessary in the ends of justice to set aside the decree not only against the applicant but also against the other defendants (q). This would as a general rule be so.

- (1) where the decree is one and indivisible (r)
- (2) where the suit would result in inconsistent decrees if the decree were not set aside as against the other defendants also (s)
- (3) where the relief to which the applicant is entitled in the suit could not effectively be given otherwise than by setting aside the decree as against the other defendants also (t),
- (4) where the decree proceeds on a ground common to all the defendants (u)

(b) A sues B and his minor sons C and D, members of a joint Hindu family, to recover Rs 1,000 alleged to have been advanced to B as manager of the family. None of the defendants appears at the hearing, and an ex parte decree is passed against all the three. All the three defendants apply to have the decree set aside. As to C and D it is proved that no summons was served upon them. As to B it is proved that the summons was duly served upon him. Here the decree being one and indivisible (1), the Court may set aside the decree not only as against C and D, but also as against B, though the summons was served upon him and there was no sufficient cause for his non-appearance. Moreover, this is a case where the relief to which the minors C and D are entitled could not effectively be granted unless the decree was set aside as against B also. For if the decree were allowed to stand as against B, B's share in the joint family property could be attached and sold though the sons might succeed in showing at the trial of the suit that the debt never was incurred or that it had been discharged, or that from its nature the joint family property was not liable. The sale of the father's share in the joint family property would be a manifest injury to the sons, and this could only be avoided by setting aside the decree against the father also, and re opening the whole suit. Bhura Mal v Har Kishan Das (1902) 24 All 383 at pp 440 and 401

(c) X, alleging that A and B are in joint possession of certain immovable property, sues A and B, and asks for a declaration that he is in joint possession with them. A is served with the summons, but B is not. Neither defendant appears at the hearing, and a decree ex parte is passed against both the defendants. B applies to have the decree set aside, and it is set aside as against him, but not as against A. At the hearing B establishes that X has no title whatever to the property. There would in such a case be two absolutely inconsistent decrees, namely, the ex parte decree held by X against A declaring X to be jointly in possession with A and B, and the decree against X passed at "herefore a case st A also see

(d) X sues A and B on a promissory note executed by A. B is A's nephew, and he is joined as a defendant on the ground that A and B are members of a joint Hindu family, and that the note was for a debt binding on the family. Neither defendant appears at the hearing, and an ex parte decree is passed against both the defendants. The decree against A proceeds on the ground that the note was passed by him and against B on the ground that the debt was incurred for a family purpose. B applies for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon him and that the debt in respect of which the note was passed by A was not incurred for a family purpose. It is not disputed that the amount was actually advanced to A. Such being the case, the decree may be set aside as against B, but it must not be set aside as against A. Justice does not require it, for the contention of B that the debt was one not binding on him is a defence peculiar to him alone, and not one common to him and A. Gopala Chetti v Subbier (1903) 26 Mad 604

(e) A sues B, C and D personally and as managers of a devasam to recover Rs 275, being revenue paid by him on behalf of the defendants. None of the defendants appears at the hearing, and an ex parte decree is passed against them personally and against the devasam property. If B alone applies under this rule, and shows sufficient cause for his non appearance at the hearing, the decree may be set aside so far as it ordered payment by B personally and from the devasam property, but it cannot be set aside so far as it directs C and D to pay the amount personally. Talia Koni v Murutha Iera (1905) 31 Mad 454

Class II—Where against some of the defendants the decree is passed ex parte, but against others who have appeared and defended the suit it is passed on the merits, and the application to set aside the decree is made by one or more of the defendants against whom the decree was passed ex parte—In this case the question arises, whether, if the decree is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against the applicant only, but must be set aside also as against the defendants against whom the decree was passed on the merits, the Court has the power to set aside the decree as against such defendants also. It is submitted that it has. The words 'the decree' in the proviso mean the decree passed in the suit, not only against the defendants who did not appear but also against the defendants who did appear. The words 'other defendants' in the proviso mean defendants other than the applicant against whom the decree is passed, whether as against them it was passed ex parte or after a hearing (w)

(a) X sues A and B, alleging that A and B are in joint possession of certain immovable property, and asking for a declaration that he is in joint possession with them. A appears and defends the suit. B does not appear. The Court finds that A and B are in joint possession, and that X is entitled to joint possession with them, and a decree is passed against A and B declaring that X is entitled to joint possession with them. Here the decree, so far as regards A, is passed after a hearing and, as regards B, it is ex parte. But there is only one decree, and the words 'the decree' in the proviso can only refer to that decree. Therefore, if B applies for an order to set aside the decree and the decree jointly in possession along with A and B, whilst B would be in possession of a decree in his favour declaring that X is not entitled to joint possession with him and A. See Bhura Mal v Har Krishan Das (1902) 24 All 383 at p 400

(b) A and B, both Mahomedans, pass a promissory note to X. B dies leaving three heirs, H1, H2, and H3. X sues A (surviving maker of the note) and H1, H2 and H3 as heirs of B. A and H1 appear at the hearing and defend the suit. H2 and H3 do not appear. A decree is passed against all the defendants: the liability of H1, H2 and H3 under the decree being limited to the extent of the property of B inherited by them as B's heirs. Here the decree, so far as regards A and H1, is passed after hearing, and, as regards H2 and H3, it is ex parte. H2 and H3 apply to have the decree set aside alleging that the summons was not served upon them. The Court is satisfied that the summons was not served. Upon these facts the High Court of Calcutta held under the old section that the decree should be set aside not only as against H2 and H3 but also as against A and H1, the ground of the decision being that the decree was one and indivisible. Mahomed Hamidullaz v Tohurennissa Bibi (1895) 25 Cal 155

9, r. 13 an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon her. The Court finds that the summons was not served upon C. Upon these facts the High Court of Bombay held under the old section that if the decree were set aside as against C, it should not be set aside as against B also, B having appeared and defended the suit. Manaku v Sitaram (1894) 18 Bom 142. If the Bombay decision means that the setting aside of a decree ex parte against a defendant does not necessarily revive the suit as against a defendant who has appeared and defended the suit, the decision is still good law. But if it means that where a decree is passed ex parte against A and after a hearing against B the Court can set aside the decree only against A, and cannot set it aside in any case against B, the decision is no longer law—see the proviso to the rule.

(d) A sues B and C for a declaration of title to certain lands, and D and E (tenants of B and C) for possession of the lands. B and C appear and defend the suit. D and E do not appear. The Court passes a decree against all the four defendants, as against B and C declaring that the lands belong to A, and as against D and E, directing them to deliver possession of the lands to A. Here the decree against D and E is ex parte for they did not appear at the hearing. D and E apply for an order to set aside the decree, alleging that the summons was not served upon them. The Court is satisfied that the summons was not served. Should the decree be set aside as a whole that is against all the defendants B, C, D and E, or should it be set aside against D and E only? The decree should not be set aside as a whole, for the decree is not one and indivisible. The relief granted to A as against B and C is a declaration of A's title to the lands. The relief granted to A as against D and E is that they should deliver up possession of the lands to A. In fact, the decree, though nominally one, really consists of two decrees each against one set of defendants: the relief granted against each set being separately specified. Hence the decree may be set aside as against D and E, but not against B and C for the relief granted against B and C is distinct from that granted against D and E, who alone applied for an order to set aside the decree. Monomohini v Nara (1899) 4 C W N 456.

(e) A sues B, C and D the holders of a holding for rent and an ex parte decree is passed against them. B alone applies to set aside the decree. The decree may be set aside as against B but it should not be set aside as against C and D, the reason being that a decree for rent can be passed against some holders of a holding without impleading the other holders. Aeshav Chandra v J. Jyulnassa (1928) 32 C W N 507 (28) A C 397.

Whether this rule applies to execution proceedings.—This rule does not apply to proceedings in execution of a decree.—See notes to s. 141 above. The rule does not apply even though the order passed in execution falls under s. 47 and is therefore under s. 2 deemed to be a decree (x). An ex parte order directing the attachment of the judgment debtor's property cannot be set aside under this rule (y), nor an ex parte order under O 21 r. 101, restoring a claimant to possession (z), nor an ex parte order under O 21, r. 33, delivering possession to a decree-holder purchaser (a).

An application for a personal decree under O 34 r. 6 is not an application in execution and so an ex parte personal decree against a mortgagor may be set aside under this rule (b). But the principle of the rule has been extended to an application to set aside a decree for future mesne profits which the Court has directed to be ascertained in execution (c).

Dismissal for default of application to set aside ex parte decree —See note O. to r 9 above, "Dismissal for default of application to restore suit"

Application to set aside ex parte decree after it has been executed.—The fact that an ex parte decree has been satisfied does not preclude the defendant from applying to the Court for an order to set it aside under this rule. A obtains an ex parte decree against B, and attaches B's goods in execution of the decree. B pays the amount of the decree under protest, and applies for an order to set aside the decree on the ground that the summons was not served upon him. The Court may make an order setting aside the decree, notwithstanding that the decree has been satisfied (d)

Effect of setting aside ex parte decree —If an ex parte decree is set aside under this rule the suit is restored. The suit is also restored if the ex parte decree is set aside by suit on the ground that the summons was not served. But if the ex parte decree is set aside in a suit not only on the ground of suppression of summons by fraud but also on the ground that the original claim was fraudulent the suit itself cannot be restored or retried, for the issue, whether the plaintiff in the original suit had a right to obtain a decree against the defendant, is barred by res judicata (e)

Ex parte decree against firm —A decree against a firm cannot be said to be ex parte against a partner in the firm because he has not appeared at the hearing. An ex parte decree against a firm can be set aside on the ground that the summons was not duly served on the firm. If the summons was duly served upon the firm the decree cannot be set aside because one of the partners was not served. Under O 30, r 3, it is not necessary to serve every partner. A sues X Y & Co., a firm. The firm consists of two partners X and Y. The summons is served on X alone as a partner, Y is not served with the summons. Neither X nor Y appears at the hearing and an ex parte decree is passed against the firm. The summons having been duly served on the firm, the decree against the firm cannot be set aside because Y was not served and he did not appear at the hearing (f)

Appeal —If in a case open to appeal an application under this rule is dismissed an lawfully imposed on the defendants were not complied with (j)

Revision —It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that an order setting aside an ex parte decree is not subject to revision under s 115 the reason given being that the validity of the order may be attacked under s 105 in an appeal from the final decree (i). The High Court of Madras has held that an order setting aside an ex parte decree may be set aside in revision if it is not based on any ground recognised by law (l)

ORDER X

Examination of Parties by the Court

O. 10, rr. 1, 2 1. [S. 117] At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of fact as are made in the plaint or written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made The Court shall record such admissions and denials

Ascertainment whether allegations in pleadings are admitted or denied relating to the suit by whom such party or parties are accompanied, may be examined orally by the Court, if it thinks fit, put in the course of the examination questions suggested by either party.

Object of examination under this rule—The object of this rule is not to take evidence or ascertain what is to be the evidence in a suit to determine the matters in dispute between the parties (a). At the trial of a suit and before any evidence had been taken a Subordinate Judge of the District Court called a witness box and examined him and allowed him to be cross-examined by the parties on the whole case. Their Lordships of the Privy Council expressed disapproval of this unusual procedure and said with reference to this rule: "It is a procedure which is used by the Judge only when he finds it necessary to clarify material points raised on any material questions relating to the suit and ought not to be so far as to supersede the ordinary procedure of trial as prescribed in O 15 (i)".

O. 11, r. 1 succeed in impeaching or even destroying the defendant's title. The reason is that the defendant being in possession, he cannot be dispossessed of the land except by proof of title on the part of the claimant. Hence the plaintiff in ejectment should not be allowed to interrogate the defendant merely for the purpose of destroying or impeaching the defendant's title (h). And thus is the Exception above referred to. But the plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to interrogate the defendant as to any matter relating to the defendant's title that may support his case directly (i). The same principles apply in the case of discovery by production of documents.

The High Court of Calcutta has said that interrogatories in India should not be allowed for the first of the above purposes, that is to ascertain the nature of your opponent's case but that they may be allowed for the second, that is to support your own case (j). This is on the ground that where a party has not sufficiently disclosed his case, it is the Court that has to determine the exact nature of his case by procedure under O 8, r 7, and O 14, rr 12 and that it is not therefore permissible to the opposite party to get that information by discovery. But these rules are, it is submitted, intended not to supersede, but to supplement discovery and there is no reason why any distinction should be drawn between the English and the Indian practice (k).

What interrogatories may not be allowed—These may be divided into three classes—

1 A party is not entitled to administer interrogatories for obtaining discovery of facts which constitute exclusively the evidence of his adversary's case or title (l).

2 A party is not entitled to interrogate as to any confidential communications between his opponent and his legal advisers.

3 A party is not entitled to execute interrogatories which would involve disclosures injurious to public interests.

See notes to r 13 below, 'Grounds of objection to production of documents.'

Interrogatories relating to names of persons—Interrogatories relating to the names of persons not already parties to the action are only allowable where the object is either to make the proceedings complete and effective for all purposes or to enable the plaintiff more effectively to substantiate the case which he makes against the existing defendant (m). Such interrogatories are not allowable in any other case. Thus in a suit by the vendor against the purchaser for specific performance of a contract for sale, the plaintiff is not entitled to interrogate the defendant for the purpose of discovering whether he was acting as agent for an undisclosed principal. The only object of such an interrogatory is to give the plaintiff the opportunity of releasing the defendant and of securing for the plaintiff some other person liable under the contract in substitution for, and not jointly with, the defendant (n).

As to interrogatories as to names of witnesses, see note above. Discovery by interrogatories, and notes to O 6, r 4, 'Object of particulars.' As to interrogatories as to names of informants in defamation cases, see the undermentioned cases (o).

Refusal by company to register transfer.—Where an article of a company's articles of association empowers the directors without assigning any reason to decline to register any transfer of shares not fully paid up made to any person not approved by them or made by any member jointly or alone indebted to the company, and the company refuses to register a transfer, the company is not entitled in an action for a declaration that the refusal was wrongful to refuse to state which of the grounds mentioned in the articles the directors had acted under, although it might refuse to say what reasons influenced them in exercising their discretion on that ground (p)

Foreign law.—An interrogatory involving a question of foreign law is not permissible unless the party interrogated is shown to be an expert in that law (q)

Time for delivery of interrogatories.—A plaintiff may, under this rule, deliver interrogatories to a defendant even before the filing of the written statement. But there is this difference, if the English practice is to be followed here, that in what are called common law actions, interrogatories, if delivered before filing the written statement, will as a rule be struck out under r 7 as unnecessary and vexatious unless sufficient reasons are given by the plaintiff to explain why the interrogatories are necessary at that stage of the suit (r), while in suits of the nature of chancery actions (s), they may, as a rule, be allowed though no written statement has been filed (t)

A defendant, as a rule, is not allowed to deliver interrogatories to the plaintiff before he has filed his written statement (u)

Leave of Court.—The application for leave to administer interrogatories is, as a rule, made ex parte. In determining whether leave should be granted, the Court should consider whether it is a fit and proper case for administering interrogatories. Leave should be refused if the interrogatories are scandalous or are an abuse of the process of the Court. But it is not the duty of the Court, when granting leave, to consider what particular questions the party interrogated should be compelled to answer. The proper time for considering that question is after the party interrogated has made his affidavit in answer [r 8] (v). See r 2 below.

"Opposite party."—These words do not include solely the relation of plaintiff and defendant. Hence one defendant may administer interrogatories to another defendant, provided there is some right to be adjusted in the action between them (w).

Where opposite party is a minor or lunatic.—Where a party to a suit is a minor or a lunatic, interrogatories may be administered to his next friend or guardian ad litem, as the case may be. See r 23 below.

Points of distinction between interrogatories and cross examination —

(1) Not every question which could be asked to a witness in the box may be put as an interrogatory. Thus, questions which are put only to test the credibility of a person will not be allowed, although of course they may be asked in cross examination (x).

(2) Interrogatories can be administered only to a party to a suit, and not to a witness (y).

rr. 1-3

Impleading party of discovery—A person cannot be made a party to a suit solely for the purpose of discovery (2)

Distinction between pleadings and interrogatories—Interrogatories are not like pleadings confined to the material facts on which the parties rely in support of their claim or defence. Interrogatories may be administered not only to ascertain the nature of your opponent's case but to obtain admissions from him of everything which is material on the pleadings so as to facilitate the proof of your own case and thus save yourself the expense of proving facts admitted by your opponent in answer to the interrogatories (a)

Probate proceedings—O 11 applies by virtue of s 266 of the Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925 to proceedings in probate (b)

2. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 2.] On an application for leave to deliver interrogatories, the particular interrogatories proposed to be delivered shall be submitted to the Court. In deciding upon such application, the Court shall take into account any offer which may be made by the party sought to be interrogated to deliver particulars, or to make admissions, or to produce documents relating to the matters in question, or any of them, and leave shall be given as to such only of the interrogatories submitted as the Court shall consider necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs

Power of Court under this rule—It is to be noted that the Court has no power under this rule to settle interrogatories but to state only what interrogatories should be administered (c). Further the allowance by the Court of interrogatories to be administered to a party does not amount to a decision that the party is bound to answer them but leaves him at liberty to take any objection to answering which he might otherwise have taken (d). See rr 67 below

Running down cases—In running down cases only such interrogatories should be allowed as may be necessary for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs within this rule (e)

3. [R. S. C., O 31, r. 3, Cf S. 123] In adjusting the costs of the suit inquiry shall at the instance of any party be made into the propriety of exhibiting such interrogatories, and if it is the opinion of the taxing officer or of the Court, either with or without an application for inquiry, that such interrogatories have been exhibited unreasonably, vexatiously, or at improper

4. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 4.] Interrogatories shall be in Form No 2 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require

Form of interrogatories

5. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 5, Cf. S. 124.] Where any party to a suit is a corporation or a body of persons, whether incorporated or not, empowered by law to sue or be sued, whether in its own name or in the name of any officer or other person, any opposite party may apply for an order allowing him to deliver interrogatories to any member or officer of such corporation or body, and an order may be made accordingly

Corporations

Delivery of interrogatories to an officer of a corporation—A corporate body cannot answer for itself, and if it is necessary that some officer should answer for it His answer is the answer of the company and can be read against the company Therefore he is only bound to answer with reference to knowledge acquired in the course of his employment by the company, and as the result of inquiries made by him of the other officers and agents of the company with regard to their knowledge acquired in the same way He is not bound to answer as to his own knowledge, or to make inquiries of the other officers or agents of the company as to their knowledge acquired accidentally or in some other capacity (f)

6. [R. S. C., O. 32, r. 6, Cf. S. 125.] Any objection to answering any interrogatory on the ground that it is scandalous or irrelevant or not exhibited bona fide for the purpose of the suit, or that the matters inquired into are not sufficiently material at that stage, or on any other ground, may be taken in the affidavit in answer

Objections to interrogatories by answer

Scandalous interrogatories—Certainly nothing can be scandalous which is relevant (g) Interrogatories which tend to incriminate a party are not scandalous if they are relevant (h)

Irrelevant interrogatories—The discovery by interrogatories as distinguished from cross-examination must be directly relevant to the matter in issue (i) Thus in an action for damages against the defendant for seducing the plaintiff's daughter the defendant cannot be asked how rich he is as it is perfectly irrelevant in such cases whether the defendant is rich or poor the true measure of damages being the amount of compensation to be paid to the plaintiff for the injury he has sustained by the seduction of his daughter But interrogatories as to whether the defendant has had sexual

Where a party seeks discovery of documents, and the opposite party alleges that the documents are not relevant, the procedure to be followed is that laid down in r. 18, sub r (2) below. A party should not be compelled by means of interrogatories to give discovery of documents, the relevancy of which is denied (l)

"Not exhibited bona fide for the purpose of the suit."—Though an interrogatory may be relevant, it may be objected to on the ground that it is put with a view to serve an ulterior object beyond the scope of the suit

"Not sufficiently material at that stage"—An interrogatory may be perfectly relevant to a suit, and put bona fide for the purposes of the suit, but if it is premature, it will not be allowed (m) This may be illustrated by the following cases—

- (1) A sues B for breach of an alleged trust and for profits made by B by such breach. B denies the alleged trust. A is not entitled to interrogate B so as to require from him an account of profits of the alleged trust fund unless the trust is proved (n), but it is otherwise if the breach of trust is admitted (o)
- (2) In Fennessy v Clark (p), the plaintiff's interrogatories as to the amount of damages were held to be premature, as it was not yet decided whether the plaintiff was entitled to any damages at all. Cotton, L. J., said: "The Court is always unwilling before the right to relief is established to make an order for discovery which may be injurious to the defendant, and will only be useful to the plaintiff if he succeeds in establishing his title to relief."

"Or any other ground"—Besides the three specific grounds mentioned in the rule, a party interrogated may object to answer an interrogatory on the ground that it is prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous (r. 7), or on the grounds specified in the notes to r. 1, "What interrogatories may not be allowed," on p. 610 above

"Fishing" interrogatories not allowed.—The questions asked must not be fishing, that is to say, they must refer to some definite and existing state of circumstances, and must not be put merely in the hope of discovering something which may help the party interrogating to make out some case (q). See Odgers on Pleading, 8th Ed., p. 298. For instances of "fishing interrogatories," see Ali Kadar v Gobind Das (r)

Contracts by way of wager.—In cases where the defence of wager is set up the Court will refuse to allow the party setting up this defence to interrogate his opponent generally as to his business transactions apart from the particular transactions in the suit, the reason being that it is manifestly unfair to compel a person to disclose his general dealings on the chance that thereby his opponent may discover something that will support his case (s)

Defamation.—Where a statement of claim in an action for slander alleges publication to one named person, and publication also to various other persons unnamed, it is not generally permissible to ask the defendant whether he uttered the words complained of to any person or persons other than the person named, and if so, to give their names. Such an interrogatory is a fishing interrogatory, the object being to find out some cause of action against the defendant other than the specific cause of action alleged in the plaint (t)

7. [New.] Any interrogatories may be set aside on the ground that they have been exhibited unreasonably or vexatiously, or struck out on the ground that they are prolix, oppressive, unnecessary or scandalous; and any application for this purpose may be made within seven days after service of the interrogatories

Setting aside and striking out interrogatories

Setting aside and striking out interrogatories—A, as trustee in the bankruptcy of C, sues B for a declaration that a piece of land purchased by B and C in 1883 was purchased by B and C in partnership. B denies the partnership. A exhibits interrogatories to B asking for particulars of purchases of land by B and C previous and subsequent to 1883 to prove that they had been co partners in various other purchases similar to that of 1883. The interrogatories are irrelevant and oppressive, and must be struck out. "To ask the defendant to take the trouble to go through his books and papers for so many years is vexatious and oppressive (u) "

The present rule does not apply where the interrogatories are merely irrelevant. An objection that an interrogatory is irrelevant must be taken in the affidavit in answer (r. 6), and is no ground for setting aside the interrogatory under this rule (v)

"There is no foundation for the opinion that a person who has a ground for refusing to answer [an interrogatory] is precluded from availing himself of that ground because he has not applied to have the interrogatory struck out (w)

8. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 8, S. 126.] Interrogatories shall be answered by affidavit to be filed within ten days, or within such other time as the Court may allow.

Answers as to matters done by agent or servant of party interrogated—A party to a suit is not excused from answering interrogatories relevant to the question in issue on the ground that they are as to matters which are not within his own knowledge, but are only within the knowledge of his agents or servants, if such knowledge has been acquired by them in the ordinary course of their employment. He is bound to obtain the information from such agents or servants, unless he shows that it would be unreasonable to require him to do so, as for instance if either such agents or servants have left his employment, or if it would occasion unreasonable expense or an unreasonable amount of delay or the like (x). A party a banker or solicitor is his agent within the meaning of the above rule (y). But a party is not bound to disclose matters that have come to the knowledge of his agents or servants otherwise than in the ordinary course of their employment (z)

And an order may be made requiring him to answer or answer further, either by affidavit or by viva voce examination, as the Court may direct.

Application for further answer to interrogatories.—An application for a further answer to interrogatories ought to specify the interrogatories or parts of interrogatories to which a further answer is required (a)

"Answers insufficiently."—"With regard to an answer to interrogatories what the Court has to consider is thus simply, whether the answer is insufficient, not to go into the question of the truthfulness of the answer, but to see whether it is insufficient or not, and if it is insufficient, then only can it require a further answer" (b) "When an answer is couched in a form which makes it embarrassing, that is to say, which prevents the person who asks for it from using it without having thrust upon him irrelevant matters as part of it, the answer is insufficient, and the proper course to pursue is to ask that a further answer shall be made" (c)

Privilege.—Where in an answer to interrogatories the party interrogated declines, to give further information on the ground of privilege, and the privilege is properly claimed in law, the Court will not require a further answer to be put in, unless it is clearly satisfied, either from the nature of the subject matter for which privilege is claimed, or from statements in the answer itself, or in documents so referred to as to become part of the answer, that the claim for privilege cannot possibly be substantiated. The mere existence of reasonable suspicion which is sufficient to justify the Court in requiring a further affidavit of documents is not enough when a claim for privilege in an answer to interrogatories is sought to be falsified (d) See notes to r. 13, "Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents"

documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question therein. On the hearing of such application the Court may either refuse or adjourn the same, if satisfied that such discovery is not necessary, or not necessary at that stage of the suit, or make such order, either generally or limited to certain classes of documents, as may, in its discretion, be thought fit: Provided that discovery shall not be ordered when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs.

13. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 13, S. 129, 2nd para.] The affidavit to be made by a party against whom such order as is mentioned in the last preceding rule has been made, shall specify which (if any) of the documents therein mentioned he objects to produce, and it shall be in Form No. 5 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

Discovery and production of documents.—Besides discovery by way of answer to interrogatories, there is another species of discovery called discovery of documents. The parties to a suit may have in their possession or power documents relating to the matters in question in the suit. These documents may be divided into two classes —

- (i) those which the adversary is entitled to inspect, and
- (ii) those which he is not entitled to inspect.

Documents which belong to class (ii) are described and classified below, under the head "Grounds of objection to production of documents". As to class (i) it may be said that the adversary is entitled to inspection of all documents which do not come within class (ii). Speaking generally, we may say that the adversary is entitled to inspection of all documents which do not of themselves constitute exclusively the party's evidence of his case or title. But how is inspection to be obtained? If A wants to inspect documents in the possession of B which he is entitled to inspect, it is clear that he cannot inspect them unless they are produced by B. A must therefore call upon B to produce the documents. But how can A do this, unless he knows what documents are in the possession or power of B? To enable him to obtain this information, A is entitled to discovery from B of the documents in his possession or power (e). For this purpose, A may apply to the Court for an order requiring B to make an affidavit, called affidavit of documents, stating what documents are in his possession or power relating to the matters in dispute in the suit. When the Court makes the order B is bound to make his affidavit of documents; and if he fails to do so, he will be subjected to the penalties specified in r. 21 below. After B has disclosed his documents by affidavit A may require him to produce for his inspection such of the documents as he is in law entitled to inspect.

documents which are or have been in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question therein. to documents which are not but have been in his possession or power he must state what has become of them and in whose possession they are, in order that the opposite party may be enabled to get production from the persons who have possession of them. For the same reason if there are any documents in which he has a joint property with other persons not before the Court, he must state the names of those persons. Rule 13 provides that every affidavit of documents should also specify which of the documents therein set forth the declarant objects to produce for the inspection of the opposite party together with the grounds of such objection (see App C Form No 5). These grounds are three in number and are detailed below. The Court examines these grounds when it is called upon to make an order for production of the documents in a party's possession for the inspection of the opposite party (r 14).

Grounds of objection to production of documents—Production of documents can be resisted as of right on three grounds (1) as disclosing the party's evidence (2) as being within the doctrine of legal professional privilege and (3) as being injurious to public interests.

1 A party is not bound to produce for the inspection of his opponent documents which of themselves evidence exclusively the party's own case or title (f).—Documents constituting evidence of the party's case or title are not protected unless they are solely or exclusively evidence of it. Where a document is or may be evidence for the adversary as well as the party the party cannot withhold inspection of it from the adversary (g), although his own evidence may be thus disclosed (h). It is not enough for a man to say such and such documents are the title deeds of his property: it is no ground for refusing their production if they are necessary to support the adversary's case (i). But a document is protected from production and inspection if it exclusively evidences a party's own case and does not support the adversary's case (j). To entitle the party to this protection the privilege must be properly claimed and he must state in his affidavit that the documents constitute evidence of his own case or title, that they contain nothing supporting or tending to support the adversary's case or title and that they contain nothing impeaching his own case or title (k). As to discovery in actions of ejectment see notes to r 1 above. What interrogatories may be allowed.

The rules regarding inspection and discovery of documents are not meant for suits relating to boundary disputes and other disputes. Assertions of a party on oath that documents required to be produced relate only to his own title cannot be disregarded if the Court is satisfied that they are true and that the party asserting has not misconceived the nature and effect of those documents (l).

2 A party is not bound to produce any confidential communications between him and his legal adviser (m).—The object of this rule is to enable persons to obtain legal advice safely and effectually (n). The following are amongst the confidential communications between a client and his legal adviser that are protected from production and inspection: (1) statement of facts drawn up by the client for submission to his solicitor and documents prepared by him for the purpose of providing the solicitor with evidence and information for the conduct of his case (o) (2) advice given by the solicitor with reference thereto (p), (3) entries in the solicitor's diary of communications between himself and his client (q), (4) memoranda or minutes made by the client of the communications between himself and the solicitor (r), (5) communications between solicitor and counsel with reference to the client's case (s) (6) draft pleadings (t), (7) case laid before counsel for his opinion and other briefs for counsel (u), (8) solicitor's bill of costs, for it is virtually the solicitor's history of the transaction in which he was concerned (v) But the communication is not privileged unless it is of a confidential nature (w) And, further, it must have been made to the legal adviser with a view to obtain professional advice (x) It is not necessary that it should have been made either during an actual or even an expected litigation A communication with a legal adviser is protected, though it relates to a transaction which is not the subject of litigation provided it is a communication made to him for the purpose of obtaining professional advice (y) But no privilege attaches to communications between a solicitor and his client which are in themselves facts of a criminal or unlawful proceeding (z) Where one of the trustees of a will is a solicitor and acts as the solicitor for the trustees, communications passing between him and his co-trustees, which would be privileged if the solicitor were not a trustee, are privileged notwithstanding that he is a trustee (a) But confidential communications between a principal and an agent who is not a legal agent, e.g., a commercial agent, are not privileged, whether they are made after litigation has become imminent and after legal advice has been taken, or even after litigation has commenced (b) Similarly reports made by a servant to his master regarding the subject matter of the suit are not privileged (c) See Evidence Act, 1872, ss 126, 129

3 A party is not bound to produce any public official document if its production would be injurious to public interests (d) —With reference to a claim to privilege on this ground Lord Blanesburgh said "Particularly must it be remembered in this connection that the fact that production of the documents might in the particular litigation prejudice the Crown's own case or assist that of the other side, is no such 'plain overriding principle of public interest' as to justify any claim of privilege. In truth the fact that the documents if produced might have any such effect upon the fortunes of the litigation is of itself a compelling reason for their production—one only to be overborne by the gravest considerations of State policy or security" (e)

This head of privilege applies as a rule when a party to the suit is a public officer
See Evidence Act, 1872, ss 123 124

In all the three heads of privilege mentioned above, the privilege must be claimed in the affidavit of documents, and the grounds of privilege must be sufficiently disclosed

11, r. 13 If the affidavit of documents does not sufficiently raise the claim of privilege, the party may be allowed to put in a further affidavit in support of that claim (f)

Is a party bound to give discovery of documents which will tend to incriminate him or expose him to a penalty or forfeiture? No, according to the English law (g) But apparently, yes, according to the Indian law. See Evidence Act, s 132, where the term "witness" obviously includes a party to a suit

Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents. Further affidavit—If a party states in his affidavit of documents that he has no documents relating to the matters in question in the suit other than those set forth in the affidavit, his oath is conclusive, and the other party cannot cross examine upon it, nor adduce evidence to contradict it, nor administer interrogatories asking whether he has not in his possession or power documents other than those set forth in his affidavit (h) The oath of the party being conclusive, the Court will not order him to make a further affidavit of documents though the opponent may state on oath that the party has got other documents in his possession (i), the reason being that in all questions of discovery the oath of the party making the discovery is conclusive as against the oath of the party claiming the discovery (j). The only case in which the Court may require a party to make a further affidavit is where there is a reasonable probability or presumption or even ground for suspicion, derived from certain sources that he has other relevant documents in his possession (k) The sources into which the Court may look for this purpose are (1) the affidavit of documents itself (2) the documents therein referred to and (3) the pleadings (l) Unless the affidavit is shewn from any of these sources to be insufficient, the general rule is that no further affidavit can be ordered But this rule is qualified where the basis on which the affidavit has been made turns out to be wrong Thus if the party making the affidavit has misconceived his case so that the Court is practically certain that if he had acted on a proper view of the law he would have disclosed further documents, then the Court will refuse to recognise the affidavit as conclusive and order a further affidavit (m)

The affidavit of documents is also conclusive as to the facts constituting the ground of objection to production Thus if a party sets forth five documents in his affidavit, and objects to produce two of them on the assertion that they relate exclusively to his own defence, and tend not to support the adversary's title, the Court will not order production, unless the Court is satisfied that the sources specified in the preceding paragraph that the nature of the documents as described by the party has been misconceived by the party, or that the documents are of such a character that the party cannot properly make such an assertion (o) Mere suspicion that the documents are not of the character described by the party, though it is sufficient to justify the Court in ordering the party to make a further affidavit of documents (see preceding paragraph), does not entitle the Court to order their production (p)

on the ground that it formed evidence of his own case exclusively, but the Court ordered production on the ground that the defendant had set forth the nature of the report in his written statement, and the statement showed that the report was not of the character described by the defendant (q)

Inspection by Court of documents for which privilege is claimed—Where on an application for an order for inspection privilege is claimed for any document, the Court may inspect the document for the purpose of deciding whether the claim of privilege is valid See r 19, sub r (2)

For an instance when such an order was made see the undernoted case (r)

Sufficient description of documents—As it is one of the objects of the affidavit of documents to enable the Court to make an order for production of the documents mentioned therein, the affidavit ought to contain a sufficient description of the documents. A description will be held sufficient, if it is of such a character that if an order for production is made, the Court can determine whether the documents are the same as those ordered to be produced (s). Where there are numerous documents the practice is to tie them up in bundles, to schedule the bundles, and number the document or otherwise ear mark them in such a way that the other party may ask for those which he wants to see (t)

When a party claims to withhold certain documents from production, although some description may be necessary, he need not give such a description as would enable the adversary to know their contents (u). Thus where privilege is claimed for letters, it is not necessary to state the dates or the names of the writers, nor such other particulars as might enable the opponent to discover indirectly the contents (v)

"Not necessary at that stage of the suit"—See notes to r. 6 above, "Not sufficiently material at that stage"

Relating to any matter in question in the suit—Every document which will throw any light on the case is a document relating to a matter in dispute in the suit (w) though it may not be admissible in evidence (x). A document may not be admissible in evidence and yet it may contain information which may either directly or indirectly enable the party seeking discovery either (1) to advance his own case or (2) to damage his adversary's case, or which may fairly lead him to a train of inquiry which may have either of these two consequences (y). Every such document must be included in the affidavit of documents, and the opposite party is entitled to inspection of such documents. Thus a plaintiff may be required to produce for inspection of the defendant correspondence containing mere matter of opinion by non legal agent as to the prospect of the plaintiff's success in the case, though the correspondence may not be admissible in evidence (z)

Non disclosure of documents—Presumption—"It is open to a litigant to refrain from producing any documents that he considers irrelevant, if the other litigant is dissatisfied it is for him to apply for an affidavit of documents, and he can obtain inspection and production of all that appears to him in such affidavit to be relevant and proper. If he fails so to do neither he nor the Court at his suggestion is entitled to draw any inference as to the contents of any such documents . . . It is for

r. 13 the litigant who desires to rely on the contents of documents to put them in evidence in the usual and proper way, if he fails to do so no inference in his favour can be drawn as to the contents thereof (a) But where an order for discovery is made upon a party, and it is alleged by him as to some of the documents that they may have been destroyed or may have perished it is incumbent on him to give evidence of diligent search and of failure to find them if no such evidence is given the presumption arises that the contents of the documents not accounted for are as regards the issue in dispute unfavourable to that party (b)

Several plaintiffs or several defendants—Where there are several plaintiffs or several defendants all must join in making the affidavit of documents unless some specific reasons to the contrary are shown The fact that some of the parties reside in England is no reason why they should be excused from making such affidavit (c)

Minors and lunatics—The next friend or guardian ad litem as the case may be of a minor or a lunatic may be required to make an affidavit of documents (r. 13)

Affidavit of documents from a co defendant—An affidavit of documents may be required by a defendant from a co defendant if there is an issue joined between them but not otherwise (d) See notes to r. 1 above Opposite party

Advocate General—No order can be made against the Advocate General whether he be plaintiff or defendant requiring him to give discovery on oath Hence no affidavit of documents can be required from the Advocate General But an affidavit of documents may be required from the relators (e) See s. 92

Official Liquidator—The Official Liquidator being an officer of the Court should not in the absence of special circumstances be required to make an affidavit as to documents in his possession though he is bound to produce to the adverse litigant the documents which the latter requires to see (f)

Marine Insurance—The affidavit of ships papers which underwriters are entitled to require from the plaintiff in an action on a policy of marine insurance on cargo is not limited to documents in the possession of the plaintiff or other persons interested in the insurance but extends to all material documents in whomsoever's possession they may be (g)

Sealing up parts of documents—Where one part of a document relates to matters in dispute in the suit and another part does not the latter may be sealed up and so concealed from inspection Similarly where protection from discovery can be claimed for one part of a document and not for another part the part which can be protected may be sealed up (h) In some cases the Judge has ordered the sealed parts to be unfastened in order that he might inspect them himself (i) See r. 19 sub r. (a)

Duty of solicitor—Where after a party has made his affidavit of documents his solicitor finds that there are other documents which have not been disclosed it is the duty of the solicitor to bring those documents to the notice of his opponent at the earliest possible opportunity (j)

14. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 14, S. 130.] It shall be for the Court, at any time during the pendency of any suit, to order the production by any party thereto, upon oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power, relating to any matter in question in such suit, as the Court shall think right: and the Court may deal with such documents, when produced, in such manner as shall appear just.

Production of documents—Discovery of documents must be distinguished from production of documents. "The rule as to discovery is the exact contrary of that as to production. You must set out every document in your possession whether you are bound to produce it or not" (l). If the document is privileged from production, it must be disclosed and privilege claimed for it. This rule provides for production of documents upon oath. In actual practice production is now obtained by notice under r. 15 or by order under r. 18. The Court has no discretion under this rule to refuse an order of production unless the documents are privileged (l). At the same time no order shall be made under this rule against a party unless he has directly or indirectly admitted the document to be in his possession or power (m). As to the three heads of privilege, see notes to r. 13 above, "Grounds of objection to production of documents," "Conclusiveness of affidavit of documents," and "Sealing up parts of document."

Failure to produce documents.—Non compliance with an order under this rule does not justify the striking out of the defence. R. 11 below does not apply to such a case (n).

Indian Evidence Act, ss 163 164—Under sec 163 if A calls for a document which he has given B notice to produce, and the document is produced in Court and inspected by A, B can compel A to put the document in evidence. Under s 164 a party refusing to produce a document cannot use it in evidence without the consent of the other side or the order of the Court.

Waiver of privilege. Where a document is privileged the fact that . . .

Partner—One partner of a firm represents the other partners for the purpose of production of documents (p).

Revision—The High Court will not in revision interfere where a lower Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refuses inspection of documents produced before it under this rule (q).

Right to take copies—The inspecting party is entitled to take copies of documents, produced for inspection (r). In a proper case, as where a document is alleged to be forged, the Court may allow a party to a suit to take a photograph of the document in the possession of the other party (s).

15. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 15, S. 131.] Every party to a suit shall be entitled at any time to give notice to any other party, in whose pleadings or affidavits reference is made to any document, to produce such document for the inspection of the party giving such notice, or of his pleader, and to permit him or them to take copies thereof, and any party not complying with such notice shall not afterwards be at liberty to put any such document in evidence on his behalf in such suit unless he shall satisfy the Court that such document relates only to his own title, he being a defendant to the suit, or that he had some other cause or excuse which the Court shall deem sufficient for not complying with such notice, in which case the Court may allow the same to be put in evidence on such terms as to costs and otherwise as the Court shall think fit

Inspection of documents referred to in pleadings or affidavits

Inspection of documents referred to in pleadings and affidavits—Rules 15 to 18 are confined to documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits. They are intended to give the opposite party the same advantage as if the documents referred to had been fully set out in the pleadings (f)

The machinery for the production of documents is of two kinds. In the first place rule 12 of this Order enables a party without filing any affidavit to apply for an order directing any other party to the suit to make discovery on oath of the documents in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in the suit. Under that rule a defendant is not as a rule entitled to discovery before he has filed his written statement (u) to in the plaint unless he has filed his written statement (w). It has been held in Bombay following Quiller v. Heally (x) that r. 15 applies also to documents relied on by the

Calcutta holds that this rule applies to documents entered by the plaintiff in the list attached to the plaint under sub rule (2) of rule 14 (b). Where a document not at all material to the suit is casually referred to in the plaint the defendant is not entitled to inspection of it (c)

A party who is required under this rule to produce a document referred to in his pleadings for the inspection of the opposite party may claim privilege for the document

If a document is referred to in the pleadings it does not follow that it has lost all privilege. The rule only says that if a party will not produce a document to which he has referred in his pleadings, he shall not afterwards be at liberty to put such document in evidence. That is the penalty. He may prefer to lose part of his claim rather than produce the document. [Thus] rule does not take away the privilege of the documents, but only prevents them from being put in evidence unless produced" (d)

Where a plaintiff by his plaint refers to letters written by himself, he is not bound to produce copies of those letters for the inspection of the defendant, there being no reference to copies in the plaint (e). As regards exhibits to an affidavit, it has been held that "any one who has a right to see an affidavit has also a right to see an exhibit referred to in the affidavit so as to be made part of it, just as if it were annexed to the affidavit" (f). A party is entitled under this rule to inspection of letters referred to in an affidavit of the opposite party, though the affidavit has not been filed, provided it is sworn and a copy thereof is furnished to him (g).

Inspection by party or his pleader.—No one is entitled under this rule to inspection except a party or his pleader. The term "party" includes the authorized agent of the party (h). But if such agent was formerly in the employ of the opposite party and in charge of his books, the Court ought not to permit inspection to be taken by him (i).

16. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 16.] Notice to any party to produce any documents referred to in his pleading or affidavits shall be in Form No. 7 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

17. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 17, S. 132.] The party to whom such notice is given shall, within ten days from the receipt of such notice, deliver to the party giving the same, a notice stating a time within three days from the delivery thereof at which the documents, or such of them as he does not object to produce, may be inspected at the office of his pleader, or in the case of bankers' books or other books of account or books in constant use for the purposes of any trade or business, at their usual place of custody, and stating which (if any) of the documents he objects to produce, and on what ground. Such notice shall be in Form No. 8 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require.

"Documents"—This rule applies to all documents mentioned in r. 15, it is not confined to cases where there has been an affidavit of documents under rr. 12 and 13 (j).

18. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 18, Ss. 133, 134] (1) Where the party served with notice under rule 15 omits to give such notice of a time for inspection or objects to give inspection, or offers inspection elsewhere than at the office of his pleader, the Court may, on the application of the party desiring it, make an order for inspection in such place and in such manner as it may think fit. Provided that the order shall not be made when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs

(2) Any application to inspect documents, except such as are referred to in the pleadings, particulars or affidavits of the party against whom the application is made or disclosed in his affidavits of documents, shall be founded upon an affidavit showing of what documents inspection is sought, that the party applying is entitled to inspect them, and that they are in the possession or power of the other party. The Court shall not make such order for inspection of such documents when and so far as the Court shall be of opinion that it is not necessary either for disposing fairly of the suit or for saving costs

Served with notice—No order for inspection can be made under this rule unless notice has been served under r 15 (l)

Sub rule (1)—The proviso to sub rule (1) gives the Court a certain discretion as to inspection. The fact that a great number of documents are referred to in the plaint is no ground for refusing inspection before the written statement is filed (m)

Sub rule (2)—This rule shows that an order for inspection can be made not only in respect of documents mentioned in the plaint, written statement and affidavits of discovery but also in respect of other documents. In the case of documents mentioned in the plaint their relevancy is admitted and no affidavit is necessary. But as to documents not so mentioned an affidavit has to be filed to satisfy the Judge that they are relevant (n). But an opportunity should be given to such party to make an affidavit in answer and if he in such affidavit denies possession of the document the affidavit will be conclusive on that fact (o). But he cannot merely rely on his previous affidavit of documents in answer to an application under this sub rule, for such an affidavit is conclusive for the purposes only of discovery as distinguished from inspection (p)

Appeal—No appeal lies under the Code from an order for inspection. Nor does an appeal lie under cl. 1 of the Letters Patent, for an order directing inspection to be given is not a judgment within the meaning of that clause (q)

Bankers Books Evidence Act—In ordering inspection under the Bankers Books Evidence Act 1891 the Court is guided by the general rules regulating the inspection of documents before trial (r)

19. [New R. S. C., O. 31, r. 19A.] (1) Where inspection of any business books is applied for, the Court may, if it thinks fit, instead of ordering inspection of the original books, order a copy of any entries therein to be furnished and verified by the affidavit of some person who has examined the copy with the original entries, and such affidavit shall state whether or not there are in the original book any and what erasures, interlineations or alterations: Provided that, notwithstanding that such copy has been supplied, the Court may order inspection of the book from which the copy was made

(2) Where on an application for an order for inspection privilege is claimed for any document, it shall be lawful for the Court to inspect the document for the purpose of deciding as to the validity of the claim of privilege

(3) The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit at any time, and whether an affidavit of documents shall or shall not have already been ordered or made, make an order requiring any other party to state by affidavit whether any one or more specific documents, to be specified in the application, is or are, or has or have at any time been, in his possession or power, and, if not then in his possession when he parted with the same and what has become thereof. Such application shall be made on an affidavit stating that in the belief of the deponent the party against whom the application is made has, or has at some time had, in his possession or power the document or documents specified in the application, and that they relate to the matters in question in the suit, or to some of them be identified, the particular documents of which he desires discovery. It is not sufficient to make a general affidavit based on a priori reasoning that certain classes of documents must be in his opponent's possession or power (s)

Sub rule (2)—For an instance in which the Court inspected a document for which privilege was claimed see the under noted case (t)

20. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 20, S. 135.] Where the party from whom discovery of any kind or inspection is sought objects to the same, or any part thereof, the Court may, if satisfied that the right to the discovery or inspection sought depends on the determination of any issue or question in dispute in the suit, or that for any other reason it is desirable that any issue or question in dispute in the suit should be determined before deciding upon the right to the discovery or inspection, order that such issue or question be determined first, and reserve the question as to the discovery or inspection

Premature discovery
Issue to decide upon right to inspection—The object of the rule is to enable the Court to decide an issue in a suit as distinguished from the suit itself for the purposes of discovery (u). See notes to r. 6 above. 'Not sufficiently material at that stage'

21. [R. S. C., O. 31, r. 21, S. 136.] Where any party fails to comply with any order to answer interrogatories, or for discovery or inspection of documents, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not defended, and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and an order may be made accordingly

Non compliance with order for discovery
Dismissal of suit—This rule cannot be applied unless there has been an order for discovery under r. 12 or for inspection under r. 18 (t). And even where such an order has been made, it is only when the default is wilful, and as a last resort that the Court should dismiss the suit or strike out the defence (u). If the parties concerned are purdanashin ladies this should be taken into account before making the order (z). The word "production" which occurred after discovery in the corresponding s. 136 of the Code of 1882 has been omitted in the present rule. It has hence been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (y), and Madras (z), that this rule does not apply to cases where there has been non compliance with an order for production of documents made under r. 14. According to a Lahore decision (a), this rule applies also to orders made under r. 14.

Contempt.—Besides the penalty prescribed by this rule, a party to a suit filed in a Chartered High Court, who has failed to answer or give inspection, is liable to be committed for contempt by that Court. This power has been conferred on Chartered High Courts by their Letters Patent (b). An order of committal for contempt is appealable according to the Bombay decisions (c), but not according to the Allahabad decisions (d). But the Bombay High Court has held that if the contempt is of a criminal nature, e.g., interfering with the trial of a civil suit the order of the Court is made in the criminal jurisdiction and is not appealable under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (e).

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule under O 43, r 1 (f) below (f), nevertheless an order under this rule dismissing a suit has been set aside in the exercise of the Courts' inherent jurisdiction (g). But of course if the defence is struck out and the suit is dismissed an appeal and second appeal will lie from the decree (h).

22. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 24.] Any party may, at the trial of a suit, use in evidence any one or more of the answers or any part of an answer of the opposite party to interrogatories without putting in the others or the whole of such answer. Provided always that in such case the Court may look at the whole of the answers and if it shall be of opinion that any others of them are so connected with those put in that the last-mentioned answers ought not to be used without them, it may direct them to be put in.

23. [New. R. S. C., O. 31, r. 29.] This Order shall apply to minor plaintiffs and defendants, and to the next friends and guardians for the suit of persons under disability.

Minors and lunatics.—Prior to this rule the practice of the different High Courts as to discovery from minors and persons of unsound mind was not uniform. It is useless to note the decisions under the old Code.

ORDER XII.

*Admissions*O. 12,
rr. 1-3Notice of admission of evidence

1. [R. S. C., O. 32, r. 1.] Any party to a suit may give notice, by his pleading, or otherwise in writing, that he admits the truth of the whole or any part of the case of any other party

Different kinds of admissions—The object of obtaining admissions is to do away with the necessity of proving facts that are admitted [see Evidence Act, 1872, s. 55] Admissions are of three kinds, namely,—

I Admissions in pleading—

- (1) actual that is, those contained in the pleadings (O 7, r 5) or in answer to interrogatories (O 11, r 22)
- (2) constructive, that is, those which are merely the consequence of the form of pleading adopted (O 8 rr 3-4, 5)

II Admissions by agreementIII Admissions by notice

Admissions by notice are dealt with in this Order

The importance of admission consists in the fact that either party may, at any stage of the suit move for judgment on the admissions made by the other side (r 6)

2. [R. S. C., O. 32, r. 2, S. 128.] Either party may call upon the other party to admit any document saving all just exceptions, and in case of refusal or neglect to admit after such notice, the costs of proving any such document shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs, and no costs of proving any document shall be allowed unless such notice is given, except where the omission to give the notice is, in the opinion of the Court, a saving of expense

Notice to admit documents

Admissions between co-defendants—Admissions between co-defendants to which the plaintiff is not a party, cannot be treated as evidence against the plaintiff (i)

3. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 3.] A notice to admit document shall be in Form No 9 in Appendix C, with such variations as circumstances may require

Form of Notice

4. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 4.] Any party may, by notice in writing, at any time not later than nine days before the day fixed for the hearing call on any other party to admit, for the purposes of the suit only, any specific fact or facts mentioned in such notice. And in case of refusal or neglect to admit the same within six days after service of such notice, or within such further time as may be allowed by the Court, the costs of proving such fact or facts shall be paid by the party so neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the suit may be, unless the Court otherwise directs. Provided that any admission made in pursuance of such notice is to be deemed to be made only for the purposes of the particular suit, and not as an admission to be used against the party on any other occasion or in favour of any person other than the party giving the notice. Provided also that the Court may at any time allow any party to amend or withdraw any admission so made on such terms as may be just.

5. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 5.] A notice to admit facts shall be in Form No 10 in Appendix C, and admissions of facts shall be in Form No 11 in Appendix C with such variations as circumstances may require.

6. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 6.] Any party may at any stage of a suit, where admissions of fact have been made, either on the pleadings, or otherwise, apply to the Court for such judgment or order as upon such admissions he may be entitled to, without waiting for determination of any other question between the parties and the Court may upon such application make such order, or give such judgment, as the Court may think just.

Scope of the rule—This rule is new. It is a reproduction of O 32 r 6 of the English Rules. It enables either party at any stage of the suit to move for judgment on the admissions which have been made by the other side. Either party may by availing himself of this rule get rid of so much of the suit as to which there is no controversy (j). The rule however is permissive: it does not preclude a party, who does not avail himself of it and proceeds to trial in the ordinary way, from relying at the trial on the admissions made by the opposite party (k).

* The Court may make such order or give such judgment as the Court may think just. —A judgment on admissions is not a matter of right, but is in the

O. 12, r. 6 discretion of the Court. If a case involves questions which cannot be conveniently disposed of on a motion under this rule, the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse the motion (l)

There is no hard and fast rule that where the defendant admits part of the plaintiff's claim and denies the rest of the claim, the Court should, if it gives judgment under this rule for the plaintiff as to the portion of the claim admitted by the defendant, refuse to allow the plaintiff to proceed with the suit as to the remainder of his claim. If there is a clear and unambiguous admission by the defendant as to part of the plaintiff's claim, the Court has jurisdiction to enter judgment as to that part of the plaintiff's claim, and it is in its discretion, having regard to the nature of the case and the allegations contained in the pleadings and the admissions made in Court, whether it should allow the plaintiff to proceed to prove the remainder of his claim (m). A sues B for Rs. 6,800. B admits that only Rs. 4,500 are due, and alleges as to the rest of A's claim that it was in respect of goods as to which there was a separate arrangement between the parties. The issue as to the balance of A's claim being an issue independent of the other part of the claim, the Court may pass judgment for A for Rs. 4,500, and give leave to A to prove his claim to the balance. It is clear that even if the issue as to the balance of A's claim were decided in B's favour, it would not, having regard to B's admission, reduce A's claim below Rs. 4,500 (n).

In the United Telephone Co v Donohoe (o), the plaintiffs sued the defendant for infringement of a patent, claiming injunction and damages. The defendant admitted ten instances of infringement, but denied he had committed any others. The plaintiffs thereupon moved for judgment upon the admissions in the pleadings. In the Court of first instance the Vice Chancellor granted an injunction against infringement by the defendant of the plaintiff's patent, but he refused an enquiry as to damages. The Court of Appeal held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an enquiry as to damages, but that it must be limited to the instances of infringement admitted, and that the judgment having been obtained upon a motion for judgment upon the pleadings, the plaintiffs were bound to take the negative as well as the affirmative allegations therein. Referring to this case, Sanderson, C.J., said in the Calcutta case cited above (p) that the question, whether the Judge who in the first instance heard the application, would have had jurisdiction to give judgment on the admissions and to allow the plaintiffs to proceed to prove the rest of their claim as to the other alleged infringements, if such an application had been made, was not before the Court.

Admissions on pleadings—Under this rule either party may move for judgment upon admissions of fact made on the pleadings or otherwise. Admissions in pleadings are either actual or constructive. Actual admissions consist of facts expressly admitted either in pleadings or in answer to interrogatories [O 11, r. 22]. The patent case cited in the preceding paragraph is an instance of actual admissions. Constructive admissions, on the other hand, are admissions which are inferred or implied from pleadings as a consequence of the form of pleading adopted [O 8, rr. 3, 4, 5]. Constructive admissions usually arise where a defendant has not specifically dealt with some allegation of fact in the plaint of which he does not admit the truth [O 8, r. 3], for as we have seen, every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the written statement, will be taken to be admitted except as against persons under disability [O 8, r 5]. Constructive admissions also arise where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the pleadings evasively and does not answer the point of substance [O 8, r 4].

Illustrations

1. A alleging that he and B having agreed to carry on certain business in partnership, draft articles of partnership were prepared and approved by B and that they both thereupon proceeded with the partnership undertaking sues B for a declaration that he and B were partners and claims that the partnership may be dissolved. B in his written statement admits that he agreed to enter into partnership as alleged, but adds that "terms of the arrangement between himself and the plaintiff were not definitely agreed upon as alleged." This is an evasive denial of the fact of partnership (O 8, r 4) and it will therefore be construed as an admission by B of the partnership. A is therefore entitled under this rule to a decree for dissolution of partnership, without adducing any evidence to prove the partnership. But though the written statement will be construed as an admission of the fact of partnership it will not be construed as an admission of the terms of the partnership. B may therefore claim an inquiry as to the terms of the arrangement of partnership, and if such inquiry is claimed, the Court will direct it by its decree (q).

2 A defendant, by his written statement, simply "puts the plaintiff to proof of the several allegations in the plaint" The denial not being specific (O 8, r 3) the defendant will be deemed to have admitted the facts alleged in the plaint (O 8, r 5) so as to entitle the plaintiff to a decree under this rule without adducing any evidence in support of his case (r)

In applying the present rule in India, it is to be noted that, where a plaintiff applies for a decree upon constructive admissions in a written statement, the Court may in its discretion refuse to pass the decree, if it thinks in the special circumstances of the case that the defendant must not be held to have admitted facts not specifically denied in his written statement (s). See the proviso to r 5 of O 8, and notes thereto.

An order on admissions on the pleadings will not be made, unless the admissions are clear and unequivocal (i). Moreover a plaintiff moving for judgment on admissions in the defendant's written statement must have a clear case and the mere admission by the defendant of a right asserted by the plaintiff, but which has in fact no existence in law, is not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to a judgment establishing his right (u).

Judgment upon admissions made otherwise than on pleadings—A judgment may be given under this rule not only upon admissions made in the pleadings but upon admissions otherwise made. The words or otherwise in this rule are not confined to admissions made under r 1 or r 4 of this Order but are of general application and justify the giving of an immediate judgment when an admission is made by letter of facts which show that the defendant has no defence to the action (c). A judgment may be given under this rule even upon a verbal admission if it is clearly proved (c).

Orders which may be made under this rule—This rule 'was framed for the express purpose, that if there was no dispute between the parties, and if there was on the pleadings such an admission as to make it plain that the plaintiff was entitled to a particular order, he should be able to obtain that order at once upon motion. It must, however, be such an admission of facts as would show that the plaintiff is clearly entitled to the order asked for whether it be in the nature of a decree, or a judgment or anything else. The rule was not meant to apply when there is any serious question of law to be argued. But if there is an admission on the pleadings which clearly entitles the plaintiff to an order, then the intention was that he should not have to wait but might at once obtain any order which could have been made on an original hearing of the action. (x) An order amounting to what is called a preliminary decree in this Code may appropriately be made under this rule upon a simple motion. Where such an order was applied for under the corresponding English rule by a plaintiff in a suit for partition and the defendant contended that that would be giving a decree to the plaintiff and that the plaintiff should wait until the action was set down for trial the Court held that the plaintiff was entitled to an order directing the usual inquiries upon the admissions of the defendant and that he was not bound to wait. (y) [O 20 r 15]. Such orders have also been made in administration actions (z) [O 20 r 13] in actions for dissolution of a partnership (a) [O 20 r 15] in actions for partnership accounts (b) [O 20 r 15] in actions for accounts between principal and agent (c) [O 20, r 16] and in actions for the execution of the trusts of a settlement (d).

Practice—Motions in England under the corresponding English rule are brought on upon an ordinary motion day after notice to the other side. As to form of application, see Daniel v. Ch. Forms 270. The practice in England is when an order is made amounting to what is called a preliminary decree in this Code to adjourn the further hearing of the case without requiring any further prior hearing the words generally used in the order being "and without requiring any further prior hearing than this motion of the said cause the further hearing of the said cause is adjourned." (e) See Beton on Decrees, Vol. I, p. 399 Form No. 5.

"At any stage"—A plaintiff may move for judgment upon admissions in the written statement at any stage of the suit and notwithstanding that he has joined issue on the defence (f).

Co plaintiffs—An application under this rule for an order against a defendant on admissions of fact must be made by all the plaintiffs and not merely by some of them. If the application is made by some of the plaintiffs only, it must be refused (g).

Withdrawal of admission—Where it is shown that an admission was made by mistake the party may be allowed to amend his pleadings under O 6 r 17, for the purpose of withdrawing it upon such terms as to the Court may appear just (h).

Appeal—An order rejecting an application for judgment on admissions is a judgment within the meaning of cl. 13 of the Letters Patent and is appealable (i).

7. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 7.] An affidavit of the pleader or his clerk, of the due signature of any admissions made in pursuance of any notice to admit documents or facts, shall be sufficient evidence of such admissions, if evidence thereof is required

An affidavit of the pleader, or his clerk, of the service of any notice to produce, and of the time when it was served, with a copy of the notice to produce, shall in all cases be sufficient evidence of the service of the notice, and of the time when it was served.

Notice to produce documents—It is always desirable when a document is in the possession or power of the opposite party to give him notice to produce the same for unless such notice is given secondary evidence of the document cannot be given see Indian Evidence Act 1872 s 65 cl (a) and s 66

9. [New R. S. C., O. 32, r. 9.] If a notice to admit or produce specifies documents which are not necessary, the costs occasioned thereby shall be borne by the party giving such notice.

ORDER XIII

Production, Impounding and Return of Documents

1. [Ss 138, 140] (1) The parties or their pleaders shall produce at the first hearing of the suit, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court has ordered to be produced.

(2) The Court shall receive the documents so produced provided that they are accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court directs.

Shall produce at the first hearing—This rule does not exclude the discretion of the Court to receive documentary evidence at a subsequent stage of the proceedings (j) See r 2 below and notes shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof; and the Court receiving any such evidence shall record the reasons for so doing.

"Unless good cause is shown."—This rule has been enacted to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents (l). But no suspicion can attach to certified copies of public documents, such as records of Government or records of judicial proceedings. Such copies therefore may be received in evidence though they have not been produced at the first hearing (l). The rule, however, is not confined to public documents only. The Court may, in its discretion, admit other documents also at a subsequent stage of the proceedings (m). See notes to r 1 above.

Appeal.—The fact that further documentary evidence is admitted after the first hearing is not a good ground of appeal (n). Nor can an appellate Court reject evidence admitted by the Court of first instance simply on that ground (o).

3. [S. 140.] The Court may at any stage of the suit reject any document which it considers irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible, recording the grounds of such rejection.

Rejection of irrelevant or inadmissible documents

Rejection of inadmissible documents.—Questions as to the admissibility of evidence should be decided as they arise, and should not be reserved until judgment in the case is given (p).

When a Court is doubtful as to whether a document is admissible or not, and its decision is open to appeal, it is better to admit than to exclude the document (q).

4. [S. 141.] (1) Subject to the provisions of the next following sub-rule, there shall be endorsed on every document which has been admitted in evidence in the suit the following particulars, namely:—

Endorsements on documents admitted in evidence

- (a) the number and title of the suit,
- (b) the name of the person producing the document,
- (c) the date on which it was produced, and
- (d) a statement of its having been so admitted; and the endorsement shall be signed or initialled by the Judge.

"Shall be endorsed"—The rule as to endorsement of documents admitted in evidence must be strictly followed. In Sadik Husain Khan v Hashim Ali Khan (r), where some of the documents were not so endorsed the Judicial Committee said,

Their Lordships with a view of insisting on the observance of the wholesome provisions of these statutes will in order to prevent injustice be obliged in future on the hearing of Indian appeals to refuse to read or permit to be used any document not endorsed in the manner required. Documents admitted on the record without making the endorsement prescribed by this rule cannot be regarded as being legally before the Court (s) but documents should not be endorsed until they are proved (t). Where a document has been duly proved and put in before a commissioner appointed to take evidence and endorsed by him, it becomes part of the record and is evidence not withstanding the fact that the trial Court did not endorse it as required by this rule (u). The High Court of Madras has held that a mere endorsement under this rule does not necessarily imply that the Court has considered the question of the admissibility of the document and it may be rejected by the Court of appeal if insufficiently stamped (v).

ORDER XIV.

Settlement of Issues and Determination of Suit on Issues of Law or on Issues agreed upon

O. 14, r. 1 1. [S. 146.] (1) Issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other

Framing of issues

(2) Material propositions are those propositions of law or fact which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue or a defendant must allege in order to constitute his defence

(3) Each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other shall form the subject of a distinct issue

(4) Issues are of two kinds (a) issues of fact, (b) issues of law

(5) At the first hearing of the suit the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the parties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material propositions of fact or of law the parties are at variance, and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to depend

(6) Nothing in this rule requires the Court to frame and record issues where the defendant at the first hearing of the suit makes no defence

Of the framing of issues—The plaint and written statement in a suit are called pleadings [O. 6, r. 1] Section 25 of the Evidence Act enacts that no fact need be proved at the hearing which a party has admitted by his pleadings unless the Court requires proof thereof. Admissions on pleadings may be either actual or constructive (y) [O 8, rr 3, 4, 5]. Issues are to be framed in respect only of those facts which have been alleged by one party and either denied or not admitted by the other party (z). They must however be confined to material facts, that is to points on which the right decision of the case depends. The practice of raising issues which do not state the main questions in the suit but only various subsidiary matters of fact upon which there is no agreement between the parties is embarrassing, and must be avoided (a). Where an issue, though in terms covering the main question in the cause, does not sufficiently direct the attention of the parties to the main questions of fact necessary to be decided and a party may have been prevented from adducing evidence a fresh issue may be directed to try the principal question of fact (b).

The duty of raising issues rests under the Code of Civil Procedure on the Court, and it would be unsafe to presume from the failure of the Court to raise the necessary issues an intention of the defendant to admit the facts which the plaintiff was bound to prove (c). See also notes to O 8, r 5.

Omission to frame issues—Where a material fact stated in the plaint is denied or is not admitted in the written statement, the Court must frame an issue on the fact denied. What is the consequence of an omission to frame an issue of fact? The answer depends on the following considerations. If, though no issue is framed on the fact, the parties adduce evidence on the fact and discuss it before the Court, and the Court decides the point as if there was an issue framed on it, the decision will not be set aside in appeal on the ground merely that no issue was framed. The reason is that mere omission to frame an issue is not fatal to the trial of a suit (d). But if the point denied in the written statement is not tried at all, or if tried, is tried imperfectly so as to cause failure of justice, the case will in appeal be remanded for a re trial after framing the necessary issue (e). In other words, omission to frame an issue is an irregularity which may or may not affect the disposal of a suit on the merits. If it does, the appellate Court should remand the case for a new trial to the lower Court after framing the necessary issue. If it does not the appellate Court should not remand the case (s 99). In Mitna v Syud Fuzl (f) their Lordships of the Privy Council said—

In this case the omission to raise the issues was brought before the notice of the appellate Court, the appellate Court expressed its regret and their Lordships are glad to observe that it did express its regret, that the principal Sudder Ameen had omitted to settle the issues. The [appellate] Court however, nevertheless conceived that it was not under any positive obligation to remand the case, but seeing that the parties had gone to trial knowing what the real question between them was that the evidence had been taken, and that the conclusion had been in the opinion of the appellate Court correctly drawn from that evidence they thought it within their competence to affirm that decision without sending the case back for a re trial. Their Lordships sitting here are not prepared to say that the Court had not power to do so under the 35th section [now O 41, r 25] of the Civil Procedure Code....[Their Lordships] think that under all the circumstances of the case, substantial justice having been done, there has not been that fatal mis trial of the cause which vitiates all the proceedings and renders a new trial necessary.

If, though no issue is framed on the fact, the parties adduce evidence on the fact and discuss it before the Court, and the Court decides the point, as if there was an issue framed on it, the decision will not be set aside in appeal on the ground merely that no issue was framed. the question of the sound disposing mind of the Diwan. was raised, and was material excepting in one respect. Whatever system of pleading may exist the object is that each side may be fully alive to the questions that are about to be argued in order that they may have an opportunity of bringing forward such evidence as may be appropriate to the issues, and it may perhaps be not altogether immaterial to observe that the question of the capacity of the Diwan does not appear to have been prominently raised at all events in the first instance. Their Lordships are however of opinion that they must assume that the question of his capacity was open upon the proceedings sufficiently to give each Court below the right to form a judgment upon the matter.

Wrong Issue—If the first Court frames and tries wrong issues the appellate Court should lay down the proper issues and remand the case for a new trial (k). This however not necessary if the first Court frames a wrong issue but the judgment given a finding on the correct issue. In such a case the appellate Court need not remand the case (l).

Relief not founded on pleadings—As a rule relief not founded on the pleadings should not be granted. But where the substantial matters which constitute the title of all the parties are touched though obscurely in the issues, and they have been fully put in evidence and have formed the main subject of discussion before the Court the Court may grant a relief though it may not be founded on the pleadings. Thus in a case where the plaintiff and the defendant each claims to be exclusively entitled to certain lands the Court may if the above conditions are satisfied declare each to be entitled to a moiety (j). Similarly the Court may in a suit for ejectment pass a decree for redemption (k). But if a case not alleged by the plaintiff in the pleadings is disclosed in the evidence the Court should not deal with it unless a preliminary issue is raised on it and the defendant is given an opportunity of meeting it. If the plaintiff goes to trial deliberately on issues which disclose a case not made out in the pleadings the suit should be determined on those issues notwithstanding the defect in the form of the pleadings (m).

Variance between pleading and proof.—No amount of evidence can be allowed into upon a plea which was never put forward (n). It is impossible to counsel defendants by inferences of fact which are not only not consistent with the allegations that are to be found in the pleadings which constitute the case which the defendant has to meet but which are in reality contradictory of the case made by the plaintiff. It will introduce the greatest amount of uncertainty into judicial proceedings if the finding of a combination of causes is to be founded upon inferences at variance with the case that the plaintiff has pleaded and by joining issue in the cause has undertaken to prove. This principle applies only to cardinal facts and cardinal issues and not to subsidiary facts and issues based thereon. In applying the principle the whole of the circumstances must be taken into account and carefully scrutinized (p).

2. [S. 146, 6th para.]

thereof may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, postpone the settlement of the issue of fact until after the issues of law have been determined.

"Or any part thereof"—These words are new

Issue of fact—The rule gives no power to frame a preliminary issue of fact and the Bombay High Court has said that the practice of trying certain issues of fact separately is a dangerous practice (q). But in a case in which the trial of an issue as to the quantum of damages was postponed till after the trial of the issue as to liability, the Privy Council said that the course adopted was a very usual, very proper and a very convenient course (r).

3. [S. 147.] The Court may frame the issues from all or any of the following materials —

Materials from which issues may be framed

- allegations made on oath by the parties, or by any persons present on their behalf, or made by the pleaders of such parties;
- allegations made in the pleadings or in answers to interrogatories delivered in the suit,
- the contents of documents produced by either party

Issues not to be inconsistent with pleadings—Issues whether raised from the allegations in the pleadings or from other materials should not be inconsistent with the pleadings (s). Thus if I sue B to set aside a document on the ground that it was not executed by him and that it is a forgery the Court should not raise an issue as to whether the document was executed under coercion or undue influence. The latter issue assumes that the document was executed by the plaintiff while the case set up in the plaint is that it was not executed by him at all (t). But the plea that the document in suit was obtained by the defendant by fraud is not inconsistent with the plea that it was obtained by undue influence. Therefore where fraud is pleaded in the plaint and the plaintiff's counsel alleges at the hearing that the plaintiff was subjected to undue influence the Court may allow issues both as to fraud and undue influence (u).

Appeal—No appeal lies from an order refusing to frame an issue asked for by a party to a suit (v).

The High Court of Madras once held that an appeal lies under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from an order made at the settlement of issues fixing a distant date for the hearing of the suit (w). But this decision has been disapproved in later cases (x).

But if a case not alleged by the plaintiff in the pleadings is disclosed in the evidence, the Court should not deal with it unless a special issue is raised on it and the defendant is given an opportunity of meeting it. If the parties go to trial deliberately on issues which disclose a case not made out in the pleadings the suit should be determined on those issues notwithstanding the defect in the form of the pleadings (m).

Variance between pleading and proof—No amount of evidence can be looked into upon a plea which was never put forward (n). It will introduce the greatest amount of uncertainty into judicial proceedings if the final determination of causes is to be founded upon inferences at variance with the case that the plaintiff has pleaded and, by joining issue in the cause, has undertaken to prove. This principle applies not only to the main issue but to subordinate issues."

4. [S. 148.] Where the Court is of opinion that the issues cannot be correctly framed without the examination of some person not before the Court or without the inspection of some document not produced in the suit, it may adjourn the framing of the issues to a future day, and may (subject to any law then in force) compel the attendance of any person or the production of any document by the person in whose possession or power it is by summons or other process.

5. [S. 149.] (1) The Court may at any time before passing a decree amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed.

(2) The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced.

Sub rule (1)—The first part of sub rule (1) leaves it to the discretion of the Court to amend the issues or frame additional issues as appears from the word "may" while the latter part makes it imperative on the Judge to amend the issues and frame additional issues as appears from the word "shall" (y)

of one character into a suit or defence of a different and inconsistent character. Thus if A sues B for damages for wrongful occupation of his land, treating B as a trespasser, he should not be allowed to raise an additional issue claiming rent of the land from B, treating him as his tenant (b). But if a suit is brought on a mortgage, and it transpires at the hearing that the witnesses to the mortgage deed were not present at its execution, but had put their names on the document on the acknowledgment by the executant of his signature, it is perfectly competent to the Judge to frame an additional issue as to whether the deed of mortgage was valid under s 59 of the Transfer of Property Act though the invalidity of the deed is not set up as a defence in the written statement. Every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions which cut at the root of the subject matter of controversy between the parties (c). See notes to r 3 above, "Issues not to be inconsistent with the pleadings."

5. [S. 149.] (1) The Court may at any time before passing a decree amend the issues or frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the matters in controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed.

Power to amend and strike out issues

(2) The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced

Sub rule (1)—The first part of sub rule (1) leaves it to the discretion of the Court to amend the issues or frame additional issues as appears from the word 'may' while the latter part makes it imperative on the Judge to amend the issues and frame additional issues as appears from the word 'shall' (y)

May amend the issues or frame additional issues—As a general rule the Court should not frame even additional issues from materials other than those specified above in r 3 Dodbasappa v Pradhanappa (1925) 27 Bom L R 1318, 91 I C 426, ('26) A B 33 The Court may, however, under special circumstances allow issues to be raised upon a matter which does not strictly come within the proper scope of the proceedings, provided no injustice is done to either party (z) It follows that the Court should not frame any additional issue so as to make for either party a case which he had no intention of making for himself (a) Nor should it frame an additional issue so as to convert a suit or defence of one character into a suit or defence of a different and inconsistent character Thus if A sues B for damages for wrongful occupation of his land, treating B as a trespasser, he should not be allowed to raise an additional issue claiming rent of the land from B, treating him as his tenant (b) But if a suit is brought on a mortgage, and it transpires at the hearing that the witnesses to the mortgage deed were not present at its execution, but had put their names on the document on the acknowledgment by the executant of his signature, it is perfectly competent to the Judge to frame an additional issue as to whether the deed of mortgage was valid under s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act though the invalidity of the deed is not set up as a defence in the written statement Every Court trying civil causes has inherent jurisdiction to take cognizance of questions which cut at the root of the subject matter of controversy between the parties (c) See notes to r 3 above, "Issues not to be inconsistent with the pleadings"

2. [S 153] Where there are more defendants than one, and any one of the defendants is not at issue with the plaintiff on any question of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment for or against such defendant and the suit shall proceed only against the other defendants

3. [S 154] (1) Where the parties are at issue on some question of law or of fact and issues have been framed by the Court as here inbefore provided, if the Court is satisfied that no further argument or evidence than the parties can at once adduce is required upon such of the issues as may be sufficient for the decision of the suit, and that no injustice will result from proceeding with the suit forthwith, the Court may proceed to determine such issues, and, if the finding thereon is sufficient for the decision, may pronounce judgment accordingly, whether the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only or for the final disposal of the suit

Provided that, where the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, the parties or their pleaders are present and none of them objects

(2) Where the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the Court shall postpone the further hearing of the suit, and shall fix a day for the production of such further evidence, or for such further argument as the case requires.

4. [S. 155.] Where the summons has been issued for the final disposal of the suit and either the party fails without sufficient cause to produce the evidence on which he relies, the Court may at once pronounce judgment, or may, if it thinks fit, after framing and recording issues, adjourn the suit for the production of such evidence as may be necessary for its decision upon such issues.

ORDER XVI.

Summoning and Attendance of Witnesses.

1. [S. 159.] At any time after the suit is instituted, the parties may obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents.

Difference between the old section and the present rule This rule corresponds with s 159, C P C, 1882, except as to the time for application for writs and summonses, for which see next paragraph)

Time for application for witness summons.—Under s. 159 of the Code of 1882, the application for summonses to witnesses was to be made after the writ of summons was delivered or sent for service on the defendant and before the day fixed for the summons for the appearance of the defendant. Under the present rule, the application may be made at any time after the institution of the suit.

Whether witness summons can be refused.—A party is entitled as of right to summonses to witnesses (g). So long as the application is made after the institution of the suit, the Court is bound to issue the summons. It does not matter that the party had himself originally undertaken to bring his witnesses and has failed to do so (h). Nor does it matter that the application is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that the witnesses cannot be present in Court before the final disposal of the suit (i). The Court may in either of these cases refuse to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witnesses, but it has no power to refuse to issue summonses (j). The only case in which the Court has power to refuse to issue summonses is where the application is not made bona fide as where a decree holder attaches property belonging to a muth and, on the head of the muth objecting to the attachment applies to summon him as his own witness requiring his personal attendance in Court with the sole object of putting pressure upon him to relinquish his claim. In such a case the Court may, in the exercise of its inherent power to prevent the abuse of its own process [s. 151] refuse to issue the summons (A).

Remedy of party when witness summons refused.—Where a party applies for summonses to witnesses, but the application is refused he cannot appeal from the order of refusal. He must wait until the suit is disposed of, and if the decree in the suit goes against him he may appeal from the decree, and set forth the refusal of the lower Court to issue summonses as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal (s. 100). If the appellate Court finds that the refusal has injuriously affected the decision of the case it may set aside the decree, and direct the lower Court to issue the summonses, but if it finds that the refusal has not injuriously affected the decision it should not interfere with the decree (B) [see s. 99].

Form of summonses to witnesses.—See Schedule I, App. B, No. 13.

2. [S. 160] (1) The party applying for a summons shall, before the summons is granted and within a period to be fixed, pay into Court such a sum of money as appears to the Court to be sufficient to defray the travelling and other expenses of the person summoned in passing to and from the Court in which he is required to attend, and for one day's attendance.

(2) In determining the amount payable under this rule the Court may, in the case of any person summoned to give evidence as an expert, allow reasonable remuneration for the time occupied both in giving evidence and in performing any work of an expert character necessary for the case.

(3) Where the Court is subordinate to a High Court, regard shall be had, in fixing the scale of such expenses, to any rules made in that behalf.

Sub rule (2) is new

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O. 49 r. 3 cl. (3)].

Travelling and other expenses.—A witness is entitled under this rule only to travelling expenses and other expenses of a similar nature, but he is not entitled to compensation for loss of time (m). The right to claim travelling expenses is not lost merely because the witness did not apply for them before giving his evidence. The reason is that a witness is entitled to demand his travelling expenses at any time even after he has given his evidence (n). If a witness is summoned by the plaintiff, he is entitled to claim his travelling expenses from the plaintiff, though he has not been examined by the plaintiff, but is examined by the defendant as his witness (o). See also the undermentioned case (p).

(A) Sarabhai v. Nataraja (1905) 2 Hyd. 3

Remedy of witness if travelling expenses not paid.—The only remedy is by an application to the Court that heard the case, no separate suit will lie to recover such expenses (q).

Default on part of process server.—Where a plaintiff pays into Court the process fee and the expenses of his witnesses, but the summons is not served owing to default on the part of the process server, it is illegal to dismiss his suit for want of proof in the absence of the witnesses (r).

3. [S. 161.] The sum so paid into Court shall be tendered to the person summoned, at the time of serving the summons, if it can be served personally.

Tender of expenses to witness

4. [S. 162.] (1) Where it appears to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf that the sum paid into Court is not sufficient to cover such expenses or reasonable remuneration, the Court may direct such further sum to be paid to the person summoned as appears to be necessary on that account, and, in case of default in payment, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the movable property of the party obtaining the summons, or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence, or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

Procedure where insufficient sum paid in.

(2) Where it is necessary to detain the person summoned for a longer period than one day, the Court may, from time to time, order the party at whose instance he was summoned to pay into Court such sum as is sufficient to defray the expenses of his detention for such further period, and, in default of such deposit being made, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the movable property of such party, or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence, or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

(2) Where the Court sees reason to believe that such evidence or production is material, and that such person has, without lawful excuse, failed to attend or to produce the document in compliance with such summons or has intentionally avoided service, it may issue a proclamation requiring him to attend to give evidence or to produce the document at a time and place to be named therein, and a copy of such proclamation shall be affixed on the outer door or other conspicuous part of the house in which he ordinarily resides

(3) In lieu of or at the time of issuing such proclamation or at any time afterwards the Court may in its discretion issue a warrant either with or without bail for the arrest of such person and may make an order for the attachment of his property to such amount as it thinks fit not exceeding the amount of the costs of attachment and of any fine which may be imposed under rule 12

Rules as to witnesses to apply to parties summoned

Duty of suitors to give evidence on their own behalf—In Lal Kunuar v Chiranj Lal (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council severely condemned the practice followed in some parts of India of advocates omitting to call their own client as a witness in the hope of forcing their opponents to call him as their witness in order that they themselves may have the opportunity of cross examining their own client when called by the other side. Referring to this practice their Lordships said It is a vicious practice unworthy of a high toned or reputable system of advocacy. It must embarrass and perplex judicial investigation and, it is to be feared too often enables fraud falsehood or chicanery to baffle justice

ORDER XVII

Adjournments.

1. [S. 156.] (1) The Court may, if sufficient cause is shown, at any stage of the suit grant time to the parties or to any of them, and may from time to time adjourn the hearing of the suit.

Court may grant time and adjourn hearing.

- (2) In every such case the Court shall fix a day for the further hearing of the suit, and may make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the costs occasioned by the adjournment :

Costs of adjournment

Provided that, when the hearing of evidence has once begun, the hearing of the suit shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the hearing beyond the following day to be necessary for reasons to be recorded.

May adjourn.—This rule gives a discretion to the Court to grant time to the parties and to adjourn the hearing of a suit. On the one hand, no adjournment should be granted if no sufficient cause is shown (a) On the other hand, the Court should not refuse an adjournment if sufficient cause is shown (b) What is sufficient cause is a question of fact in each case

Payment of costs as a condition precedent.—A sues B for damages. At the hearing of the suit B applies for an adjournment The hearing is adjourned on the terms that B should pay Rs 50 to A for costs before the next hearing, and that if he fails to do so, his defence would be struck off and the suit would be proceeded with ex parte. B fails to pay the costs The Court may proceed with the suit ex parte (c) But the Court cannot do so if the payment of costs was not a condition precedent to the hearing of B's case (d)

Pauper suit.—The Rangoon High Court has held that payment of costs by the plaintiff may be made a condition precedent to his being granted an adjournment although he is suing in forma pauperis (e)

2. [S. 157.] Where, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by Order IX or make such other order as it thinks fit.

O. 17, r. 2

Distinction between O 9 and O 17—The provisions of O 9 by themselves do not apply to a case in which the plaintiff or defendant has already appeared but has failed to appear at an adjourned hearing of the suit or such a case the procedure is laid down in O 17 which deals with adjournments (f)

"One of the modes directed by Order IX"—The effect of this rule is to assimilate the procedure in cases where there is default of appearance at an adjourned hearing with that in cases where there is such default at the first hearing. The result is that though a party may have appeared at the first hearing but fails to appear at an adjourned hearing...

under this rule and O 9, r 3, for an order to set the dismissal aside (g), and if the defendant fails to appear at an adjourned hearing the Court may pass an ex parte decree under this rule and O 9, r 8. Under this rule and O 9, r 13, for a hearing, the Court may r 3, and the plaintiff may then, if so advised, either bring a fresh suit, or apply for an order to set the dismissal aside under this rule and O 9, r 4 (i).

After a decree has been passed, the Court has no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit under this rule and O 9, r 8, for plaintiff's default. This is because once a decree has been made in a suit the suit cannot be dismissed unless the decree is reversed on appeal (j).

May proceed under O 9 or make such other order as it thinks fit—The High Court of Bombay has held that where the plaintiff has made a case which, if uncontradicted, would entitle him to a decree, but does not appear at an adjourned hearing, the Court should not dismiss the suit under this rule and O 9, r 8, but should decide the case on the merits. The reason given is that O 9, r 8 does not apply where the plaintiff has made out a case which if uncontradicted, would entitle him to the relief claimed (k). On the other hand, the Allahabad High Court has held that the words "or make such other order as it thinks fit" do not empower the Court to dispose of the suit on the merits, but only to grant a further adjournment and if the Court does not adjourn the hearing, it should proceed under this rule and O 9, that is to say, dismiss the suit under O 9, r 8 if the plaintiff does not appear and pass an ex parte decree under O 9, r 8, if the defendant does not appear (l). In Calcutta it has been held that where there are no materials on the record the Court should proceed under r 2 above, but if there are materials on the record the Court ought to proceed under rule 3 (m). It has been held in some cases that if the Court refuses a further adjournment and dismisses the suit if the plaintiff does not appear, or passes an ex parte decree if the defendant does not appear, but omits to state whether the order was made under this rule or r 3 below, the order must be taken to have been made under this rule (n), unless it clearly appears from the proceedings that there has been a decision on the merits (c). If a suit is decreed ex parte under this rule the defendant may apply to set aside the decree under O 9, r 13 (d).

There does not seem to be any doubt that default of appearance before hearing in a case of general adjournment as distinguished from an adjournment granted under r 3 to enable a party to perform any act necessary to the further progress of the suit, is within this rule and not under r 3 so that if the plaintiff does not appear the Court may dismiss the suit under this rule and O 9 r 8 and if the defendant does not appear it may pass an ex parte decree under this rule and O 9, r 6 (p).

"Adjourned hearing"—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the word adjourned in this rule refers to an adjournment upon the application of parties granted under r 1 and not an adjournment necessitated by the rules of the Court relating to the regulation of its own business (q).

"Fail to appear"—See notes to O 9, r 9. Appearance.

Non appearance on day fixed for judgment.—A suit cannot be dismissed for non-appearance of parties on the day fixed for delivery of judgment (r).

Remedy—See notes to the next rule under the head Remedy.

3. [S. 158.] Where any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses, or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit, for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default proceed to decide the suit forthwith.

Court may proceed notwithstanding either party fails to produce evidence etc

Scope of the rule—The provisions of this rule do not apply unless—

(1) the hearing is adjourned on the application of a party to the suit as distinguished from an adjournment by the Court of its own motion (s).

(2) the hearing is adjourned on the application of the party who subsequently makes the default (t).

(3) the adjournment is granted to enable the party to produce his evidence or to cause the attendance of his witnesses or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit and

(4) the party fails to perform any of the acts for which the adjournment was granted within the time allowed by the Court.

Procedure to be followed under this rule—Rule 2 applies to cases where the hearing is adjourned for matter for what purpose and the parties or any of them fail to appear at the adjourned hearing. The present rule is directed to a case where the

O. 17, r. 3 hearing is adjourned at the instance of a party for some one or other of the purposes specified in the rule, and the party fails to perform the specified act or acts for which the adjournment was granted within the time allowed by the Court (v) In such a case, the rule says, "the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forth with" These words do not mean that the Court may dismiss the suit if the plaintiff is in default, or pass a decree against the defendant if the defendant is in default (w) What they mean is that the Court may further adjourn the hearing, or it may, without granting any further adjournment, proceed to try the suit and take such evidence as may be tendered by the parties and decide the suit on the merits (x) Thus where an adjournment is granted to the plaintiff to amend the plaint, but the plaintiff fails to amend the plaint, and the Court refuses a further adjournment, the Court should not dismiss the suit for default but decide it on the merits (y) The word "forthwith" means "without granting any further adjournment" [contrast the words "at once pronounce judgment" in O 15, r 4] Where the adjournment is not for the purpose of performing any act necessary to the further progress of the suit, in other words, it is a general adjournment, default of appearance at the adjourned hearing comes within r 2 above and not under this rule (z)

Remedy.—Where a suit is disposed of under the first part of r 2 above, it is open to the party aggrieved by the order to proceed under O 9, r 9, or O 9, r 13, as the case may be, see notes to r 2 above, "One of the modes directed by Order 9" But where a case is decided under the present rule, the decision amounts to a decree, and the remedy of the party aggrieved is by way of appeal (a) or by way of review (b) As to what points may be taken in appeal and what in review, see the undermentioned case (c)

Case where default under this rule is coupled with default of appearance under rule 2—If the hearing of a suit is adjourned on the application of the plaintiff to enable him to produce his evidence or to perform any other act as mentioned in this rule, and the plaintiff does not appear at the adjourned hearing, should the Court proceed under this rule or under rule 2? The High Court of Madras has held that the Court should in such a case proceed under r 2 and dismiss the suit for default so that the plaintiff may have an opportunity to apply under O 9, r 9, to set aside the dismissal (d) The High Court of Bombay has held that the Court should proceed under rule 2 and dismiss the suit for default (e), unless the evidence has been closed in which case it should proceed under rule 3 and deal with the suit on the merits (f) The High Court of Lahore has held that if there are no sufficient materials on the record the Court should proceed under r 2 above (g), but if there are sufficient materials it should proceed to decide the suit under this rule (h) In Allahabad the balance of authority seems to be in favour of the view that the Court should proceed under r 2 and not under this rule (i) The Patna High Court has held that this rule does not apply unless the hearing has commenced (j) The High Court of Calcutta has held that in order to apply the procedure of rule 3 two elements must be present, viz (1) the adjournment must have been at the instance of the party and (2) there must be materials on the record for the Court to deal with the suit, and that the presence of the one element without the other does not justify the application of rule 3 (l)

"To whom time has been granted"—Where a party has paid the process fee for summoning witnesses, but the witnesses are not served, and the Court adjourns the hearing to enable its officer to serve the summonses, the adjournment does not amount to granting of time within the meaning of this rule and the rule does not apply (f)

Execution proceedings—The provisions of this Order do not apply to execution proceedings (m)

ORDER XVIII.

Hearing of the Suit and Examination of Witnesses.

1. [S. 179, Explan.] The plaintiff has the right to begin unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant, the plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the relief which he seeks, in which case the defendant has the right to begin

Right to begin

Right to begin—The right to begin is to be determined by the rules of evidence. As a general rule the party on whom the burden of proof rests should begin. Sections 101-114 of the Indian Evidence Act I of 1872 deal with burden of proof. Section 102 of the Act provides that the burden of proof lies on that party who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side. Thus if A sues B for the recovery of a piece of land of which B is in possession, the burden of proof lies on A, for if no evidence were given on either side, B would be entitled to retain his possession.

"Unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff."—"Facts" mean 'all material facts'. Thus where a defendant admits only some of the facts alleged by the plaintiff, it does not give him the right to begin (n)

Preliminary issue raised by defendant that suit does not lie—"Where the defendant raises a preliminary issue that the suit is barred as res judicata, the defendant has the right to begin (o)

Preliminary issue raised by respondent that appeal does not lie—In such a case, according to the Bombay High Court, the appellant has the right to begin. The decision was put on the ground of established practice in the Bombay High Court (p)

2. [S. 179, 1st para., S. 180, 1st and 2nd paras.] (1) On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove

(2) The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any) and may then address the Court generally on the whole case.

(3) The party beginning may then reply generally on the whole case

The other party shall then state his case —Where there are two sets of defendants and their interests are practically the same, the rule is that after the plaintiff has closed his case both the defendants should state their case before any evidence is given by either defendant (g)

Some of the defendants supporting plaintiff's case —Where there are several defendants and some of them support the plaintiff's case the rule is that the plaintiff and such of the defendants as support his case, wholly or in part must address the Court and call their evidence in the first place and then the other party that is the other defendants, should address the Court and call their evidence (r)

Hearing of arguments —If in a case where a party, having an opportunity of addressing the Court does not do so the judgment cannot be set aside because it was delivered without hearing arguments (s)

3. [S. 180, 3rd para.] Where there are several issues, the burden of proving some of which lies on the other party, the party beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other party, and, in the latter case, the party beginning may produce evidence on those issues after the other party has produced all his evidence, and the other party may then reply specially on the evidence so produced by the party beginning, but the party beginning will then be entitled to reply generally on the whole case

4. [S. 181.] The evidence of the witnesses in attendance shall be taken orally in open Court in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge

Evidence of witnesses.—It is the duty of the Judge to examine every witness tendered, unless it appears clearly that the object of summoning a large number of witnesses is to obstruct or delay justice (i). It is not right for the Judge to select a certain number of witnesses and send away the rest, because he thinks that they would only prove the same facts as those already deposed to (u), or because he is satisfied of the evidence already recorded (v). If he does so, the Appellate Court may remand the case with a direction to him to take the evidence of the witnesses tendered by the party, but not examined by the Judge (w).

Evidence shall be taken "in open Court."—As to the examination of witnesses "on commission," see Order 26 below.

5. [S. 182.] In cases in which an appeal is allowed, the evidence of each witness shall be taken down in writing, in the language of the Court, by or in the presence and under the personal direction and superintendence of the Judge, not ordinarily in the form of question and answer, but in that of a narrative, and, when completed, shall be read over in the presence of the Judge and of the witness, and the Judge shall, if necessary, correct the same, and shall sign it.

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 1 cl (4)].

Presence of parties—Where evidence is taken in the absence of the opposite party, it will be rejected by the Court of appeal if the objection to the reception of the evidence was taken before the Court trying the suit. If no such objection was taken, the appellate Court will not remand the case especially if the other evidence in the case is sufficient to support the decision of the lower Court (x). See Indian Evidence Act 1872, s 167.

"Shall be read over"—There is a difference of opinion whether, if the deposition is not read over to the witness as required by this rule or interpreted to him as required by r 6 below, it is admissible in evidence in trials for perjury and forgery, it being held in some cases that the deposition is not admissible in evidence (y), while in other cases that it is (z). The former view proceeds on the ground that the deposition not being read over or interpreted to the witness, it does not prove itself under sec 80 of the Evidence Act, 1872, and that it cannot be proved in any other way having regard to the provisions of sec 91 of that Act. The latter view proceeds on the ground that though the deposition does not in such a case prove itself under sec 80 of the Evidence Act, it may be proved in any other way, e.g., by the Judge who took it down, and that sec 91 of the Act is no bar to such proof.

ORDER XIX

Affidavits

1. [S. 194] Any Court may at any time for sufficient reason order that any particular fact or facts may be proved by affidavit, or that the affidavit of any witness may be read at the hearing, on such conditions as the Court thinks reasonable

Power to order any point to be proved by affidavit

Provided that where it appears to the Court that either party bona fide desires the production of a witness for cross-examination, and that such witness can be produced, an order shall not be made authorizing the evidence of such witness to be given by affidavit

2. [S. 195.] (1) Upon any application evidence may be given by affidavit, but the Court may, at the instance of either party, order the attendance for cross-examination of the deponent

Power to order attendance of deponent for cross-examination

(2) Such attendance shall be in Court, unless the deponent is exempted from personal appearance in Court, or the Court otherwise directs

3. [S. 196.] (1) Affidavits shall be confined to such facts as the deponent is able of his own knowledge to prove, except on interlocutory applications, on which statements of his belief may be admitted provided that the grounds thereof are stated

Matters to which affidavits shall be confined

(2) The costs of every affidavit which shall unnecessarily set forth matters of hearsay or argumentative matter, or copies of or extracts from documents, shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be paid by the party filing the same

Grounds of belief—The grounds of belief must be stated with sufficient particularity to enable the Court to judge whether it would be safe to act on the deponent's belief (h)

ORDER XX

Judgment and Decree

O. 20, r. 1

1. [S. 198.] The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which due notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders

Judgment when pronounced

See s 33 above

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3, cl (5)].

Evidence taken before another Judge—As a general rule judgment must be given upon evidence taken by the Judge before himself, and not upon evidence taken before another person (i) In the three following cases the Judge may give judgment upon evidence recorded by some other Judge or person —

- (1) Under O 18, r 15, when the Judge who has heard the evidence is prevented by death, transfer or other cause from concluding the trial of the suit
- (2) Under O 26, r 1, where the evidence has been taken by a commissioner of a witness residing within the jurisdiction who is exempted under the Code from attending the Court or is unable to attend from sickness or infirmity
- (3) Under O 26, r 4, where the evidence has been taken by a commissioner of a witness residing beyond the jurisdiction and of other persons specified in the rule

Notice to parties—Notice should be given in the manner prescribed by s 140 A judgment delivered without notice to parties is not a judgment pronounced within the meaning of this rule (j)

Judgment not pronounced—A judgment not pronounced in Court does not operate as a judgment, it operates only as minutes or memoranda made by the Judge who wrote it (k) The posting of a notice on the notice board of the Court announcing the result of a case is not a sufficient compliance with this rule (l)

Non compliance with rules 1, 2 and 3—Where a judgment is not pronounced, dated, or signed in conformity with the requirements of the Code, it constitutes a mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99, it affords no ground for reversal in appeal of the decree based on it (m)

2. [S. 199.] A Judge may pronounce a judgment written but not pronounced by his predecessor.

Power to pronounce judgment written by Judge's predecessor

Chartered High Courts This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3, cl (5)] The High Court of Bombay has held that where a Judge of the High Court dictates his judgment to a shorthand writer but does not see or approve the transcript, the transcript cannot be treated as his judgment, but a letter from him to the Prothonotary stating his final decision and the exact order made and asking that it should be communicated to the parties in Court may be treated as a judgment although it gives no reasons (n)

Written by his predecessor.—A Judge may pronounce a judgment written by his predecessor who has heard the evidence even though it was written after retirement or transfer and after he had left the judicial post he occupied when he heard the evidence (o) The fact that the transferred officer himself pronounces the judgment does not make any difference (p)

May pronounce.—The word “may” leaves a Judge the option to pronounce a judgment according to his own view of the case though it may be different from the judgment written by his predecessor who heard the case (q).

Non-compliance with rules 1, 2 and 3.—See notes to r 1 above under the same head

3. [S. 202.] The judgment shall be dated and signed by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and, when once signed, shall not afterwards be altered or added to, save as provided by section 152 or on review.

Judgment to be signed

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3, cl (5)]

Shall not afterwards be altered.—A decree cannot be altered by a Court even with the consent of parties except in the modes prescribed by this rule (r) Where a District Judge delivered a judgment in open Court, but suspended the issue of the decree pending the production by the plaintiff of a certificate of succession, it was held that it was not competent to the Judge to cancel the judgment and deliver another judgment inconsistent with the first (s) But in a case where a defendant had given a wrong name the Court was entitled to insert the correct name in the decree either under O 1, r 10 or s 151 (t) Where it is held by one Judge that the Court fee paid on a plaint is sufficient, his successor has no power to alter that judgment and hold that it is insufficient (u)

Amendment.—S 152 enables the Court to correct clerical or arithmetical mistakes or errors arising from accidental slips in judgments, decrees or orders

Judgments of other Courts

Chartered High Courts.—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3, cl (5)]

Judgments of Small Cause Court.—The Madras High Court in one case had held that rule (1) is self contained and should be interpreted literally (t) But even following this ruling a Madras Judge set aside a judgment which clubbed all the issues together and did not give a separate finding on each (u) In a later case the Madras High Court has held that the rule must be read so as to be consistent with s 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which confers revisional jurisdiction upon the High Court, and that though a Small Cause Court is not obliged to give reasons, yet the record must be made intelligible so that the High Court can satisfy itself that the decree or order is according to law (x) The Lahore High Court has held that the judgment must convey some indication that the Judge has applied his mind to the evidence on the record (y) and that though the judgment may be reduced to a minimum yet that minimum must be intelligible so as to enable the High Court to satisfy itself that it is according to law (z) The Calcutta High Court has said that if the Judge refers to the evidence and his judgment indicates that he did not consider a material portion of the evidence, the High Court is entitled to interfere (a)

Court invested with Small Cause Court powers.—A Court invested with Small Cause Court powers is governed by sub r (1) and not sub r (2) (b)

Unintelligible judgment.—If a judgment is unintelligible, the appellate Court may set it aside and remand the case to the lower Court for the recording of judgment according to law after hearing afresh the arguments of pleaders (c)

5. [S. 204.] In suits in which issues have been framed, the Court shall state its finding or decision, with the reasons therefor, upon each separate issue, unless the finding upon any one or more of the issues is sufficient for the decision of the suit

Court to state its decision on each issue

Chartered High Courts—This rule does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary or extraordinary original civil jurisdiction [O 49, r 3, cl (5)]

Object of judgment.—The proper object of a judgment is to support by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves the final conclusion at which the Judge has conscientiously arrived That object is defeated by the Judge elaborately recording the fluctuations of his mind from day to day in reference to the witnesses, the evidence, and the arguments It is a substantial objection to a judgment that it does not dispose of the question as it was presented by the parties e.g., when it finds a particular signature to be a forgery which both sides admit to be genuine (d)

(2) Where an inquiry is directed under clause (b) or clause (c), a final decree in respect of the rent or mesne profits shall be passed in accordance with the result of such inquiry

Inquiry as to mesne profits no longer a proceeding in execution—The provisions relating to mesne profits in the Code of 1882 were contained in ss 211 212 and 244. Those provisions have now been re-cast. The definition of mesne profits is relegated to s 2, cl 12. At the same time an important alteration has been made as regards procedure in determining the amount of mesne profits. Under the Code of 1882, the amount of mesne profits was to be determined in execution proceedings (x) [see C.P.C., 1882, s 244, cls (a) and (b)]. Under the present rule the amount must be determined by the decree and not in execution. An application for ascertainment of mesne profits under this rule is not a proceeding in execution but a proceeding in continuation of the original suit (x). Such an application cannot be dismissed for default under O 9 r 3, for that would involve dismissal of a claim which has already been decreed (y). But the rules as to abatement of suits apply to the application and if the legal representative of a deceased defendant is not joined the suit as against him with regard to the ascertainment of mesne profits will abate (2).

Decree for possession and mesne profits—In a suit for the recovery of possession of immovable property, the plaintiff may claim mesne profits which have accrued due during a period prior to the institution of the suit. He may also claim mesne profits which have accrued due subsequent to the institution of the suit. The decree to be passed in such a case will now be as follows—

- 1 That the defendant do put the plaintiff in possession of the property specified in the schedule annexed to the decree [To this extent the decree is final]

{ That the defendant do pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. with interest thereon at the rate of per cent per annum to the date of realization on account of mesne profits which have accrued due prior to the institution of the suit [To this extent the decree is final]

- 2 Or [where accounts have to be taken of the mesne profits]—

{ That an inquiry be made as to the amount of mesne profits which have accrued due prior to the institution of the suit [To this extent the decree is preliminary see s 2, Explan]

- 3 That an inquiry be made as to the amount of mesne profits from the institution of the suit until the point of time specified in cl (c) of the section [To this extent the decree is preliminary] See Sch I, App D, Form No 23

The inquiry referred to above may be held before an officer of the Court appointed in that behalf, who must report to the Court the result of the inquiry. After that is done and the parties are heard on the report, a final decree will be passed in respect of the mesne profits.

Where decree silent as to mesne profit—Where a preliminary decree is silent as to mesne profits, the Court has no power to direct such enquiry by its final decree (a).

Decree erroneously directing mesne profits to be ascertained in execution.— If a decree erroneously directs mesne profits to be ascertained in execution, the decree is not for that reason a nullity and the Court of execution is bound to execute it (b)

Mesne profits where no date fixed.—Where a preliminary decree awards possession and mesne profits, but is silent as to the date up to which mesne profits are awarded, the decree holder is entitled to mesne profits up to the date of delivery of possession to him (c).

Joint Hindu family.—This rule applies not only where the plaintiff sues for possession of the whole of an immovable property, but also where he sues for possession of a portion thereof. But the portion must be a specified portion, that is, a portion to the profits of which the plaintiff is exclusively entitled. Hence the provisions of this rule do not apply to a suit for partition by a member of a joint Hindu family, for until partition no member is entitled to a specific share of the property (d). This does not mean that a member of a joint Hindu family is not entitled in a suit for partition to claim his share of the rents and profits of the joint property from which he may have been wrongfully excluded. He is entitled to such share (e), but the Court in deciding upon his claim must be guided, not by the provisions of this rule, but by the rules of Hindu law relating to partition (f). See notes to r. 18 below.

Procedure.—Where an appellate Court, disagreeing with the lower Court, finds that the plaintiff is entitled to possession, it should pass a preliminary decree for possession and direct an inquiry as to mesne profits; it is not proper merely to remand the case to the lower Court for disposal (g). The Madras High Court has added a clause to this rule as to which see the case in footnote (h).

Mesne profit.—The expression "mesne profits" is defined in sec 2, cl (2), as meaning those profits which the person in wrongful possession of property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession.

The test set by the statutory definition of mesne profits is not what the plaintiff has lost by his exclusion, but what the defendant has, or might reasonably have, made by his wrongful possession. If the person charged has merely let the land to others, the rent which he has received would be the measure of the profits for which he is liable, unless there is evidence that a higher rent could with ordinary diligence have been obtained. But if the wrongdoers cultivate the land themselves, the cultivation profits are the primary consideration, and if it is contended that other and more profitable crops could have been grown, the true test is what the ordinary prudent agriculturist would have grown. So when the person in wrongful possession planted indigo for use in his adjacent factory, and it was proved that the ordinary farmer would have grown sugarcane, wheat or tobacco, the Privy Council assessed mesne profits on the profits of cultivation of these more profitable crops (i). When mesne profits were decreed in respect of land which had been in the wrongful possession of two co zamindars who had granted a lease to a putnidar, the co zamindars were liable for what they actually received from the putnidar, and the putnidar was liable for the profits he actually received and

Interest forming part of mesne profits.—It will be seen from the definition of mesne profits, that mesne profits consist of two items, namely, (1) profits of the property and (2) interest on such profits. Hence if a decree awards mesne profits, but says nothing about interest, that is, interest on the profits, it must be construed as including not only the profits, but the interest on such profits. This was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Girish Chunder v. Shoshu Shikareswar (w). Therefore if the decree under rule 12 (1) is silent as to interest the Court passing a final decree under rule 12 (2) can award interest; but if the final decree under rule 12 (2) does not award interest the Court of execution cannot go behind the decree and award interest and the judgment creditor's remedy is by way of appeal from the decree (x). If the profits were payable from month to month, the interest thereon would be calculated month by month, and if they were payable from year to year, the interest would be calculated year by year. Calculating in this manner, the interest on the profits must be allowed up to the date of ascertainment of the aggregate amount of mesne profits (y), but in no case should it be allowed for a period longer than three years from the date of the decree (z). The reason is that the item of interest we are now considering forms an integral part of "mesne profits," and since mesne profits cannot be allowed for a period longer than three years from the date of the decree, so also the interest forming part thereof cannot be allowed for a longer period. It must not, however, be supposed that because "mesne profits" are defined as meaning "profits" plus "interest on such profits," therefore the Court must always allow interest on such profits. Mesne profits, as stated above, are in the nature of damages which the Court may award according to the justice of the case. And since the item of interest now under consideration forms part of mesne profits, it is equally in the discretion of the Court whether to allow such interest or not (a). For the same reason, the Court may, while allowing the claim for interest, direct the interest to be calculated not month by month or year by year, but in a manner less advantageous to the plaintiff. The mode of calculation indicated in the beginning of this paragraph applies only to those cases where the decree is silent as to the mode in which interest is to be calculated.

After the aggregate amount of mesne profits is ascertained, the plaintiff may apply to the Court for final decree for the amount so ascertained, and for interest on that amount, and the Court may award interest at such rate as it thinks fit (b). The date from which interest may be allowed is the date of the preliminary decree, and not the date on which the amount is ascertained (c). The rate of interest allowed is usually 6 per cent (d). See sec. 34.

Application for ascertaining future mesne profits.—The right to apply for ascertainment of future mesne profits arises not on the date of the decree directing an inquiry as to such profits, but on the happening of any one of the three events specified in sub rule (1) (e) (e). The application is an application in the suit, and if the suit is pending the law of limitation does not apply (f).

Notice through Court.—The notice of relinquishment of possession should be given through the Court. But where a judgment debtor gives such notice directly to

O. 20, r. 12 the decree holder, and the latter does not object that it should be sent through the Court, he is not entitled to mesne profits after the date of the notice (g)

"Three years from the date of the decree"—"Decree" means a decree capable of execution. Thus if an appeal is preferred from a decree for mesne profits and the decree is confirmed in appeal, the period of three years is to be computed from the date of the appellate decree (h). Similarly, if a decree for mesne profits is taken to the Privy Council and is confirmed, the period of three years is to be counted from the date of the King's order in Council (i). See notes to s. 36, "What decree may be executed."

When a decree awards possession with mesne profits to be ascertained in an inquiry but specifies no time down to which mesne profits are to be computed, the decree cannot be construed as giving mesne profits for a period longer than three years from the date of the decree (j). The plaintiff therefore is not entitled to mesne profits for more than three years from the date of the decree, though possession was not delivered to him until after the expiration of the three years: note the words "whichever event first occurs" in sub r. (1), cl. (c). But in no case can mesne profits be awarded to the plaintiff for any period subsequent to an offer by the defendant to restore him possession (k).

Limitation.—As regards mesne profits accrued due prior to the institution of the suit, the defendant is only liable for the mesne profits accrued due during the three years before the date of the suit. A claim for mesne profits during a period preceding the three years next before the date of the suit is barred under the Limitation Act, 1908, s. 1, art. 109 (l).

Court fee.—Where in a suit for recovery of immovable property and for mesne profits antecedent to as well as subsequent to the institution of the suit the decree directs the profits to be ascertained in execution, the Court fee is payable with respect to the claim for such profits, but the fee cannot be claimed until the amount actually due on account of the profits has been ascertained (m).

Burden of proof.—The burden of proving the amount of mesne profits actually received is on the person who has received them, while that of proving the amount of profits that might with ordinary diligence have been received is on the person claiming them (n).

Order supplementing preliminary decree.—Where, after the passing of a preliminary decree, the Court determines the period and the mode of payment of the profits, the order is appealable as such (o). See

Appeal.—Under the Code of 1882 [s. 244] the amount of mesne profits was determined in execution proceedings, and the decision determining mesne profits, being a decree, was appealable as such. Under the present rule

13. [S. 213.] (1) Where a suit is for an account of any property and for its due administration under the decree of the Court, the Court shall, before passing the final decree, pass a preliminary decree ordering such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made, and giving such other directions as it thinks fit.

(2) In the administration by the Court of the property of any deceased person, if such property proves to be insufficient for the payment in full of his debts and liabilities, the same rules shall be observed as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors and as to debts and liabilities provable, and as to the valuation of annuities and future and contingent liabilities respectively, as may be in force for the time being, within the local limits of the Court in which the administration suit is pending with respect to the estates of persons adjudged or declared insolvent; and all persons who in any such case would be entitled to be paid out of such property, may come in under the preliminary decree, and make such claims against the same as they may respectively be entitled to by virtue of this Code.

Judicature Act, 1875, s 10—The words of the present rule are almost the same as s 10 of the Judicature Act of 1875

Administration suit—Where a person dies leaving a will, his estate is administered by his executor, and where he dies intestate, it is administered by his administrator. The administration of the estate of a deceased person consists, first, in paying his funeral expenses, next his debts, and then the legacies under his will (if any). The residue of his estate is then divided among the residuary legatees under his will or amongst his heirs if he has left no will. In an administration suit, the Court takes upon itself to a large extent the functions of an executor or administrator, and administers the estate of the deceased. When an administration decree is made the Court has power to transfer to itself any suit that may be outstanding, but such suit should not be stayed if it would not lead to economy of administration (r). The Court usually insists on a formal administration decree being made before it proceeds in effect to administer the estate by passing orders for sale and so on (s)

O. 20, r 13 The following persons may maintain an administration suit —

- (1) A creditor of the deceased, when his claim is not paid off by the legal representatives of the deceased (i)
- (2) A legatee, whether specific or pecuniary, where the legacy is not paid to him by the legal representatives of the deceased
- (3) The next of kin of the deceased, for their share in the estate of the deceased
- (4) An executor or administrator, when there are disputes amongst the legatees or next of kin as to the amount of the property left by the deceased and the amount to which the legatees or next of kin are entitled

Forms of plaint in administration suit—See Sch I, App A, forms Nos 41 to 43.

Preliminary decree—This rule provides that in an administration suit, the Court shall pass a preliminary decree before passing the final decree, directing accounts to be taken and inquiries to be made. There are thus two distinct stages in the suit and in the preliminary stage the suit can only be dismissed on the ground that there is no cause of action or that the suit is premature (u). For forms of preliminary decree, see Sch I, App D, forms Nos 17 and 19, and for forms of final decree, see forms Nos 18 and 20.

Insolvent estate—Sub rule (2) provides that when it appears in an administration suit that the estate of the deceased is insolvent the rules laid down in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, as to Presidency towns, and in the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, as to the other parts of British India where that applies, shall apply so far as regards (1) the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors (2) debts and liabilities provable, and (3) the valuation of annuities and future and contingent liabilities. Note that this sub rule does not apply all the rules and principles of insolvency to insolvent estates, but only the rules in respect of the three heads enumerated above (v).

Suit to recover assets improperly applied by Administrator General—This section does not apply to a suit brought by a creditor of the deceased against the Administrator General (to whom letters of administration have been granted) and against other creditors of the deceased to recover assets alleged to have been improperly paid by the Administrator General to those creditors in priority to the plaintiff (w).

Effect of decree in administration suit upon prior attachments—A decree in an administration suit is a decree in favour of all creditors of the deceased, and as all of them are included in the same decree it would be inequitable that one should be in a better position than another under that decree. The assets are therefore divided amongst all creditors pro rata. Even a creditor who has obtained an attachment on the state of the deceased prior to the decree in the administration suit is not entitled to priority over the other creditors. An attachment does not create a charge upon the property attached, and the Court will stay all proceedings in execution after the passing of the decree in the suit (x).

14. [S. 214.] (1) Where the Court decrees a claim to pre-emption in respect of a particular sale of property and the purchase-money has not been paid into Court, the decree shall—

- (a) specify a day on or before which the purchase-money shall be so paid, and
- (b) direct that on payment into Court of such purchase-money, together with the costs (if any) decreed against the plaintiff, on or before the day referred to in clause (a), the defendant shall deliver possession of the property to the plaintiff, whose title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment, but that, if the purchase-money and the costs (if any) are not so paid, the suit shall be dismissed with costs.

(2) Where the Court has adjudicated upon rival claims to pre-emption the decree shall direct—

- (a) if and in so far as the claims decreed are equal in degree, that the claim of each pre-emptor complying with the provisions of sub-rule (1) shall take effect in respect of a proportionate share of the property, including any proportionate share in respect of which the claim of any pre-emptor failing to comply with the said provisions would, but for such default, have taken effect, and
- (b) if and in so far as the claims decreed are different in degree, that the claim of the inferior pre-emptor shall not take effect unless and until the superior pre-emptor has failed to comply with the said provisions.

Difference between the old section and the present rule—This rule corresponds with s. 214 C. P. C. 1882 except in the following particulars—

- 1 The words "whose title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment" are new. See notes below under those words.
- 2 Sub-rule (2) is also new. See notes below. Sub-rule (2) Rival pre-emptors.

O. 20, r. 14

Pre-emption—The right of pre-emption can only be exercised in respect of immovable property. A and B, both Mahomedans, are co-sharers of a house. If B sells his share to X for Rs. 500, A is entitled to pre-empt B's share on payment of Rs. 500 that is to say, A as co-sharer may require B to sell his share to him in preference to X. The same rule applies if A and B are owners of adjoining houses. If B refuses to sell his share to A, A may institute a suit for pre-emption against B and X. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad, that if the sale by B to X has been completed before the date of the suit, B having no longer any interest in the property, he is not a necessary party to the suit (y). If a decree is passed for A, and if he has not paid the amount of purchase money into Court, the decree should specify a day on or before which the purchase money should be paid into Court. If the amount is paid within the time fixed by the Court, A will be entitled to enter into possession of B's share. But if he fails to pay the amount within that time, he will lose the benefit of the decree (z). If a decree is passed for A with costs, A may pay into Court the purchase money less the costs (a). As to extension of time for payment, see notes below.

It is important to note that the right of pre-emption is a personal right. This leads to the following results—

- 1 If the pre-emptor that is the person entitled to pre-emption, transfers the right to a third party, the right is lost and the transferee cannot maintain a suit for pre-emption (b).
- 2 It is not settled whether if the pre-emptor dies during the pendency of the suit for pre-emption, the right, according to Sunni Mahomedan Law, is extinguished (c), or whether it survives to his heirs or to his legal representatives (d).
- 3 If the pre-emptor transfers the right of pre-emption during the pendency of the suit for pre-emption, the right of pre-emption is lost, and the suit will be dismissed. And even if he obtains a decree and transfers the decree the right of pre-emption will be lost, and the Court will not allow execution of the decree. But if he obtains a decree, and transfers not the decree, but the property which is the subject of pre-emption, the right of pre-emption is not lost and he may execute the decree, though execution will not be allowed to the transferee (e).

"Whose title thereto shall be deemed to have accrued from the date of such payment"—These words have been added to make it clear that the title to the property vests in the plaintiff on payment of the purchase money, and that it is not necessary to complete the title that there should be a document in writing and registered as required by the Transfer of Property Act in the case of a sale of an instrument of transfer (f)

The plaintiff's title accrues on payment of the purchase money and not from the date of the sale (g). No registered document is necessary to transfer the property (h).

from the date of payment, though he cannot obtain possession by reason of the defendant being himself in possession in another capacity (i), or by reason of a usufructuary mortgagee being in possession (j)

Mesne profits—Upon a pre-emption decree the property and the right to mesne profits therefrom vest in the pre-emptor only from the date when he pays the amount of the purchase price finally decreed, until that time the original purchaser retains possession and is entitled to the rents and profits (k)

Extension of time for payment into Court—The High Court of Allahabad has held that a plaintiff who has obtained a decree can appeal within the period of limitation, whether or not he has made the payment on or before the day fixed (l). The mere filing, however, of an appeal does not operate as an extension of the time for payment (m). The time for payment (n) is extended. See notes to s 148, "

Sub rule (2) Rival pre-emptors—Sub r (2) prescribes the form of decree to be passed when there are rival pre-emptors. It is based upon the undermentioned rulings of the Allahabad High Court (p)

Pre-emption under the Mahomedan law—The Mahomedan law is the only system prevalent in British India which provides substantive rules relating to the right of pre-emption in a systematic form (q). The Manomedan law of pre-emption is applied by the Courts of British India to Mahomedans except in the Madras Presidency, the Punjab and Oudh. In the Madras Presidency, the right of pre-emption is not recognised by the Courts even as between Mahomedans, on the ground that it places a restriction upon liberty of transfer of property and is therefore opposed to equity and good conscience (r). Pre-emption in the Punjab is regulated by the Punjab Laws Act, 1872, and, in Oudh by the Oudh Laws Act, 1876. See Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan Law, "10th Ed, pp 158-162

Pre-emption by custom—The Sunni Mahomedan law of pre-emption applies by custom to Hindus in Behar (s) and Gujerat (t)

Pre-emption by contract—A right of pre-emption is occasionally given in mortgage deeds to the mortgagee, so that in case of a sale of the equity of redemption by the mortgagor, the mortgagee shall have the refusal of the property, and in such a case the price may or may not be fixed beforehand (u)

Vendor's title in pre-emption suit—A pre-emptor is not entitled in a pre-emption suit to put the vendor to proof of his title to the property which he purports to sell. The reason is that the principle of pre-emption is substitution. A pre-emptor is therefore bound to take the title which the vendee was ready to take (v)

15. [S. 215.] Where a suit is for the dissolution of a partnership, or the taking of partnership accounts, the Court, before passing a final decree, may pass a preliminary decree declaring the proportionate shares of the parties, fixing the day on which the partnership shall stand dissolved or be deemed to have been dissolved, and directing such accounts to be taken, and other acts to be done, as it thinks fit

solution of partnership

Preliminary decree directing accounts to be taken—The preliminary decree directing accounts to be taken should always contain a declaration of the rights of the parties and it should be in form No 21 Sch I, App D (w). After the accounts are taken, a final decree is passed directing that the partnership assets be applied, first in payment of the partnership debts, next, in payment of the costs of the suit and lastly, in payment to each partner of the amount found due to him on taking the accounts. If it turns out on taking the accounts that there is a balance due to the defendant, a decree may be passed in favour of the defendant (x). See Sch I App D form No 22

Appeal—A preliminary decree in a suit for the dissolution of a partnership or the taking of partnership accounts is appealable under s 96. But the appeal must be filed within the period prescribed by the law of limitation. If no appeal is preferred within the period of limitation the party aggrieved by such decree is precluded by virtue of the provisions of s 97 from disputing its correctness in an appeal from the final decree. See s 97 and notes thereto

Letters Patent appeal—Where a commissioner appointed to take accounts applies to the Court for directions and an order is made giving the directions the order being merely one regulating procedure and not a final adjudication of the rights of the parties, is not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 13 of the Letters Patent of the High Court of Rangoon and is not appealable as such (y)

Decree in suit for partition of property or separate possession of a share therein

18. [Ncu] Where the Court passes a decree for the partition of property or for the separate possession of a share therein, then,—

(1) if and in so far as the decree relates to an estate assessed to the payment of revenue to the Government, the decree shall declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, but shall direct such partition or separation to be made by the Collector, or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, deputed by him in this behalf, in accordance with such declaration and with the provisions of section 54,

(2) if and in so far as such decree relates to any other immovable property or to movable property, the Court may, if the partition or separation cannot be conveniently made without further inquiry, pass a preliminary decree declaring the rights of the several parties interested in the property and giving such further directions as may be required.

Receiver not rendered functus officio—A receiver appointed in a suit for partition does not after the passing of the decree under sub rule (1) become functus officio as regards agricultural land comprised in the suit. The Court may therefore grant an interim injunction restraining a party from interfering with the receiver's possession (e) See s 54 and notes thereto

"Giving such further directions"—These words are wide enough to include a direction for an inquiry into future mesne profits. But under the rule the direction should be in the preliminary decree. If no such direction is included in the preliminary decree, the Court has no power to direct an inquiry into future mesne profits by its final decree (f).

Joint Hindu family—In a suit for partition of joint Hindu family property, the property not being of the kind referred to in sub rule (1), a preliminary decree may be passed as provided by sub rule (2) (g), and for the purpose of working out the preliminary decree and adjusting the shares, the final decree may give one co parccener a charge over the share of another as an alternative to depriving a co parccener of some property (h). See notes to r 12 above 'Joint Hindu family'.

19. [S. 210.] (1) Where the defendant has been allowed a set off against the claim of the plaintiff, the decree shall state what amount is due to the plaintiff and what amount is due to the defendant, and shall be for the recovery of any sum which appears to be due to either party.

Decree when set-off is allowed

(2) Any decree passed in a suit in which a set-off is claimed shall be subject to the same provisions in respect of appeal to which it would have been subject if no set off had been claimed.

Appeal from decree relating to set-off

(3) The provisions of this rule shall apply whether the set-off is admissible under rule 6 of Order VIII or otherwise.

Appeal from decree relating to set off—This rule corresponds with s 216 of the Code of 1882 except as regards the provision as to the Court to which an appeal should lie from a decree passed in a suit in which a set off is claimed. The second paragraph of s 216 ran as follows —

"The decree of the Court with respect to any sum awarded to the defendant shall have the same effect and be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal or otherwise, as if such sum had been claimed by the defendant in a separate suit against the plaintiff."

The present rule provides that appeals from decrees relating to set off shall lie to the Courts to which appeals in respect of the original claim would lie.

Decree for defendant where set off is claimed—It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that in a suit by a principal against his agent for accounts, the Court can grant a decree to the agent for the amount found due to him on the taking of accounts between the parties (i). The ground on which the decision is based is that a suit for accounts against an agent necessarily involves an undertaking by the principal to pay to the agent any sum that may be found due to him. Commenting on this case Phillips, J, in a Madras case (j) said "Thus, I think, is taking a somewhat large view of the intention of a plaintiff in such a suit, for it could rarely be his intention to bring a suit in order that a decree might be given against him." But the Calcutta High Court has held that in a suit for an account the defendant may even claim an equitable set off on payment of Court fee (1). See notes to O 8, r 6.

ORDER XXI.

Execution of Decrees and Orders.

Of execution of decrees in general.—The present order is the longest Order in the whole Schedule. It consists of 103 rules. It is proposed here to give a summary of these rules, and at the same time a description of the different modes of execution, and the procedure to be observed. The references to the rules given in this summary are to the rules of the present Order.

A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000. Here A is the decree holder, B is the judgment debtor, and Rs 5,000 is the judgment debt. If B fails to satisfy the decree A may apply for execution of the decree against B a person, or against his property or both (r 30). But the Court may, in its discretion, refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment debtor (r 21). Execution against the person of the judgment debtor consists in arresting him and detaining him in jail. Execution against the property of a judgment debtor consists in attaching and selling his property, and paying the decree holder the amount of the judgment debt out of the sale proceeds.

Application for execution.—All proceedings in execution are commenced by an application for execution (r 10). The application for execution must be in writing [r 11 (2)] and should contain the particulars set forth in rr 11 (2) to 14. The only exception is where the decree is for the payment of money and the judgment debtor is in the precincts of the Court when the decree is passed, in which case the Court may order immediate execution on the oral application of the decree holder at the time of passing the decree [r 11 (1)]. If the application complies with the requirements of rr 11 (2) to 14, the Court will direct execution to issue (r 24). If he does not, the Court may reject it, or may require it to be amended (r 17). If the application is rejected, the decree holder may present another application properly framed.

Who may apply for execution.—The application for execution must be made by the decree holder. If the decree is transferred by the decree holder, the transferee may apply for execution (r 16). If the decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one, any one of such persons may apply for execution (r 15). If the decree holder is dead, his legal representative may apply for execution (r 16).

Against whom execution may be applied for.—If the judgment debtor is living execution will be applied for against him. If he is dead, execution may be applied for against his legal representative. In the latter case, the decree may not be executed against the person of the legal representative, but only against the property of the judgment debtor which has come to the hands of the legal representative and has not been duly disposed of by him (s 50) As to notice to the legal representative, see the next paragraph

Notice before ordering execution.—The law does not require any notice to be issued to the party against whom execution is applied for, except in the following two cases —

- 1 Where the application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree or more than one year after the date of the last order made on any previous application for execution
- 2 Where execution is applied for against the legal representative of the judgment debtor

In these two cases the Code provides that "the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice (r 22) There is one case in which it is discretionary with the Court to issue a notice before making an order for execution, and that is where the decree is for money and execution is sought against the person of the judgment debtor (r 37)

Execution against person of judgment debtor.—

(i) Decrees for the payment of money.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5 000 and costs [This is a money decree] B fails to pay the amount of the judgment debt, A applies for execution of the decree against B a person [r 11 (2), cl (i)] The decree being a money decree, the Court may, instead of issuing a warrant for B's arrest, issue a notice calling upon him to appear and show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison in execution of the decree (r 37) If B appears and satisfies the Court that he is unable to pay the amount of the decree from poverty or other sufficient cause and if there are no circumstances which disentitle B to the indulgence of the Court, the Court may make an order disallowing A's application for B's arrest and detention [r 40 (1)] If B does not appear, the Court may make an order committing B to prison [r 40 (5)]

Where a warrant of arrest is issued, it should be executed by an officer of the Court appointed in that behalf (rr 24 25) If when the officer goes to execute the warrant B offers payment of the amount of the judgment debt (which must always be specified in the warrant), the officer should receive the payment and the warrant should not then be executed (r 38) But if no payment is made, B should be arrested and brought before the Court as soon as practicable (s 55) If no notice was issued prior to his arrest under r 37, it is open to B to show that he is unable to pay the amount of the decree from poverty or any other sufficient cause [r 40 (1)] If the Court is satisfied that B is unable to pay the amount of the decree from poverty or any other sufficient cause and if there are no other circumstances which would disentitle B to the indulgence of the Court, the Court will make an order directing B's release [r 40 (1)] Otherwise the Court will make an order committing B to prison [r 40 (5)] The prison will be a civil prison (s 55), and the term of detention in prison is six months if the amount of the decree exceeds Rs 50, and six weeks if the amount of the decree does not exceed Rs 50 (s 58). If while in prison, B pays the amount mentioned in the warrant to the officer in charge of the prison, or the decree is otherwise fully satisfied, as by attachment and sale of the property he will be released from detention (s 58) Otherwise he will be detained in prison until expiration of the term of his detention unless the decree holder requests the Court to release him from detention, or omits to pay the subsistence allowance of the judgment debtor A judgment debtor released from detention in any one of the above cases cannot be re-arrested in execution of the same decree [s 58 (2)], though the judgment debt has remained unpaid Thus does not mean that his liability to pay the debt ceases, for the decree still subsists, and A may yet execute the decree against B's property [s 58 (2)], though not against his person

No woman can be arrested in execution of a money decree [s 56]

(ii) Decrees other than those for the payment of money—A judgment debtor may be arrested and imprisoned not only in execution of a decree for the payment of money, but also in execution of other decrees (rr 31, 32, 33). The procedure to be followed in these cases is as follows. If the application is in proper form, the Court will issue a warrant for arrest of the judgment debtor (r 24). If the judgment debtor is arrested in execution of the warrant, he must be brought before the Court "as soon as practicable" (s 55). The Court will then make an order committing him to the civil prison. If, while in jail, the decree is fully satisfied, he will be released from detention [s 58 (1)], otherwise he will be detained in prison until expiration of the term of his detention unless the decree holder requests the Court to release him from detention, or omits to pay the subsistence allowance of the judgment debtor as provided by r 39.

Execution against property of judgment debtor—This subject may be considered under two heads namely (1) attachment, and (2) sale. The rules relating to attachment may be stated first and then the rules governing sale, for attachment precedes sale. Attachment is levied and the sale of the property attached is effected by an officer of the Court under a warrant issued from the Court.

Before considering the rules relating to attachment and sale, it is to be observed that there are certain kinds of property which are not liable to attachment or sale in execution of a decree. These are described in s 60. Subject to these exceptions all saleable property which belongs to the judgment debtor, or over which he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree against him (s 60).

I Attachment—Attachable property belonging to a judgment debtor may be divided into two classes (1) movable and (2) immovable.

As to attachment of movable property—See rr 43 to 53.

Attachment of immovable property—If the property be immovable the attachment is to be made by an order prohibiting the judgment debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way and prohibiting all other persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge. The order must be proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to the property and a copy of the order is to be affixed on a conspicuous part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the Court house (r 54).

Where an attachment has been made any private transfer of the property attached whether it be movable or immovable is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment (r 64).

If a claim is preferred to any property attached in execution of a decree by any person other than a party to the suit, the procedure prescribed by rr 58 to 63 must be followed. If any questions arise in the course of execution proceedings between the parties to the suit, or their representatives they should be dealt with under s 47.

If during the pendency of the attachment the judgment debtor satisfies the decree through the Court, the attachment will be deemed to be withdrawn (r 55). Otherwise the Court will order the property to be sold (r 64). If the property attached is current coin or currency notes the Court may direct payment to the decree holder in satisfaction of his decree (r 56) for it is not necessary to sell coin or currency notes.

II Sale of attached property—If the property attached be movable property which is subject to speedy and natural decay it may be sold at once (r 43). Every sale in execution of a decree should be conducted by an officer of the Court except where the property to be sold is a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation which the Court may order to be sold through a broker (r 76).

After the property, whether movable or immovable, is attached, the first step to be taken with a view to its sale is to cause a proclamation to be made, stating the time and place of sale, and specifying the property to be sold, the revenue (if any) assessed upon the property, the encumbrances (if any) to which it is liable, the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered and such other particulars as the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property (r 66) No sale should take place until after the expiration of at least thirty days in the case of immovable property, and of at least fifteen days in the case of movable property calculated from the date on which a copy of the proclamation has been fixed on the Court house of the Judge ordering the sale, unless the judgment debtor consents in writing to the sale being held at an earlier date (r 68) The Court may in its discretion adjourn the sale from time to time, but if the sale is adjourned for a longer period than seven days a fresh proclamation should be made, unless the judgment debtor consents to waive it (r 69)

It is important to note that no holder of a decree, in execution of which property is sold, can bid for or purchase the property without the express permission of the Court (r 72)

Irregularity in the conduct of sale of attached property—No sale of immovable property can be set aside on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the party seeking to set aside the sale has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity (r 90) As regards movable property, the rule is that a sale of movable property is not liable to be set aside in any case on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale The only remedy open to the party who has sustained any injury by reason of such irregularity is to institute a suit for compensation against the person responsible for the irregularity But if such person be the purchaser himself, the party sustaining the injury may sue for the recovery of the specific property and for compensation in default of such recovery (r 78)

Disposal of sale proceeds—The sale proceeds of property sold in execution of a decree are applied in the manner prescribed by s 73

Resistance to delivery of possession to purchaser—Where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree, and the purchaser is resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such resistance or obstruction The Court will thereupon fix a day for investigating the matter, and summon the party against whom the application is made to appear and answer (rr 97 103)

Payment under decree

O. 21, r. 1

Modes of paying money

1. [S. 257.] (1) All money payable under a decree shall be paid as follows, namely —

- (a) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree; or
- (b) out of Court to the decree-holder; or
- (c) otherwise as the Court which made the decree directs.

(2) Where any payment is made under clause (a) of sub-rule (1), notice of such payment shall be given to the decree-holder.

Retrospective effect of rules contained in this Order.—A comparison of this Order with the corresponding Chapter of the Code of 1882 will show that several changes have been introduced in matters of procedure so far as they relate to the execution of decrees. In this connection it is important to note that changes in matters of procedure are retrospective in effect and apply to pending proceedings (l)

"Money payable under a decree"—It is money payable under a decree that may be paid into Court under this rule. The word all does not imply that payment must be of the entire amount. A payment of a portion of the decretal amount is valid to the extent of such payment (m). Costs of an application awarded by an order under s. 35 cannot be said to be money payable under a decree. Hence such costs ought to be paid to the party direct, and not into Court (n).

Where an order has been made for the payment of money into Court on a certain date and the Court is closed on that day, a payment made on the following day is good payment for the purposes of the order (o).

Decree directing payment to decree holder.—Payment into Court is a valid compliance with a decree even though the decree directs payment to the decree holder (p).

When rule does not apply.—This rule does not apply where a decree is by its terms incapable of execution, as where it is provided by a consent decree that if the decretal amount is not paid it may be recovered by suit (q).

Notice of payment into Court.—Sub r. (2) which requires notice to be given to the decree holder where payment is made into Court is new. Payment of the decretal amount into Court operates as a satisfaction of the decree to that extent, though no notice of payment is given to the decree holder as provided by sub r. (2). Similarly where a decree is assigned by the decree holder, and the judgment debtor pays the decretal amount into Court without notice of the assignment, the payment operates as a satisfaction of the decree to that extent, though no notice of payment is given to the decree holder and the assignee is not entitled to execute the decree (r). But where interest is awarded by the decree on the decretal amount, the decree holder is entitled to interest until he receives notice of the payment into Court (s).

2. [S. 258.] (1) Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-

Scope and application of the rule.—This rule provides that—

- (1) where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or
- (2) where a decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree holder, the decree holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, so that the same may be recorded by that Court

If the decree holder fails to inform the Court of the payment or adjustment, it is open to the judgment-debtor to protect himself from execution of the decree by applying to the Court within 90 days from the date of the payment or adjustment (i) to issue a notice to the decree holder to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified. If the payment or adjustment is not certified by either party, it shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree. This will appear from the following

A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 2,000. It is subsequently agreed between A and B that A should accept Rs. 1,000 in full satisfaction of the decree. B pays A Rs. 1,000 out of Court, but neither the payment nor adjustment is certified to the Court. A applies for execution of the full amount of the decree notwithstanding receipt by him of Rs. 1,000. B objects to execution on the ground that the decree has been adjusted and payment has been made. The payment, not being certified, cannot be recognized by the Court executing the decree, and the Court must direct execution to issue. It will not avail B that A had agreed to certify the payment to the Court, but has omitted to do so. See notes below under the head 'Fraud'.

History of sub rule 3.—The Codes of 1859 (s. 206) and 1877 (s. 258) provided that a payment or adjustment made out of Court should not be recognized by any Court executing the decree unless it had been certified to that Court. The Code of 1877 was amended in the year 1879 and the amendment provided that an uncertified payment or adjustment should not be recognized by any Court and the same provision occurred in the Code of 1882 (u). In the year 1888, the section was again altered, by providing that an uncertified payment or adjustment should not be recognized by any Court executing the decree, and this is the form in which the rule now stands.

Sub rule (3).—Sub rule (3) provides that an uncertified payment or adjustment shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree. The words 'by any Court executing the decree' indicate the extent to which an uncertified payment or adjustment should not be recognized by a Court. These words show that the prohibition to take cognizance of an uncertified payment or adjustment is limited to the Court which is called upon to execute the decree. It is in execution proceedings alone that an uncertified payment or adjustment cannot be recognized by a Court. The rule does not prohibit a Court from taking cognizance of such payment or adjustment in proceedings other than execution proceedings. An uncertified payment or adjustment may therefore be recognized by a Court trying a suit for a relief based upon such payment or adjustment (i). This gives rise to the following questions —

1. Whether if the Court orders execution in the case put in the above illustration, B can maintain a suit against A for a declaration that the decree has been adjusted and for an injunction restraining A from executing the decree ?

2. Whether if A executes the decree notwithstanding the adjustment, and B's property is sold in execution, B can maintain a suit against A to set aside the sale, on the ground that the decree having been adjusted, A ought not to have caused the same to be executed?

3. Whether if A executes the decree notwithstanding the adjustment, B can maintain a suit against A to recover damages for breach of the contract represented by the adjustment? In other words, whether, if B is compelled to pay in execution of the decree the full amount of the decree, namely, Rs. 2,000, he is entitled to recover back that sum from A as damages for breach of the contract on A's part not to execute the decree?

Each of the suits referred to above would involve recognition of an uncertified adjustment, and B's success in each would depend inter alia upon the recognition of such adjustment by the Court trying the suit. Now, it has been made sufficiently clear that the prohibition against the recognition of an uncertified adjustment is confined to Courts executing decrees, and does not extend to Courts trying suits. Therefore a Court trying any of the abovesuits would not be precluded from recognizing the adjustment though the adjustment has not been certified. But this circumstance is not of itself sufficient to entitle B to a decree, for in the first two cases there is an initial difficulty in B's way. That difficulty is the bar of s. 47 which enjoins that all questions relating to the "execution, discharge or satisfaction" of a decree shall be determined by the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit.

As regards the first question it is quite true that if B brought a suit for an injunction restraining A from executing the decree, the Court trying the suit would recognize the adjustment though it had not been certified. But the Court cannot try the suit at all for such a suit is barred under s. 47, the principal question in the suit being whether A should be restrained from executing the decree. This being a question relating to "execution," cannot be tried in a separate suit (w). Hence the answer to the first question is in the negative.

The answer to the second question is also in the negative and for the same reasons. The suit being one to set aside the sale in execution, the principal question would be whether the proceedings in execution should be set aside and this question is also one relating to "execution" within the meaning of s. 47 and the suit would therefore be barred under that section (x). It is therefore immaterial whether the purchaser at the sale in execution is a stranger or the decree holder himself. There are two cases (y) both prior in date to the Allahabad decision cited above, in which the property was purchased by a stranger, and the suit was to set aside the sale on the ground that the decree had already been satisfied out of Court at the time the sale was held. In both these cases it was held that the person who bought the property having purchased it bona fide at an auction sale, the sale to him could not be set aside. But the question whether the suit was barred was not raised in either of those cases. According to the Allahabad decision cited above, the suit would be barred under s. 47.

The third question stands upon a different footing. The suit therein referred to is one for the recovery of damages for breach of the contract represented by the adjustment. The contract represented by the adjustment was to accept Rs. 1,000 in full satisfaction of the decree, and not to execute the decree for its full amount. If not withstanding the payment to A of Rs. 1,000 in pursuance of the adjustment A causes the decree to be executed and B is compelled to pay the amount of the decree (that is Rs 2 000) in execution, B may sue A to recover back that amount as damages for breach of the contract not to execute the decree. Such a suit is not barred under sec 47, for the principal question in the suit is not one relating to execution, but to the contract, its breach, and the amount of damages suffered by B in consequence of the breach. The answer to the third question is therefore in the affirmative (2). The Court trying the suit will take cognizance of the adjustment, and will direct A by its decree to repay Rs. 2 000 as and by way of damages to B, though the adjustment has not been certified. It may here be noted that if after the decree is satisfied out of Court, A assigns the decree to X, and X then proceeds to realize the decree by execution against B, B has no cause of action against X, and he is not entitled to recover from X as damages the amount paid by him in execution to A, even though X took the assignment with the knowledge that the decree had been satisfied (a).

The effect of non certification on the rights of parties may be summarised as follows. If the adjustment is not certified, it will not be recognized by any Court executing the decree, and if the decree holder applies for execution notwithstanding the adjustment, the Court will direct execution to issue and the judgment debtor will not be heard to say that the decree has been adjusted. Nor can he, even by instituting a regular suit for injunction obtain a stay of execution, for such a suit is barred under sec 47. Nor is it open to him, if his property be sold in execution to bring a suit to set aside the sale, for such a suit also is barred under sec 47 (b). His only remedy is to sue the decree holder for damages sustained by him by reason of the breach of the contract represented by the adjustment. He need not, however, wait until the decree against him is executed. His cause of action arises on the presentation of an application by the decree holder to execute the decree. Therefore where he has paid any money under the adjustment, he may sue the decree holder to recover it as soon as the decree holder applies to the Court for execution (c).

Suit by judgment debtor based upon uncertified adjustment—The three kinds of suit referred to above deserve careful consideration for they are typical of the modes in which the question of an uncertified adjustment frequently arises. But an uncertified adjustment may result in a conveyance as in the following case.—A obtains a decree against B for possession of immovable property. A then executes an ekrnama, whereby in consideration of Rs 156 paid to him by B, he relinquishes an interest in the property. Subsequently he sells the remaining part of the property to C by ekrnama and kabala are duly registered. A then applies for execution of the decree and obtains possession of the property. B sues A upon the two documents for a declaration of his right to the property and for recovery of possession thereof. Is the suit barred under sec 47? It has been held that it is not barred, and that B is entitled to a decree. The suit is not one for an injunction, and it cannot therefore be said to be directed to interfere with the execution of the decree. In fact the decree has already been executed. Nor is the suit one for setting aside a sale in execution, for there has been no sale. The suit is one for the recovery of property conveyed to B by two documents, both of which are duly registered. The documents no doubt constitute an adjustment of the decree, but, as already explained in sub r (3) do not bar a suit upon an uncertified adjustment (d).

21, r. 2 The law on the point may be stated in one sentence. An uncertified payment or adjustment may be recognized by any Court except a Court executing the decree, and a suit based upon such payment or adjustment is maintainable unless it is barred by the provisions of sec. 47.

Suit by decree holder upon an uncertified adjustment.—This is the converse case. A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 315 and costs. B pays A Rs. 200, and induces A to give up the costs and accept a bond for the balance to be paid at the end of eight months. Neither the payment nor adjustment is certified to the Court. This does not preclude A from suing on the bond, for, as stated above, sub r. (3) only prohibits a Court executing a decree from recognizing an uncertified payment or adjustment (e). Under the repealed section 257A of the Code of 1882 the bond would be void if it provided for a payment of a sum in excess of the balance (f). This would no longer be the case unless the bond were a mortgage bond and an account was being taken under sec. 13 (c) of the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act, 1879 which makes the repealed sec. 257A applicable (g).

Money payable under a decree.—A decree directing the sale of mortgaged properties in default of payment is a decree for the payment of money whether there is a direction to pay personally or not (h). Income received by a mortgagee decree holder from the mortgaged property in his possession and for which he has to account and give credit for the surplus is not money payable under a decree within the meaning of this rule (i).

The Madras High Court has held that a decree which gives the judgment debtor an option of paying money in order to secure a reconveyance is not a decree under which money is payable within the meaning of this section (j).

Decree of any kind.—The words 'of any kind' in sub rule (1) did not occur in sec. 258 of the Code of 1877 or of 1882. They were inserted by the Code of 1908. Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882 it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that sec. 258 applied to the adjustment of any decree whatever may be the nature of the relief granted by the decree. In the Calcutta case the decree was one for possession of immovable property (k). On the other hand it was held by the Madras High Court that this section referred only to decrees under which money was payable and did not apply to other decrees e.g., decrees for possession of immovable property (l). It was in this state of authorities that the words 'of any kind' were inserted in sub rule (1). The High Court of Calcutta claims that these words were added to give effect to its rulings and to supersede the Madras rulings (m). The Bombay High Court also holds that the rule applies to the adjustment of any decree as for instance a decree for partition (n). The High Court of Madras holds that the only effect of the addition of the words 'of any kind' is that the decree is not required to be one exclusively for the payment of money as held by that Court under the Code of 1882, but that it may be a complex decree providing partly for the payment of money and partly for any other relief or reliefs e.g., delivery of possession of immovable property, in other words one of the reliefs granted by the decree must be for the payment of money and unless this is so, the adjustment does not require to be certified under this rule. The Madras High Court lays stress on the word "the" before the word "decree" and says that the word "the decree" could only refer to what precedes, namely, a decree under which money is payable (o). Thus if a decree provides for the payment of money as well as for partition of immovable property, the adjustment must be certified as required by this rule (p), but not if it is exclusively for partition.

"Adjustment."—A composition scheme between a judgment debtor and his creditors including the decree holder is an adjustment within the meaning of this rule and may be certified as such (q). An oral agreement not to proceed against the judgment debtor beyond a certain limit is an agreement varying the terms of the decree and is therefore an adjustment which cannot be proved if not certified (r).

An executory contract may be an adjustment.—If the decree holder enters into a fresh contract with the judgment debtor for the satisfaction of the decree, the contract is legally enforceable and though still executory may amount to an adjustment of the decree (s).

Can a compromise effected in execution proceedings be enforced as superseding the decree?—See note under the heading "Adjustment of decree", at p. 170.

"Where the decree is adjusted in part."—A obtains a decree against B and C. A then enters into an agreement with B by which B is discharged from liability under the decree. The agreement constitutes an adjustment of a "part" of the decree within the meaning of this rule (t). If in the execution proceeding the parties come to an arrangement whereby part of the decretal amount is remitted and the balance made payable by instalments this is an adjustment in part and the decree can be executed for the balance (u).

Application for final decree.—An application for a final decree in a suit on a mortgage is not an application for execution. Therefore, the Court to which an application is made for a final decree is not a Court executing the decree. Hence such Court may recognize payments made by the mortgagor out of Court, though the payments have not been certified (v).

Mode of certifying.—Sub rule (2) says that if the decree holder fails to show cause the Court shall certify payment. The Court is not bound, if the decree holder does not appear, to certify the payment without requiring proof. If the payment is proved it is not open to the Court to go into the question whether the object of the payment was to defeat the rights of some third party (w), and if it is satisfied that payment has in fact been made it must certify payment (x).

Decree transferred for execution.—Certification to transferee Court.—If the decree has been transferred for execution to another Court, the transferee Court is the Court executing the decree and the adjustment must be certified to it (y).

Adjustment not certified if a third party's interest intervenes.—While a sale in execution of a money decree was pending confirmation the decree holders made an application to the Court stating that they had agreed to accept payment by instalments and praying that the adjustment should be certified. The lower Courts recorded the 21, r. 2 adjustment and set aside the sale. But the Privy Council in Nankahal v Umrao (2) reversed the decree on the ground that once a sale is effected the interest of a third party intervenes and there is nothing in the rule to suggest that such an interest can be disregarded.

This rule applies only to parties who stand in the relation of decree holder and judgment debtor at the date of payment or adjustment—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5000. B, being unable to pay the amount of the decree in cash transfers certain immovable property to C in consideration of C undertaking to pay the amount of the decree to A. C pays the amount of the decree to A out of Court. Subsequently C obtains an assignment of the decree from A, and applies for execution against B. The payment of the decretal amount by C to A, though not certified, is a bar to execution, for the payment was made not by B, the judgment debtor, but by C, a third party, and this rule applies only where a payment is made out of Court by a judgment debtor to the decree holder (a). The High Court of Allahabad has applied the rule when the money is not payable under the decree to the decree holder, and has held that where by a consent decree in a suit by A against B, B agrees to pay a certain sum of money to C, and he makes the payment, such payment, if not certified, cannot be recognized by the Court executing the decree (b). Under sec 17 as understood in Bombay a decree holder purchaser at a Court sale stands on the same footing as a stranger. If he gives up the property purchased to the judgment debtor for a money consideration this is not an adjustment to which the rule applies in Bombay (c). It is perhaps unnecessary to state that the rule does not apply to a payment by the judgment debtor to the decree holder before the decree is passed (d).

Fraud—There is an earlier decision of the Madras High Court which lends colour to the view that where a decree is adjusted to the satisfaction of the decree holder, and he agrees to certify the adjustment to the Court, but omits to do so, and subsequently applies to the Court for execution of the decree, the judgment debtor may object to the execution and prove the adjustment in execution proceedings, and the Court executing the decree may take cognizance of the payment notwithstanding the provisions of this rule the reason given being that the suppression of the adjustment from the Court is not only a fraud upon the judgment debtor, but a fraud upon the Court (e). But in later cases the same High Court has said that if that be the effect of that decision, it is not good law (f). In a Bombay case (g) a decree for Rs 2,500 was adjusted by the judgment debtor paying and the decree holder accepting Rs 2,000 in full satisfaction of the decree, but the adjustment was not certified to the Court. The decree holder thereafter applied for execution of the decree. He omitted to state in his application as required by O 21, r 11 (a), that the decree was adjusted. It was held, following an earlier decision of the same Court (h) that it was a case of fraud upon the Court, and the application for execution was dismissed. But these cases have been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court, and it has been held that a Court executing a decree can in no case recognize a payment or adjustment not certified as required by this rule (i). The High Court of Calcutta has consistently held that it is not competent to a Court executing a decree to enquire into the fact of a payment or adjustment which has not been certified as required by this rule even if fraud is imputed to the decree holder (j). The same view has been taken by the Chief Court of the Punjab (k), by the High Court of Patna (l), the High Court of Rangoon (m) and by the Chief Court of Oudh (n).

The law allows the judgment debtor 90 days* to apply to have the payment or adjustment certified [Limitation Act, Sch I, art 17]. If he does not make the application, and the decree holder applies for execution within that period, he may in answer to the application for execution, apply to have the payment or adjustment certified, but this must be within 90 days. And it has been held that objections filed by a judgment debtor to the decree holder's application for execution may be treated as an application to certify the payment or adjustment, provided the objections are filed within 90 days of the adjustment (o). But the judgment debtor is not entitled to an extension of time even if fraud is established on the part of the decree holder. Such extension he can claim only under s 18 of the Limitation Act, and that section provides only for the case where an applicant has by means of fraud been kept from the knowledge of his right to make the application, it does not provide for the case where he has by means of fraud been kept from the exercise of his right to make the application (p).

Uncertified payment and limitation.—Subr (3) of this rule provides that an uncertified payment shall not be recognized by any Court executing the decree. The third paragraph of the old section provided that an uncertified payment or adjustment shall not be recognized as a payment or adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree. It was accordingly held under that section that there was nothing to prevent an uncertified payment from operating as a part payment within the meaning of s 20 of the Limitation Act so as to extend the period of limitation for applying for execution under that Act (q). The words as a payment or adjustment of the decree have been omitted in subr (3). Therefore under the present rule the Court cannot recognize an uncertified payment or adjustment for any purpose whatever. It follows that an uncertified payment can no longer operate as a part payment so as to extend the period of limitation for an application for the execution of a decree (r). This may be explained by an illustration. A obtains a decree against B in January, 1921 for Rs 4 000. B pays A out of Court Rs 2 000 in January 1923, but the payment is not certified. A applies for execution of the decree for the balance in January 1925 that is, more than three years after the date of the decree but within three years from the date of payment under the decree. Under the old section the payment, though not certified, operated as a fresh starting point for limitation and the application was therefore not barred. Under the present rule, the payment, not being certified, cannot be recognized by the Court even for the purpose of limitation, and the application must be rejected as barred by limitation.

There was at one time a conflict of decisions as to the meaning of "certify" and as to how payments made out of Court should be certified. The High Courts of Calcutta (i), Madras (ii) Bombay (iii), and Rangoon (iv), have held that where interest on the decretal amount has been paid by the judgment debtor out of Court, or where part payment has been made of the decretal amount by the judgment debtor out of Court, the decree holder may apply to "certify" the payment by an application made expressly for that purpose either prior or subsequent to the application for execution or he may 'certify' the payment by a declaration in an application for execution of the decree that he has received such payment [O 21, r 11 (e)]. The Allahabad High Court in a series of decisions (v) maintained that the payment or adjustment must be certified in a separate proceeding distinct from and prior to the application for execution, but in the recent Full Bench case of Joti Prasad v. Srichand (x) it has fallen into line with the other High Courts. A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has since held that when the decree holder certifies he makes no application but merely informs the Court of a fact and that the Court when recording the payment is not making a judicial order but performing a ministerial duty (y). The payment must be made within three years of the decree or of the last starting point of limitation to be effectual under section 20 of the Limitation Act (z) but it may be certified at any subsequent time by the decree holder (a).

Uncertified adjustment and estoppel—Since an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized by the Court executing the decree, it cannot operate as an estoppel against the decree holder. A obtains a decree against B. The decree is adjusted but the adjustment is not certified to the Court. A receives payments under the adjustment and then applies for execution of the decree. The adjustment being uncertified the fact that A has received payments under the adjustment does not estop him from applying for execution (b).

MINOR.—An adjustment of a decree made by a guardian without obtaining the permission of the Court as required by O 32, r 7, cannot be certified under this rule (c)

Assignment of decree.—As the application under rule 16 is to be made to the Court which passed the decree the Bombay High Court has held that it is open to the judgment-debtor to prove an uncertified adjustment for the purpose of shewing that the applicant is not a transferee and that as the decree has already been satisfied, there was nothing to transfer (f). A similar view was taken in some Madras cases (g). But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has differed from these cases on the ground that the application under r 16 is not merely for recognition as a transferee, but for execution as such transferee, and that it is incorrect to regard the Court which passed the decree as not being the executing Court as well. The Full Bench held that if there is no certified adjustment it is not permissible to argue that there is no decree to be transferred (h).

Representative.—The word "judgment debtor" in this rule includes persons claiming under him. Such persons therefore are as much precluded from setting up an uncertified adjustment in execution proceedings as the judgment debtor himself would be (i). Compare s 146.

Limitation for application under this rule.—A certificate of payment given by a decree holder to the Court is merely an intimation that he has received a sum of money and that the decree has in that way been wholly or partially satisfied (j). It is not an application for the Court has no judicial duty to perform with respect to it (k). Article 181 does not apply and a decree holder may therefore at any time certify a payment or an adjustment (l). The cases on the subject were reviewed by the Judicial Committee in Prakash Singh v Allahabad Bank, Ltd (m). Their Lordships held that the certification to the Court by a decree holder under rule 2 (1) even if made in the form of an application is not an application under art 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908, and is not subject to any period of limitation. The rule imposes a duty on the decree holder to certify and thus he may do at any time even after the execution of the decree would be time barred but for the payment certified. Their Lordships pointed out that certification at the instance of a judgment debtor under rule 2 (2) stands on a different footing. It is an application in which notice issues to the decree holder and it is subject to a period of 90 days, limitation under art 174 of the Limitation Act, 1908. The Privy Council did not decide whether certification by a decree holder is a step in aid of execution under art 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. This was, however, decided in the negative by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Amar Krishna v Jagat Bandhu (n). It cannot be a step in aid of execution for it is not an application but it may substantially amount

Proof of jurisdiction.—The old section contained the words "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," after the words "or of the copies thereof." This gave rise to a conflict of opinion whether a Court to which a decree was sent for execution had the power to inquire whether the Court that passed the decree had jurisdiction to pass it and to refuse execution if it found that the decree was passed without jurisdiction. It was held in some cases that the Court had the power (x), and in others that it had not (y). The effect of the omission of these words is that a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has now no power to question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree under execution (z). A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has held that when a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had no jurisdiction the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it (a). The word 'apparently' has been explained by the same High Court to mean that the decree appears on the face of it to have been passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction (b). The Rangoon High Court has expressed emphatic dissent and holds that it is against public policy and good sense that the validity of a decree should be questioned by an executing Court (c). In a subsequent Full Bench decision Rankin J., has also criticised this decision in that it overlooks the case where a Court of execution is asked to execute a final decree after the preliminary decree on which it rests has been reversed on appeal (d). In such a case the Court of execution has power to determine whether the final decree is still subsisting.

8. [S. 226.] Where such copies are so filed, the decree or order may, if the Court to which it is sent is the District Court, be executed by such Court or be transferred for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction.

"If the decree has been sent to another Court"—Where the decree of a District Court has been sent to the Court of a Munsiff for execution, and has not been returned to the District Court, the "proper Court" within the meaning of the Limitation Act, 1908, art 182 (5), in which to apply "for execution" of the decree is the Court of the Munsiff (h). In such a case an application to the transmitting Court is not an application in accordance with law under Art 182 of the Limitation Act (i).

O. 21, rr. 6-8 Clause (a).—The omission to send a copy of the decree to the Court executing the decree does not prevent the decree-holder from applying to the Court for execution (i)

Clause (b).—The omission to transmit to the Court executing the decree the certificate referred to in cl (b) is not a "material" irregularity within the meaning of r 90 of this Order. Hence it is not a good ground for setting aside a sale in execution (w)

7. [S. 225.] The Court to which a decree is so sent shall cause such copies and certificates to be filed, without any further proof of the decree or order for execution, or of the copies thereof, unless the Court, for any special reasons to be recorded under the hand of the Judge, requires such proof.

Court receiving copies of decree etc to file same without proof

Proof of jurisdiction—The old section contained the words "or of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it," after the words "or of the copies thereof." This gave rise to a conflict of opinion whether a Court to which a decree was sent for execution had the power to inquire whether the Court that passed the decree had jurisdiction to pass it and to refuse execution if it found that the decree was passed without jurisdiction. It was held in some cases that the Court had the power (x), and in others that it had not (y). The effect of the omission of these words is that a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has now no power to question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree under execution (z). A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has held that when a decree presented for execution was made by a Court which apparently had no jurisdiction the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it (a). The word "apparently" has been explained by the same High Court to mean that the decree appears on the face of it to have been passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction (b). The Rangoon High Court has expressed emphatic dissent and holds that it is against public policy and good sense that the validity of a decree should be questioned by an executing Court (c). In a subsequent Full Bench decision Rankin, J., has also criticised this decision in that it overlooks the case where a Court of execution is asked to execute a final decree after the preliminary decree on which it rests has been reversed on appeal (d). In such a case the Court of execution has power to determine whether the final decree is still subsisting.

8. [S. 226.] Where such copies are so filed, the decree or order may, if the Court to which it is sent is the District Court, be executed by such Court or be transferred for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction.

Subordinate Court.—If a Munsiff in district X sends a decree passed by him for execution direct to a Munsiff in district Y, the latter has no jurisdiction to execute the decree. The proper course is for the Munsiff in district X to send the decree to the District Court of district Y, and the latter Court may then under this rule transfer the decree for execution to the Munsiff in that district (e)

9. [S. 227.] Where the Court to which the decree is sent for execution is a High Court, the decree shall be executed by such Court in the same manner as if it had been passed by such Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction.

Application for Execution

10. [S. 230, 1st para.] When the holder of a decree desires to execute it, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree or to the Officer (if any) appointed in this behalf, or if the decree has been sent under the provisions hereinbefore contained to another Court then to such Court or to the proper officer thereof.

Who may apply for execution—The person appearing on the face of the decree as the decree holder is entitled to execution, unless it be shown by some other person under O 21, r 16 that he has taken the place of the decree holder (f). When a decree is dead and the decree is for the recovery of a debt the representative of the decree holder must produce proof of his representative title under s 214 of the Succession Act, 1925 (g)

(2) Save as otherwise provided by sub rule (1), every application for the execution of a decree shall be in writing, signed and verified by the applicant or by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case, and shall contain in a tabular form the following particulars, namely —

- (a) the number of the suit ,
- (b) the names of the parties ,
- (c) the date of the decree ,
- (d) whether any appeal has been preferred from the decree ,
- (e) whether any, and (if any) what, payment or other adjustment of the matter in controversy has been made between the parties subsequently to the decree ,
- (f) whether any, and (if any) what, previous applications have been made for the execution of the decree, the dates of such applications and their results ,
- (g) the amount with interest (if any) due upon the decree, or other relief granted thereby, together with particulars of any cross decree, whether passed before or after the date of the decree sought to be executed ,
- (h) the amount of the costs (if any) awarded ,
- (i) the name of the person against whom execution of the decree is sought , and
- (j) the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required whether—
 - (i) by the delivery of any property specifically decreed ,
 - (ii) by the attachment and sale, or by the sale without attachment, of any property ,

(iii) by the arrest and detention in prison of any person ;

(iv) by the appointment of a receiver ;

(v) otherwise, as the nature of the relief granted may require.

(3) The Court to which an application is made under sub-rule (2) may require the applicant to produce a certified copy of the decree.

Sub rule (1) corresponds with s 256 of the Code of 1882 and sub rule (2) with s 235

Difference between old section 256 and sub-rule (1) —Section 256 of the Code of 1882 was as follows —

“ When a decree is passed for a sum of money only, and the amount decreed does not exceed the sum of one thousand rupees, the Court may, when passing the decree, on the oral application of the decree holder, order immediate execution thereof by the issue of a warrant directed either against the person of the judgment-debtor if he is within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or against his movable property within the same limits ”

Power to direct immediate execution of decree for money not exceeding
Rs 1000

Sub rule (1) differs from s 256 in the following particulars —

- 1 Under s 256 immediate execution could only be issued if the amount of the decree did not exceed Rs 1,000 Under the present rule there is no limit to the amount of the decree But the decree must be one for the payment of money
- 2 As a general rule, a decree holder seeking to arrest the judgment debtor must present an application in writing to the Court, and the Court may then direct a warrant to issue for the arrest of the judgment debtor who, as a rule, cannot be arrested without a warrant S 256 of the Code of 1882 dispensed with a written application, and enabled the Court to issue a warrant for the arrest of the judgment debtor on an oral application Sub rule (1) goes further, and empowers the Court to order immediate arrest of the judgment debtor prior to the preparation of a warrant, if he is within the precincts of the Court
- 3 Execution can no longer issue against the movable property of the judgment debtor on an oral application as it could under s. 256

Privilege from arrest —The privilege from arrest under civil process conferred by s 135 of this Code does not extend to a judgment-debtor against whom an order has been made for immediate arrest under this sub rule See s 135 sub s (3)

Alterations in sub rule (2) —Sub rule (2) corresponds with s 235 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

- 1 In cl (g), the words ‘ together with particulars of any cross decree, whether passed before or after the date of the decrees ought to be executed,’ are new
- 2 In cl (j), sub-cl (ii), the words ‘ or by the sale without attachment,’ are new
- 3 Cl. (j), sub-cl (iv), is new.

s. 21, r. 11

The application shall be verified.—An application for execution may be verified by any person acquainted with the facts of the case. It may therefore be verified by a person who holds a general power of attorney from the decree holder, notwithstanding that the decree holder may be residing within the jurisdiction of the Court (j). Where the application is made by a person other than the decree holder all that is necessary is that the Court should be satisfied that such person is acquainted with the facts of the case. It is not necessary that it should be verified after the application for permission to verify it has been made, nor is it necessary that the verification should be made in the presence of the Court (k).

The application shall state whether any payment or adjustment has been made.—If the judgment debtor has paid any money into Court under rule 1 (a) this fact should be stated in the application (l). A reference in the application to a judgment showing that a sum was realised in execution was held to be a sufficient compliance with the rule (ll).

The application shall state the date of the decree.—The date of the decree means the date on which the judgment was pronounced (m). See O 20, r. 7.

The application shall specify the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required.—Where an application did not specify the mode in which the assistance of the Court was required it was rejected (n). An application for a payment out of the sale proceeds of another decree holder's sale is a sufficient compliance with the rule (o). An application stated the name of the defendant incorrectly and did not give a list of the property sought to be attached and when the Court required it to be amended, it was withdrawn. This was held not to be an application in accordance with law within the meaning of art. 182 of the Limitation Act (p). See r. 17 below.

Fresh application not necessary after transfer of decree.—If an application for execution is made to the Court which passed the decree and that Court transmits it to the Court where the immovable property sought to be sold is situate, it will not be necessary to have a fresh application before the Court makes the order for sale (q).

Process fee.—There is no provision in the Code making it obligatory on a decree holder to pay process fee with his application for execution. A Munsiff returned an application which was presented without process fee on the last day of limitation, so that when it was represented the next day it was out of time. It was held that the Munsiff should have admitted the application and given time for payment of process fee. The date of first presentation was therefore the date for purposes of limitation (r).

Sub-rule (3).—This sub-rule is new. The Court may under this sub-rule require the applicant to produce a certified copy of the decree, but a copy of the ordering portion of the decree is sufficient (s). Such copy, however, is not a necessary annexure to an application for execution. An application, therefore, which is not accompanied by a copy of the decree, cannot be said to be an application not 'in accordance with law' within the meaning of art. 182 (5) of sch. I of the Limitation Act (t).

Amendment of application.—See r. 17 below.

12. [S. 236.] Where an application is made for the attachment of any movable property belonging to a judgment-debtor but not in his possession, the decree-holder shall annex to the application an inventory of the property to be attached, containing a reasonably accurate description of the same.

Application for attachment of movable property not in judgment-debtor's possession

Failure to annex inventory.—Where no such inventory as is required by this rule is annexed to the application for execution, the application cannot be said to be one "in accordance with law" within the meaning of art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (u). When the decree is executed under sec 52 against the legal representative of a deceased person no inventory is necessary (v).

13. [S. 237.] Where an application is made for the attachment of any immovable property belonging to a judgment-debtor, it shall contain at the foot—

Application for attachment of immovable property to contain certain particulars

(a) a description of such property sufficient to identify the same and, in case such property can be identified by boundaries or numbers in a record of settlement or survey, a specification of such boundaries or numbers, and

(b) a specification of the judgment-debtor's share or interest in such property to the best of the belief of the applicant, and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same

Clause (a)—In cl (a), the words and in case such property can be identified or numbers, are new

14. [S. 238.] Where an application is made for the attachment of any land which is registered in the office of the Collector, the Court may require the applicant to produce a certified extract from the register of such office, specifying the persons registered as proprietors of, or as possessing any transferable interest in, the land or its revenue, or as liable to pay revenue for the land, and the shares of the registered proprietors

Power to require certified extract from Collector's register in certain cases

Alteration in the law—Under the old section in the case of an application for the attachment of land registered in the Collector's Office it was necessary that the application should be accompanied by a certified extract from the register of such office. Under the present rule the Court may at its option require the applicant to produce such extract. The object is to save the applicant the costs of procuring such extract

15. { S. 231. } (1) Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one, any one or more of such persons may, unless the decree imposes any condition to the contrary, apply for the execution of the whole decree for the benefit of them all, or where any of them has died, for the benefit of the survivors and the legal representatives of the deceased.

Application for execution
by joint decree holder

(2) Where the Court sees sufficient cause for allowing the decree to be executed on an application made under this rule, it shall make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application.

Alterations in the rule.—This rule corresponds with sec 231 of the Code of 1892 except in the following particulars —

- 1 The words "or his or their representatives" which occurred in sec 231 after the words "one or more of such persons" have been omitted in view of the provisions of sec 146 See notes below under the head 'Any one or more of such persons.'
- 2 The words 'unless the decree imposes any condition to the contrary' occurring in sub rule (1) are new See notes below under the same words

What is a joint decree—A decree jointly passed in favour of more persons than one is a joint decree A and B obtain a decree against C for Rs. 5,000, this is a joint decree It is not the less a joint decree, because the shares of A and B in the decretal amount have been determined by the decree Thus if it is determined by the decree that the share of A is Rs 2,000 and the share of B is Rs. 3,000 the decree is still a joint decree But though the decree in such a case is a joint decree, the interest of A and B being determined by the decree, either of them may apply for execution to the extent of his interest (w)

Application by one of several decree holders for execution of the whole decree—Ordinarily all the decree holders in a joint decree must join in an application for execution of the decree The present rule provides for the case in which all the holders are unable or are unwilling to join in the application and enables one of them to apply for the benefit of all of them. The rule provides that if the Court is satisfied that the application is made in good faith and that the applicant is unable or unwilling to join in the application, the Court may allow the application and make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the other decree holders and of the judgment debtor (z)

this rule it is not obligatory upon the Court to do so (y) If the application is allowed, the Court will under sub r (2) make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the other decree holders and of the judgment debtor (z)

(y) Durga Das v Dewraj (1906) 33 Cal. 508
(z) Tarasundari v Beharwal (1868) 1 N.L.R.A. C 29

Decree in favour of coparceners.—A decree in favour of coparceners in a joint and undivided Mitakshara family is a joint decree. But if one of two coparceners dies the survivor is entitled to execute the whole decree. This is not a case of transfer by operation of law but it is a case of total extinction of that interest and if the applicant does not state in the application that he is applying as survivor and the Court is made aware in the course of the execution proceedings of the death of the coparcener, this is not a fatal defect as there is no occasion for the Court to pass orders under sub rule (a).

“Unless the decree imposes any condition to the contrary.”—The provisions of this rule do not apply where by the terms of the decree execution has been made dependent on all the decree holders joining in the application (b).

Application by one of several decree holders for execution in respect of his share of the decree.—The application under this rule by one of several holders of a joint decree must be for the execution of the whole decree and further, it must also be for the benefit of the other decree holders as well as himself. A joint decree cannot be executed by one of several joint holders in respect of what he considers to be his share in the decree (c). Thus, if a decree is passed for A and B for Rs. 5,000, the decree is joint, and neither A nor B can apply for execution of his proportionate share of the decree. But one of several holders of a joint decree may apply for execution of the decree to the extent of his interest therein, if the extent of such interest is determined by the decree. Thus, if in a suit for possession of land by A and B against C the Court has declared each of the plaintiffs to be entitled to a moiety of the land, the Court may allow either plaintiff to execute the decree to the extent of his one half share, though the decree is a joint decree (d).

The rule set forth above that one of several holders of a joint decree is not entitled to execution in respect of his share of the decree, but that he must apply for execution of the whole decree, applies only in those cases where the whole decree has remained unsatisfied. That rule does not apply where a joint decree has been satisfied in part before the date of the application for execution. In such a case, execution cannot issue for the whole decree, but only for so much thereof as has remained unsatisfied. This subject is considered in the next following paragraph.

An application for execution by a joint decree holder with regard to a certain portion of the decree giving up the rest, the other decree holders being parties to the application and standing by, is not illegal as contravening the provisions of this rule but there cannot be any subsequent execution for the balance of the same decree (e).

Payment by judgment debtor out of Court to one of several holders of a joint decree.—A obtains a decree against C for Rs. 5,000. C may pay the amount of the decree into Court (r. 1), and the Court will then pay the amount to A on his application. If C does not adopt that course and pays the amount to A out of Court (r. 1), C must see that A, the decree holder, certifies the payment to the Court. If A fails to certify the payment, C may apply to the Court to record the payment as certified. If C also fails to do so, the Court executing the decree will not recognise the payment and will order execution (r. 2) if A, notwithstanding payment to him of the amount of the decree out of Court, applies for execution of the decree against C.

O. 21, r. 15 But if there are two or more decree holders, and the payment is made by the judgment debtor to one of them, the question arises whether the other decree holders have the right to execute the decree? The following illustrations supply the answer —

- I (1) A and B obtain a decree against C for Rs 5 000. C pays B his (B's) share of the decretal amount out of Court and the payment is certified to the Court. A then applies under this rule for execution of the whole decree. A cannot execute for more than his own share as the decree has been satisfied as to B's share (f)
- (2) If in the above case, the payment is not certified to the Court but B admits the payment A will be limited to his share in execution (g) But if B does not admit the payment, the Court will allow execution to issue for the whole decree

II A and B obtain a decree against C for Rs 5 000. C pays the whole amount of the decree to B out of Court, and the payment is certified to the Court. A then applies for execution of the decree to the extent of his own share. Is A entitled to execute the decree to the extent of his share, in spite of the fact that B has certified satisfaction of the whole decree? It has been held that he is, for one of several joint decree holders is not competent to grant full discharge of the decree out of Court or to certify to the Court complete satisfaction of more than his own share of the decree, without the concurrence of the other decree holders (h). Moreover A has another remedy besides execution against C and that is a suit against B to recover his share from him for B has by his certificate admitted receipt of the whole amount of the decree (i). But if A asks to execute the whole decree then it has been said that the Court will issue notice to B, and if B says that A's application is fraudulent the Court may dismiss the application (j).

Any one or more of such persons* — This expression includes persons claiming under such persons. A transferee of a decree within the meaning of r. 16 below is such a person (k).

Amendment — The Patna High Court has held that an application by one decree holder of a joint decree is invalid unless it states that it is for the benefit of all and that the defect cannot be cured by amendment (l). The Lahore and Calcutta High Courts however say that this is incorrect for rule 11 does not require that the names of all persons interested in the decree should be inserted in the application and that the Court can issue notice to the others and pass orders for the protection of the interests of all the decree holders (m).

Appeal — An order determining any question mentioned or referred to in sec 47

This is illustrated by the following cases —

(1) A and B obtain a decree against C. A alone applies for execution of the whole decree. C (the judgment debtor) contends that A alone should not be allowed to execute the whole decree. Here the question being one between the decree holder on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other, any order made upon the application is appealable as a decree. If A's application is allowed, C may appeal from the order, and if the application is disallowed, A may appeal from the order (n)

(2) But if the objection to execution was raised not by C, the judgment debtor, but by B, the other decree holder, the question being between the decree holders inter se, no appeal will lie from an order either granting or refusing the application (o)

Limitation.—See Limitation Act, Sch. I, art. 182, Explan. 1

16. [S. 232.] Where a decree or, if a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, the interest of any decree-holder in the decree is transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law, the transferee may apply for execution of the decree to the Court which passed it; and the decree may be executed in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application were made by such decree-holder :

Provided that, where the decree, or such interest as aforesaid, has been transferred by assignment, notice of such application shall be given to the transferor and the judgment debtor, and the decree shall not be executed until the Court has heard their objections (if any) to its execution .

Provided also that, where a decree for the payment of money against two or more persons has been transferred to one of them, it shall not be executed against the others

Alterations in the law —

- 1 The words, or if a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, the interest of any decree holder in the decree have been added to the first paragraph to make it clear that the rule is not confined in its application to a transferee of the whole decree, but extends to a transferee of the interest of any holder of a joint decree. This was, in fact, the interpretation put upon the old section (p)
- 2 The words, 'if that Court thinks fit,' which occurred in the old section in the first paragraph before the words the decree may be executed have been omitted. See notes below, Right to execution does not depend upon discretion of Court "

"Decree"—The expression 'decree' in the first paragraph and the first proviso of this rule is not confined to a money-decree. It includes a mortgage decree (q). The second proviso is confined to money-decrees

Rule of procedure.—This rule regulates procedure and does not affect substantive rights. The transferee of a decree cannot execute it until he has obtained an order under this rule, but the transfer operates from the date of the transfer and the transferee is entitled without obtaining an order under this rule to object to an attachment of the decree made subsequent to the transfer (r). If a liquidator has transferred a decree before the company is dissolved, he may execute a written assignment for the purpose of this rule after dissolution and after he has ceased to be liquidator (s).

Application for execution by transferee of decree.—No order should be made under this rule for the execution of a decree on the application of a transferee of the decree unless—

- I the decree has been transferred by assignment in writing or by operation of law [an oral assignment is not sufficient (t)],
- II the application for execution is made to the Court which passed the decree, and
- III where the decree has been transferred by assignment, notice of the application has been given to the transferor and the judgment debtor.

The rule does not require an independent application by the transferee for recognition as transferee. All that the rule enjoins is that a transferee seeking execution should give notice of the application for execution to the transferor and the judgment debtor (u). See notes below, "Transfer of decree against a company in liquidation". On the other hand until an order for execution is made in favour of the transferee he has not acquired the status of a decree holder. See sec 2 (3).

I Who may apply for execution under this rule—The following persons, and no others may apply for execution under this rule (v) —

- (a) The transferee of a decree under an assignment in writing [A transferee under an oral assignment has no locus standi to apply for execution under this rule (u)].
- (b) The transferee of a decree by operation of law, e.g., the legal representative of a deceased decree holder, or the Official Assignee in the case of an insolvent decree holder, or the purchaser of a decree at a court sale in execution of a decree against the decree holder (r 53) (x). A transfer of property by A to B, which is the subject matter of a suit by A against C, does not amount to a transfer by operation of law of a decree subsequently obtained is executed, but the transfer in that case is not by operation of law, but by an assignment in writing (z). A transfer by operation of law means a transfer on death or by devolution or by succession. Therefore the fact that the applicant has obtained a judgment declaring him to be entitled to the decree does not make him a transferee by operation of law entitled to execution (a) This rule does not recognize an equitable assignment of a decree The dicta in a Bombay case recognizing such an assignment (b) have not been accepted by the other High Courts (c) Rankin, C.J., has pointed out that the omission of the words 'and if that Court thinks fit' which occurred in the section of the old Code gives the Court no discretion and shows that a person entitled in equity only, does not come under the rule (d)

(c) A transferee under an assignment in writing or by operation of law from the transferee mentioned in cls (a) and (b), whether by immediate or mesne assignment (e)

Explanation I—The expression transferee in cls (a) (b) and (c) is not confined to a transferee of the whole decree, but includes a transferee of a portion of the decree (f) or, where the decree is a joint one the transferee of the interest of any one of the decree holders (g) The mortgagee of a decree by an assignment in writing by way of mortgage is a transferee of a fractional interest in the decree and is entitled to execution under this rule (h) On the other hand if a decree awards a substantial relief plus costs, the decree is one and indivisible and it can be transferred only as a whole (i)

Illustrations of Explanation I

1 A who holds a decree against B for Rs 5 000 transfers his interest in the decree to the extent of Rs 2 500 to X Here X is in the position of a joint decree holder (r 15 above) The application for execution may be made by A, or it may be made by A, the decree holder or by A and X both together In any case the application must be for execution of the whole decree Aishore v Gishorne & Co (1890) 17 Cal 341, Gyamonee v Radha (1890) 5 Cal 592 and not merely for the portion transferred

2 A and B obtain a decree against C for Rs 5 000 A assigns his interest in the decree to X Here X occupies the double character of a transferee within the meaning of this rule and of a transferee of an interest in a joint decree within the meaning of r 15 Hence any application that X may make for execution will be governed by the provisions both of this and the preceding rule Dar Bux v Fatih (1899) 26 Cal 250

Explanation II—A person to whom a party to a suit agrees to transfer any decree that may be passed in the suit is not a transferee within the meaning of this rule

Illustration

Explanation III—A person who is entitled under a decree to an assignment of a previous decree obtained by A against B, but who has not obtained such assignment, is not a transferee of the previous decree, so as to entitle him to apply for execution of it. But he will be entitled to apply if he has obtained an assignment before the date of the application (j)

Explanation IV—A person to whom the holder of a decree for possession of immovable property sells a portion of the property is not a transferee of the decree within the meaning of this rule, and he is not therefore entitled to execute the decree. A transfer of property is not the same thing as a transfer of a decree (l)

Explanation V—A transferee of a decree awarding maintenance is entitled to execution under this section. The reason is that though a right to future maintenance cannot be transferred having regard to the provisions of s 6, cl (d) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, there is no objection to a transfer of such right when it is awarded by a decree. The transferee therefore of such a decree is entitled to recover by execution maintenance that has fallen due. He cannot, of course, attach maintenance before it has fallen due (l). See s 60, sub s (1), cl (n), and notes thereto on p 225 above

Benamidar—A obtains a decree against B. C purchases the decree from A in the name of D. Here C is the real transferee, and D is benamidar or ostensible transferee. Is D entitled to take out execution of the decree? Yes, according to the High Court of Allahabad (m). No, according to the High Court of Calcutta, but if he has succeeded in taking out execution (as where it is not brought to the notice of the Court that he is a benamidar), the application for execution made by him will save a subsequent application by C from the bar of limitation (n)

has held that where a decree has been transferred by assignment in writing, the transferee alone can apply for execution under this rule, though he may be a mere benamidar, and that the real transferee is not entitled to apply under this rule (q). But in a latter case in which the real transferee, his benamidar the ostensible transferee, and the original decree holder or transferor, were all dead and there was a contest between their legal representatives, the Madras High Court said that rule 16 was not exhaustive and that the Court had power to inquire who was the real owner entitled to execution (r)

II Application for execution by a transferee should be made to the Court which passed the decree — A transferee of a decree must apply for execution to the Court which passed the decree, though the decree has been sent for execution to another Court (s) The Court to which a decree has been transmitted for execution has no jurisdiction to make an order for execution on the application of a transferee of the decree If such an order is made, it is illegal, and it must be set aside in appeal (t) As to the definition of "Court which passed the decree," see s 37 and notes thereto

III Notice shall be given to the transferor and the judgment debtor — Notice is not necessary when the assignment is by operation of law but only if the decree is transferred by an assignment in writing (u) The notice which is required by the first proviso is not notice of the assignment but notice of the application for execution of the decree (v) The provisions of the rule as to notice are mandatory, and if execution is issued without notice, the proceedings in execution are void (w) But in a case where the assignee of a mortgagee's decree for sale gave notice to the mortgagee and the mortgagor but not to a puisne mortgagee the sale was confirmed but it was held not to pass the rights of the puisne mortgagee (x) The object of the notice is to enable the transferor and the judgment debtor to raise such objections as regards the assignment as may be available to them, e g, that the consideration money was not fully paid, or that the transferee is a benamidar for some of the judgment debtors (y), or that the judgment debtor has already satisfied the decree (z) The object of issuing notices to the transferor and the judgment debtor is to determine once and for all and in the presence of all parties concerned the validity of the assignment (a) It cannot be said that notice is necessary each time the assignee comes in to get the decree executed (a) for after the first order in his favour he has acquired the status of a decree holder The transferee cannot accept the assignment and at the same time plead fraud to escape paying the consideration for the assignment (b) If the property of the judgment-debtor is attached without hearing his objections the attachment is illegal, even if the Court subsequently hears his objections and confirms the attachment after such hearing (c) Where the judgment debtor is dead, the notice required by this rule should be given to his legal representative (d) Where no notice is given as required by this rule, it is in the discretion of the Court to grant time to the transferee to enable him to serve the notice (e) The Patna High Court has held that the notice required by this rule need not be in writing (f) The notice cannot be served on the attorneys of the judgment-debtor after the end of the suit in which they were retained (g)

Where on an application by the transferee of a decree to have his name substituted as decree holder, no objection is taken by the judgment-debtor as to the validity of the transfer, the judgment debtor will be precluded from questioning the validity of the

Explanation III—A person who is entitled under a decree to an assignment of a previous decree obtained by A against B, but who has not obtained such assignment, is not a transferee of the previous decree, so as to entitle him to apply for execution of it. But he will be entitled to apply if he has obtained an assignment before the date of the application (j)

Explanation II—A person to whom the holder of a decree for possession of immovable property sells a portion of the property is not a transferee of the decree within the meaning of this rule, and he is not therefore entitled to execute the decree. A transfer of property is not the same thing as a transfer of a decree (k)

Explanation I—A transferee of a decree awarding maintenance is entitled to execution under this section. The reason is that though a right to future maintenance cannot be transferred having regard to the provisions of s. 6 cl. (d) of the Transfer of Property Act 1882, there is no objection to a transfer of such right when it is awarded by a decree. The transferee therefore of such a decree is entitled to recover by execution maintenance that has fallen due. He cannot, of course, attach maintenance before it has fallen due (l). See s. 50 sub s. (1) cl. (m) and notes thereto on p. 225 above.

Benamidar—I obtains a decree against B. C purchases the decree from A in the name of D. Here C is the real transferee, and D is benamidar or ostensible transferee. Is D entitled to take out execution of the decree? Yes according to the High Court of Allahabad (m). No, according to the High Court of Calcutta, but if he has succeeded in taking out execution (as where it is not brought to the notice of the Court that he is a benamidar) the application for execution made by him will save a subsequent application by C from the bar of limitation (n).

Where the alleged transferee of a decree is found to be the benamidar of a judgment debtor, the Court is bound by the second proviso to this rule to refuse to allow the decree to be executed against the other judgment debtors in favour of the alleged transferee (o).

It has been held in some cases that the mere fact that an order for execution has been made on the application of a benamidar does not preclude the real transferee from applying under this rule to continue the execution proceedings himself, but the real transferee will be bound by proceedings in execution up to that date (j). The High Court of Madras has held that where a decree has been transferred by assignment in writing the transferee alone can apply for execution under this rule, though he may be a mere benamidar, and that the real transferee is not entitled to apply under this rule (q). But in a latter case in which the real transferee, his benamidar the ostensible transferee, and the original decree holder or transferor, were all dead and there was a contest between their legal representatives, the Madras High Court said that rule 16 was not exhaustive and that the Court had power to inquire who was the real owner entitled to execution (r).

.21, r. 16 transfer on an application by the transferee for execution of the decree (A) Similarly where no objection is taken by the judgment-debtor that no notice was given to the transferor, he will be precluded from raising that objection at a subsequent stage of the execution proceedings (i) But if the judgment debtor omits, in a proceeding under this rule, to object to the validity of the decree he will not be precluded from doing so, in a subsequent suit (j)

There is nothing to preclude a transferee of a decree from applying under sec 39 to the Court which passed the decree to send the decree for execution to another Court (k) But the notice required by this rule must be issued by the Court which passed the decree and not by the Court to which the decree is sent for execution (l)

The High Court of Calcutta has held that the mere issue of a notice under this rule does not operate as a revivor within the meaning of arts 182 and 183 of the Limitation Act (m), but the High Courts of Allahabad and Madras have held that it does. According to these Courts a mere application by the transferee for substituting his name for that of the decree holder operates as a revivor of the decree and gives a fresh starting point of limitation for executing the decree (n) And the Madras Court has held that an application by the transferee to bring the representative of the deceased judgment-debtor on the record to serve him with notice under this rule has the same effect (o)

Execution does not depend upon discretion of Court.—In the old section the words were and if that Court thinks fit, the decree may be executed," &c It was accordingly held under that section that the Court had a discretion to grant or refuse an application for execution made by a transferee (p) The words if that Court thinks fit" have been omitted in this rule. Therefore if the conditions specified in this rule are satisfied, a transferee of a decree is entitled to execution as of right like the original decree holder (q)

(a) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5 000. B satisfies the decree by paying Rs 5 000 to A. In such a case C is bound to pay to B his (C's) share of the judgment debt. If C fails to contribute his share, B's remedy is by way of suit against C to recover the amount [This illustration is merely introductory]

(b) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5 000. B purchases the decree from A. Here B's position is exactly the same as in ill (a), that is to say the decree must be taken as having been satisfied by B. B cannot therefore execute the decree against C and his only remedy is to bring a suit against C for contribution. Saroop Chunder v Troylolhonath (1866) 9 W. R. 230

(c) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5 000. A dies and on his death the decree passes to B as his heir. The position is the same as in ill (b). Banarasi v Maharani (1883) 5 All. 27

Next as regards transfer of a portion of a joint decree—Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons, and the interest of any decree holder in such decree has been transferred by assignment or by operation of law to one of several judgment-debtors the decree is extinguished to the extent of the interest so transferred and execution can only issue for the rest of the decree.

Illustration

A and B obtain a decree against C and D for Rs 5 000. A's share of the decree is Rs 2 000. A dies and on his death his interest in the decree passes to C as his heir. The decree is extinguished to the extent of Rs 2 000 and neither B (as decree holder) nor C (as transferee of A's interest in the decree) can execute the decree against D for more than Rs 3 000. Pogose v Fukurooddeen (1877) 25 W. R. 313. Banarasi v Maharani (1883) 5 All. 27

In the converse case where one of several judgment debtors dies and the decree holder succeeds to his estate as heir, the proviso does not apply and the decree holder is entitled to execute a proportionate part of the decree (f)

Decree for the payment of money—The expression 'decree for the payment of money' in the second proviso to the rule does not include mortgage decrees (u). Such a decree is not a decree for the payment of money until a personal decree is passed against the mortgagor (v).

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the expression 'decree for the payment of money against two or more persons' means a personal decree for the payment of money against two or more defendants. Hence the proviso does not apply when the decree is not against the defendants personally. A obtains a decree against B as the legal representative of X and against C as the legal representative of Y for Rs 20 000 to be paid out of the estate of X and Y. A dies leaving B as his heir, and on his death the decree passes to him by operation of law. The decree not being a personal decree against B and C, B is entitled as transferee of A's decree, to have the decree executed against the estate of Y (w). The High Court of Madras has dissented from this view. According to that Court the fact that one of the defendants is directed by the decree to pay the amount of the decree out of the family property in his hands does not make the decree any the less a decree for payment of money against him (x).

21, r. 16 transfer on an application by the transferee for execution of the decree (h) Similarly where no objection is taken by the judgment-debtor that no notice was given to the transferor, he will be precluded from raising that objection at a subsequent stage of the execution proceedings (i) But if the judgment debtor omits, in a proceeding under this rule, to object to the validity of the decree he will not be precluded from doing so in a subsequent suit (j)

There is nothing to preclude a transferee of a decree from applying under sec 39 to the Court which passed the decree to send the decree for execution to another Court (l) But the notice required by this rule must be issued by the Court which passed the decree and not by the Court to which the decree is sent for execution (l)

The High Court of Calcutta has held that the mere issue of a notice under this rule does not operate as a revivor within the meaning of arts 182 and 183 of the Limitation Act (m) but the High Courts of Allahabad and Madras have held that it does According to these Courts a mere application by the transferee for substituting his name for that of the decree holder operates as a revivor of the decree and gives a fresh starting point of limitation for executing the decree (n) And the Madras Court has held that an application by the transferee to bring the representative of the deceased judgment debtor on the record to serve him with notice under this rule has the same effect (o)

Execution does not depend upon discretion of Court—In the old section the words were and if that Court thinks fit, the decree may be executed" &c It was accordingly held under that section that the Court had a discretion to grant or refuse an application for execution made by a transferee (p) The words 'if that Court thinks fit' have been omitted in this rule Therefore if the conditions specified in this rule are satisfied, a transferee of a decree is entitled to execution as of right like the original decree holder (q)

Transfer of decree for the payment of money against two or more persons to one of them—This subject may be considered under the following two heads —

1 Where the whole decree has been transferred

2 Where the decree is a joint one and part only of the decree has been transferred

First as regards transfer of the whole decree—Where a decree for the payment of money has been transferred by assignment or by operation of law to one of several judgment debtors, the decree is wholly extinguished The transferee cannot execute the decree against the other judgment debtors but his remedy against them is by a regular suit for contribution as if the decree had been satisfied by him The object of the second proviso to the rule is not to deprive the judgment debtor transferee of all reliefs but to impose upon him the duty of proceeding by what was considered a more appropriate procedure, that is, a suit for contribution (r) The provision of this rule cannot be evaded by the judgment debtor who satisfies the decree taking a transfer of the decree in the name of a benamidar (s)

(a) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5 000. B satisfies the decree by paying Rs 5 000 to A. In such a case C is bound to pay to B his (C's) share of the judgment debt. If C fails to contribute his share, B's remedy is by way of suit against C to recover the amount. [This illustration is merely introductory]

(b) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5 000. B purchases the decree from A. Here B's position is exactly the same as in ill (a), that is to say, the decree must be taken as having been satisfied by B. B cannot therefore execute the decree against C and his only remedy is to bring a suit against C for contribution. Saroop Chunder v Troylolkhonath (1866) 9 W R 230

(c) A obtains a decree against B and C for Rs 5,000. A dies, and on his death the decree passes to B as his heir. The position is the same as in ill (b). Banarasi v Maharani (1883) 5 All 27

Next as regards transfer of a portion of a joint decree—Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of two or more persons and the interest of any decree holder in such decree has been transferred by assignment or by operation of law to one of several judgment-debtors, the decree is extinguished to the extent of the interest so transferred and execution can only issue for the rest of the decree.

Illustration

A and B obtain a decree against C and D for Rs 5 000. A's share of the decree is Rs 2 000. A dies and on his death his interest in the decree passes to C as his heir. The decree is extinguished to the extent of Rs 2 000 and neither B (as decree holder) nor C (as transferee of A's interest in the decree) can execute the decree against D for more than Rs 3 000. Pogose v Fukurooddeen (1870) 25 W R 313, Banarasi v Maharani (1883) 5 All 27

In the converse case where one of several judgment debtors dies and the decree holder succeeds to his estate as heir, the proviso does not apply and the decree holder is entitled to execute a proportionate part of the decree (f)

"Decree for the payment of money"—The expression "decree for the payment of money" in the second proviso to the rule does not include mortgage decrees (u). Such a decree is not a decree for the payment of money until a personal decree is passed against the mortgagor (v)

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the expression "decree for the payment of money against two or more persons," means a personal decree for the payment of money against two or more defendants. Hence the proviso does not apply when the decree is not against the defendants personally. A obtains a decree against B as the legal representative of X and against C as the legal representative of Y for Rs 20 000 to be paid out of the estate of X and Y. A dies leaving B as his heir, and on his death the decree passes to him by operation of law. The decree not being a personal decree against B and C, B is entitled, as transferee of A's decree, to have the decree executed against the estate of Y (w). The High Court of Madras has dissented from this view. According to that Court the fact that one of the defendants is directed by the decree to pay the amount of the decree out of the family property in his hands does not make the decree any the less a decree for payment of money against him (x).

(x) Sadogopa v Sellammal (1922) 43 Mad L J 61, 72 I C 261 (27) A M 510

O. 21, r. 16 Again the expression "decree for the payment of money against two or more persons" means a decree against two or more persons jointly. Hence the rule laid down in the second proviso does not apply where the decree is not passed against the defendants jointly. In a suit by A against B and C, A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 90 and against C for Rs. 30. A then assigns the decree to C. The decree not being a joint decree, C may execute the decree passed against B for Rs. 90 (y).

Award—The Calcutta High Court has held that a transferee of an award filed in Court under the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1899, is entitled to apply for execution under this rule (z). See notes to r. 29 below.

Decree for rent—Under s. 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885 an assignee of a decree for rent obtained by a landlord cannot apply for execution unless the landlord's interest in the land has become vested in him, and this bar applies to assignees of decrees for rent obtained by co-sharer landlords (z1).

Some cases have put a slightly different construction on O. 21, r. 16. Thus in an Allahabad case (f) a single Judge held that rule 16 only applies to an original application for substitution and execution, and that it does not apply to an application to be brought on the record of a pending application. Again in two Patna cases (g) the Court held that though the application to be brought on the record to carry on the pending proceeding was under O 21, r 16, yet no notice to the judgment debtor was necessary O. 21

Transfer during pendency of an appeal in execution proceedings—Even before Palaniappa s case was overruled it was held that when an appellant decree holder dies during the pendency of the appeal in execution proceedings his legal representative can be brought on the record (h)

Transfer pending execution of a transferred decree—A further complication arises when the decree holder dies or assigns the decree after it has been transferred for execution by another Court. In such a case the order under O 21 r 16 cannot be made by the Court executing the decree (i). But it has been held that if the decree holder dies after the decree is transferred for execution his legal representatives may either obtain an order from the original Court and carry on the proceeding or that they may carry on the proceeding in the execution Court and subsequently produce before that Court the necessary order under this rule (j)

Appeal—An order determining any question between the judgment debtor and the representative of the decree holder (s 47) is a decree (s 2) and is therefore appealable as such (s 96). A transferee of a decree is a representative of the decree holder within the meaning of sec 47. Therefore an order refusing to recognize the transferee of a decree or dismissing his application for execution on the objection of the judgment debtor is a decree, and appealable as such (k)

Suit by transferee—A transferee of a decree whose application is rejected under this rule on the ground that the transfer is not valid is not precluded from instituting a regular suit for a declaration of the validity of the transfer. Such a suit is not barred by the provisions of sec 47 (l)

Equities enforceable against original decree holder—See sec 49 and note thereto

Transfer of decree against a company in liquidation—Where a decree against a company in liquidation is transferred pending the winding up proceedings, and the liquidator refuses to recognize the transferee the transferee may apply to the executing Court under sec 47 (3) to be substituted for the original decree holder to enable him to prove his claim before the liquidator. Sec 171 of the Indian Companies Act 1913, is no bar to the granting of such an application (m)

Transfer of decree pending attachment—The attachment of a decree for the payment of money does not prevent a valid transfer of the decree, and the transferee is entitled to be substituted in place of the transferor and to apply under this rule for execution (n)

17. [S. 245.] (1) On receiving an application for the execution of a decree as provided by rule 11. sub-rule (2), the Court shall ascertain whether such of the requirements of rules 11 to 14 as may be applicable to the case have been complied with; and, if they have not been complied with, the Court may reject the application, or may allow the defect to be remedied then and there or within a time to be fixed by it.

(2) Where an application is amended under the provisions of sub-rule (1), it shall be deemed to have been an application in accordance with law and presented on the date when it was first presented.

(3) Every amendment made under this rule shall be signed or initialed by the Judge.

(4) When the application is admitted, the Court shall enter in the proper register a note of the application and the date on which it was made, and shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, order execution of the decree according to the nature of the application :

Provided that, in the case of a decree for the payment of money, the value of the property attached shall, as nearly as may be, correspond with the amount due under the decree.

Changes in the law — This rule corresponds with s 245 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

1 The words "may allow the defect to be remedied" in sub rule (1), have been substituted for the words "may allow it [application] to be remedied" as being more comprehensive and covering the case of omission to produce a copy of the decree as now required by r 11 (3)

2 Sub rule (2) is new See notes below, "Sub rule (2) limitation"

Sub rule (1) — The rule requires a preliminary scrutiny of the execution application

Court (o) The Court should in each case exercise its discretion, and where an amendment ought to be allowed it should allow the amendment (p) Thus where an application is not signed, it should not reject the application, but allow it to be amended (q) The amendment may be allowed even after the application for execution is registered provided the execution of the decree has not at the date of the application for amendment become barred by limitation (r) But the High Court of Madras has held that where an application for amendment is made after the expiration of 12 years provided by s 48. O. 2 the Court has a discretion either to accept or to reject it (s)

Sub rule (2) limitation—Article 182 of the Limitation Act provides inter alia that the first application for execution must be made within three years from the date of the decree. If the decree has not been executed, and it is necessary to make further application each successive application must be made within three years from the date of the "last application", or (since the amendment made by Act 9 of 1927) from the date of the final order passed on the last application. But the "last application" in each case must have been one "in accordance with law", otherwise it will not be a fresh starting point for limitation. An application which does not comply with the requirements of rules 11 to 14 of this order is not one "in accordance with law" (t). Sub rule (2) is therefore important with reference to limitation for if an application is defective with reference to rules 11 to 14 and is returned for amendment within a fixed time, it will, when so amended, be an application in accordance with law as from the date when it was first presented. Under the old section it was held that where an order was made for amending an application for execution and the amendment was made, the application should be deemed to have been presented not on the date when it was first presented, but on the date when it was amended. The result was that if the amendment was not made until after the expiration of the period of limitation the application was time barred though the amendment was made within the time fixed by the Court (u). Those decisions are no longer law. Compare s 149. But under the present rule limitation will not be saved if the application does not comply with the requirements of rules 11 to 14 and is not amended within the time allowed by the Court (v). On the other hand substantial compliance with rules 11 to 14 is all that is necessary, and if the application does so comply with these rules, it will be in accordance with law, and will be effectual to stay the progress of limitation whether the Court admits or rejects or returns it for amendment (w). Sub r (2) applies only if the application is returned for amendment for non compliance with the provisions of rr 11 to 14, and the application is subsequently amended. Sub r (2) does not in terms apply to cases where an application is returned for amendment for some other reason (x). But the same rule was applied when an application was wrongly returned for non payment of process fee on the ground that the act of Court should prejudice no man (y).

The last day for presenting an application for execution is 31st July 1925. The decree holder presents the application on that day. The application does not comply with the requirements of O 21, r 11 (2). The Court may under this rule return the application for amendment and fix a date within which it should be amended. If the application is amended within the time fixed by the Court it will be deemed to have been presented on 31st July 1925. Further it will be deemed to have been an application "in accordance with law" within the meaning of art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, so as to give a fresh starting point of limitation.

18. [S. 246.] (1) Where applications are made to a Court for the execution of cross-decrees in separate suits for the payment of two sums of money passed between the same parties and capable of execution at the same time by such Court, then—

Execution in case of cross decrees

(a) if the two sums are equal, satisfaction shall be entered upon both decrees; and

(b) if the two sums are unequal, execution may be taken out only by the holder of the decree for the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered on the decree for the larger sum as well as satisfaction on the decree for the smaller sum.

(2) This rule shall be deemed to apply where either party is an assignee of one of the decrees and as well in respect of judgment-debts due by the original assignor as in respect of judgment-debts due by the assignee himself.

(3) This rule shall not be deemed to apply unless—

(a) the decree-holder in one of the suits in which the decrees have been made is the judgment-debtor in the other and each party fills the same character in both suits; and

(b) the sums due under the decrees are definite.

(4) The holder of a decree passed against several persons jointly and severally may treat it as a cross-decree in relation to a decree passed against him singly in favour of one or more of such persons.

(a) A holds a decree against B for Rs. 1,000. B holds a decree against A for the payment of Rs. 1,000 in case A fails to deliver certain goods at a future day. B cannot treat his decree as a cross-decree under this rule. O. 21,

(b) A and B, co plaintiffs, obtain a decree for Rs. 1,000 against C, and C obtains a decree for Rs. 1,000 against B. C cannot treat his decree as a cross decree under this rule.

(c) A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 1,000. C who is a trustee for B, obtains a decree on behalf of B against A for Rs. 1,000. B cannot treat C's decree as a cross-decree under this rule.

(d) A, B, C, D and E are jointly and severally liable for Rs. 1,000 under a decree obtained by F. A obtains a decree for Rs. 100 against F singly and applies for execution to the Court in which the joint-decree is being executed. F may treat his joint decree as a cross decree under this rule.

Changes in the law —

- 1 The words "where applications are made to a Court for the execution of cross-decree" in sub rule (1) are new. They give effect to certain decisions noted below under the head "Application of the rule".
- 2 The words "separate suits" in sub rule (1) are new. They have been added to show that, for the purposes of execution, a counter claim is not a separate suit (b).
- 3 Sub rule (4) and the illustration thereto, that is, ill. (d) are both new. This sub rule gives effect to the decisions noted under the head "Sub rule (4)".

Application of the rule—The meaning of sub rule (1) may be explained by the following illustration. A holds a decree against B for Rs. 5,000. B holds a decree against A for Rs. 3,000. A and B each applies for execution of his decree to Court X which has jurisdiction to execute both decrees. The decrees being cross decrees they will be set off against each other. Hence B, who is the holder of the decree for the smaller amount, will not be allowed to take out execution of his decree. Execution will only be allowed of A's decree to the extent of Rs. 2,000, being the difference between the amount of his and B's decree. If the decree held by B was also for Rs. 5,000 neither party should be allowed to take out execution, and satisfaction should be entered upon both decrees.

This rule does not apply unless—

- (1) the cross decrees are for the payment of two sums of money,
- (2) the decrees have been obtained in separate suits [see notes above under the head "Alterations in the rule"],
- (3) both the decrees are capable of execution at the same time [ill. (1)], and by the same Court, and
- (4) the decree holder in one of the suits in which the decrees have been passed is the judgment debtor in the other, and each party fills the same character in both the suits [ills. (b) and (c)].

If the cross decrees fulfil the above conditions it is also necessary, that both decrees should be before the executing Court for execution, and that applications should have been made for execution of both decrees. If either decree holder omits to apply for 21, r. 18 execution of his decree, the other decree holder may take out execution of his decree for its full amount (c) Note the words with which the rule begins.

"Cross decrees in separate suits"—An order for payment of mesne profits made under s 144 is a decree by virtue of s 2 (2) Hence it has been held that there is no distinction for the purposes of this rule between a decree in a suit and a decree in a proceeding under s 144 A obtains a decree against B In execution of the decree B a property is sold and it is purchased by A The decree is reversed in appeal, and A is directed to deliver possession of the property to B and to pay to B Rs 712 for mesne profits B applies for execution against A in respect of Rs 712 A claims to set off another decree obtained by him against B The set off may be allowed under this rule (d)

"Cross decrees for the payment of two sums of money"—A sues B on a mortgage and obtains a decree for Rs 1,800 to be realized by sale of the mortgaged property B obtains a decree against A for Rs 2,000 Here A's decree, though it is one for sale in enforcement of a mortgage, and not strictly for the payment of money may be set off against B's decree, by virtue of the provisions of r 20 of this order (e) But it has been doubted if this can be done before the amount due on the mortgage has been ascertained (f)

Where execution is taken out for the smaller sum—This rule provides that where applications are made for the execution of cross decrees, one for a larger amount and the other for a smaller amount, execution should be taken out only for the difference This means that the decree for the smaller amount cannot be executed at all and no separate execution should issue of that decree (g) It is to be noted however that if the Court in contravention of the provisions of this rule, allows execution to issue of the decree for the smaller sum and a sale is made in such execution, the sale is not void the reason being that "a purchaser under a sale in execution is not bound to inquire whether the judgment debtor had a cross judgment of a higher amount (h)

Same character in both suits—The provisions of this rule do not apply unless the decree holder in one suit is the judgment debtor in the other, and each party fills the same character in both suits A holds a money decree against B B holds a decree for sale passed in a suit brought by him as mortgagee against C, the mortgagor and against A, a purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property from C A applies for execution of his decree against B B is not entitled to set off his decree against A's decree The reason is that A does not fill the same character in both the suits The decree held by A is in his favour personally which he may execute against B by the arrest of his person or the attachment of his property This cannot be said of B's decree against A, for A is not ordered by the decree personally to pay any sum of money, but is only given an option to pay, if he wishes to save the property in which he is interested (i) If in the case put above C, the mortgagor, was the holder of the money decree against B instead of A, and C applied for execution against B B (the mortgagee) could have set off his decree against C (j) But a firm name is only a description of the individual partners and so a decree against a firm can be set off against a decree in favour of a partner (k)

Assignment of decree.—If A, who has obtained a decree against B, attaches in execution of his decree a decree held by B against C, A is an assignee of B's decree within the meaning of this rule (l) [See O 21, r 53 (3)] It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a decree obtained against the assignor in a suit pending at the date of the assignment may be set off against the decree assigned, if the assignee had notice of such suit (m) A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000. B then sues A for Rs 2,000. Pending B's suit C obtains a transfer of A's decree with notice of the suit. A decree is then passed for B in his suit against A. C applies for execution against B of the whole decree for Rs 5,000. He is not entitled to execute for more than Rs 2,000 as the transfer was taken with notice of B's suit. See notes to s 49.

Sub rule (4).—This sub rule gives effect to the decisions in the undermentioned cases where it was held that the holder of a decree passed jointly and severally against several judgment-debtors one of whom holds a decree against such decree holder singly may treat his joint decree as a cross-decree (n) See ill (1) to the sub rule.

19. [S. 247.] Where application is made to a Court for the execution of a decree under which two parties are entitled to recover sums of money from each other, then,—

Execution in case of cross claims under same decree

(a) if the two sums are equal, satisfaction for both shall be entered upon the decree; and,

(b) if the two sums are unequal, execution may be taken out only by the party entitled to the larger sum and for so much only as remains after deducting the smaller sum, and satisfaction for the smaller sum shall be entered upon the decree.

Object of the rule.—The object of this rule is to prevent each side executing a decree in respect of sums due, whether for costs or otherwise under the same decree (o).

Application of the rule.—This rule is not limited in its application to cases in which the remedy of each party against the other is of precisely the same nature. A, a mortgagor, sues B, the mortgagee for redemption. A decree is passed in the suit, ordering that upon A paying to B Rs 1,000 (mortgage debt) on a day fixed by the Court B should reconvey the mortgaged property to A, and that if such payment is not made within the time fixed by the Court the property should be sold. At the same time A is awarded costs, Rs 100, to be paid by B. Here both the sums being payable under the same decree, the provisions of the present rule apply, though B's remedy, if A failed to pay the mortgage debt, would be by sale of the mortgaged property, and A's remedy if B failed to pay the costs, would be against B personally. Hence A, being entitled to the smaller amount (Rs 100), cannot take out execution against B (p). B, being entitled to the larger amount (Rs 1,000), is alone entitled to take out execution. But he cannot take out execution for more than Rs 900, which is the same thing as saying that he must reconvey the property to A, if A paid Rs 900 and he cannot insist on payment of the full sum of Rs 1,000 as a condition of reconveyance (g) The point to be noted is that in the case of cross claims under the same decree, execution may be taken out only by the party entitled to the larger sum The party entitled to the smaller sum is not entitled to take out execution It follows from this that if A is entitled to recover from B some profits amounting to Rs 445 under a decree, and B is entitled to recover from A under the same decree costs amounting to Rs 855, A being entitled to the smaller sum cannot take out execution against B, though B a claim to execute his decree for costs is barred by limitation (r) It may also be noted that if the party entitled to the larger sum executed the decree for the full amount without deducting the smaller sum, the party entitled to the smaller sum may be awarded a refund of that sum under s 151 of the Code (s)

Cross-decrees and cross-claims in mortgage suits

20. [New.] The provisions contained in rules 18 and 19 shall apply to decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge.

Object of the rule.—This rule is new. It is inserted in order to make it clear that the provisions as to cross decrees and cross claims apply to mortgage decrees The rule shows impliedly that the expression "decree for the payment of money" and other similar expressions in the Code do not include a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge See in particular s 34, s 73 and O 21, r 53

The High Courts of Allahabad and Madras have held that a simple decree for recovery of money can be set off against a decree for recovery of money by enforcement of a mortgage or charge (t) See notes to r 18 above, "Cross decrees for the payment, etc

21. [S. 230, 2nd para.] The Court may, in its discretion, refuse execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment-debtor.

Simultaneous execution

Simultaneous execution against person and property.—An order refusing execution at the same time against the person and property of the judgment-debtor amounts to a decree under s 2, cl (2), read with s 47, and it is therefore appealable (u)

But though the Court has a discretion to refuse simultaneous execution, it cannot decline to order execution against the person of the judgment debtor on the ground that the decree holder should proceed in the first place against his property (v)

Provided that no such notice shall be necessary in consequence of more than one year having elapsed between the date of the decree and the application for execution if the application is made within one year from the date of the last order against the party against whom execution is applied for, made on any previous application for execution, or in consequence of the application being made against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor, if upon a previous application for execution against the same person the Court has ordered execution to issue against him.

(2) Nothing in the foregoing sub-rule shall be deemed to preclude the Court from issuing any process in execution of a decree without issuing the notice thereby prescribed, if, for reasons to be recorded, it considers that the issue of such notice would cause unreasonable delay or would defeat the ends of justice.

Changes in the law—Sub rule (2) is new See note below, 'Sub rule (2)'

The Court shall issue a notice—It is not enough merely to take out a notice. The notice must be served upon the judgment debtor or upon his legal representative (w)

Omission to give notice—This rule provides that except where notice is dispensed with under sub r (2) the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for if the application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree or if it is made against the legal representative of the judgment debtor. This gives rise to the question whether the omission to give notice as required by this rule renders a sale in execution of the decree absolutely void for want of jurisdiction, or whether the omission is a mere irregularity so as to render the sale merely voidable, that is valid until it is set aside. In Gopal Chunder v Gunamoni Das (x) the High Court of Calcutta held that a notice under this rule is necessary in order that the Court should obtain jurisdiction to sell the property by way of execution, and that the omission to give notice is by itself sufficient to render the sale void. This decision was approved by the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v Sunder Das (y). In Raghunath Das's case the judgment debtor became insolvent pending the attachment. No notice was given to the Official Assignee as required by cl (b) of sub r (1), and it was held that the sale was a nullity. Since the notice under this rule affords the very foundation of the jurisdiction, it follows that where execution is issued without previously issuing a notice required under sub rule (1) and property belonging to the judgment debtor is sold in execution the sale is a nullity.

O. 21, r. 22 whether the property is purchased by the decree holder (O 21, r 72) (a), or by a third party (a) It makes no difference whether the property sold is movable or immovable (b) But the object of the rule is to give the judgment debtor an opportunity to show cause why the execution should not proceed, and if the judgment-debtor is aware of the proceeding the Court has jurisdiction to hold the sale (c)

Notice to wrong person as legal representative—The principle laid down in Raghunath Das's case applies where no notice is given. But what if notice is given and served, upon a person who proves not to be the legal representative? The leading case upon the subject is Mallaryun v Narhari (d). A decree was passed against a person, who afterwards died, and in executing the decree against his estate, a person was served as his legal representative with notice under this rule. The person served objected that he was not the legal representative of the deceased. The executing Court decided and as it turned out subsequently, decided erroneously, that he was to be treated as such representative [see s 47]. After that the execution proceedings went on with the result that certain property belonging to the deceased judgment debtor was sold and purchased by a third party. The question arose whether the sale was void as made without jurisdiction, or whether it was merely voidable. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a notice having been served in fact, though upon a wrong person, the Court had jurisdiction to sell the property, and the sale was not void. Their Lordships further held that the omission to give notice to the right person constituted a serious irregularity and that the sale was therefore voidable, that is to say, it was valid until it was set aside under O 21, r 90, or by an independent suit brought within a year as provided by art 12 cl (a) of the Limitation Act. Their Lordships said "He (the person served) contended that he was not the right person, but the Court, having received his protest, decided that he was the right person and so proceeded with the execution. In so doing the Court was exercising its jurisdiction. It made a sad mistake, it is true, but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right (e)". But if the decree holder knows who the legal representative of the deceased judgment debtor is, and deliberately serves the notice upon a wrong person as his legal representative, and there is no adjudication by the executing Court as to who the legal representative is, the sale has been held to be absolutely void (f).

Omission to give notice to one of several legal representatives.—In the execution of a mortgagee's decree for sale the decree holder omitted to give notice to one of the legal representatives of the mortgagor. It was held that the sale in execution of the decree was not wholly void but that it should be set aside to the extent of the share of that legal representative (g).

More than one year after the date of the decree—The term 'decree' in sub r (1), cl (a), means the decree capable of execution. Thus where an appeal is preferred from a decree and the appeal is dismissed for default under O 41, r 11, the decree of the lower Court is the decree capable of execution, and the period of one year is to be calculated from the date of that decree (h) See notes to sec 36, "What decree may be executed" Even where the decretal amount is made payable by instalments, the period of one year must be calculated from the date of the decree, and not from the date of default (i) No notice under r 22 is necessary if the application is made within a year of a previous application under O 2, r 16 (i1)

More than one notice—In one case the High Court of Patna held that once the original decree has been put into execution after notice as provided by this rule, no fresh notice need be served for every subsequent application for execution made more than one year from the date of the last order for execution (j), but this case was overruled by a Special Bench of the same High Court where it was held that the rule applies to every application, and that in every case a year after the last order made for execution a fresh notice must be served (k)

The High Court of Madras has held that where property is attached on an application for execution, no notice need be given to the judgment-debtor of the application for sale, though the latter application is made more than a year after the previous application for execution (l)

Irregular service of notice—Irregularity in the service of notice as distinguished from non-service is a material irregularity within the meaning of O 21, r 90 (m)

Death of judgment debtor pending execution—Notice to legal representative—If execution proceedings have begun against a judgment debtor they can be continued after his death against his legal representative See sec 50 But notice under this rule must be given to the legal representative (n)

Death of judgment-debtor pending execution by transferee Court—See notes to sec 50

"Court executing the decree"—It may either be the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which the decree is sent for execution

Sub rule (2)—This sub rule is new It enables the Court to issue execution without issuing a notice as provided by sub rule (1) in cases where the issue of a notice may involve an unreasonable delay or defeat the ends of justice Where the Court dispenses with notice under sub rule (1) it should record its reasons (o) But if the Court omits to record its reasons the omission is a mere irregularity (p)

Limitation to set aside sale for want of notice—An application to set aside a sale which is void, et q for want of notice under this rule is governed by art 181, and not art 166 of Sch I of the Limitation Act (q)

Appeal—An application to set aside a sale held without notice as required by sub r (1) falls within sec 47, and hence a second appeal lies (r)

Decree against two or more persons jointly.—Art. 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, applies to decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts. Under Explanation I to that article when a decree has been passed jointly against more persons than one an application for execution of the decree, if made against any one or more of them, shall take effect against them all. Therefore an order of execution made under this rule in the other judgment debtors is appended. Therefore if a joint decree made against one of several judgment debtors does not operate against other judgment-debtors to whom no notice is given under this rule (z).

Notice under this rule is not to be issued under this rule if the debtor is dead (z).

debtor was dead (z)

Art 183 of the Limitation Act, which provides that a decree shall not be executed until its date unless an order for mere issue and service of a notice under this rule does not (z)

23. [S. 249.] (1) Where the person to whom notice is issued under the last preceding rule does not appear or does not show cause to the satisfaction of the Court why the decree should not be executed, the Court shall order the decree to be executed.

(2) Where such person offers any objection to the execution of the decree, the Court shall consider such objection and make such order as it thinks fit.

it sees cause to the contrary, issue its process for the execution of the decree.

(2) Every such process shall bear date, the day on which it is issued, and shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court and delivered to the proper officer to be executed.

(3) In every such process a day shall be specified on or before which it shall be executed

Unless it sees cause to the contrary—See notes to O 21, r 37, under the head 'Whether an executing Court has discretion to refuse or suspend attachment of judgment debtor's property

Delegation of authority to execute—The officer to whom a warrant is delivered for execution under this rule may deliver it to his subordinate for execution. It is not necessary that the "proper officer" should himself execute all warrants sent to him (a) But a warrant addressed to the peon of a Court cannot be executed by a Nawab (b)

Arrest without warrant—Where an officer of the Court arrests a judgment debtor without having the warrant in his possession at the time of arrest, the arrest is illegal (c)

"Shall be sealed"—The provisions of this rule being mandatory the omission of the Court's seal on the warrant renders the attachment illegal (d)

Specification of day on or before which warrant should be executed—The warrant should specify the date on or before which it is to be executed. Resistance to the execution of a warrant which does not specify such date is not illegal (e). Moreover, a warrant cannot be executed after the expiration of the date specified in the warrant for its execution (f). If the warrant is extended, the date to which it is extended must be specified on the warrant. If this is not done, the warrant is not a good warrant, and resistance to its execution after the date originally specified in it does not amount to an offence under s 186 of the Indian Penal Code (g)

25 [S. 343.] (1) The officer entrusted with the execution of the process shall endorse thereon the day on, and the manner in, which it was executed, and, if the latest day specified in the process for the return thereof has been exceeded, the reason of the delay, or, if it was not executed, the reason why it was not executed, and shall return the process with such endorsement to the Court

Art 183 of the Limitation Act, which applies to decrees of Chartered High Courts, provides inter alia that a decree of such Court can be enforced within twelve years from its date unless the decree has been revived. The High Court of Calcutta has held that an order for execution operates as a revivor within the meaning of this article (y), but mere issue and service of a notice under this rule does not (z)

(2) Every such process shall bear date, the day on which it is issued, and shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be sealed with the seal of the Court and delivered to the proper officer to be executed.

(3) In every such process a day shall be specified on or before which it shall be executed.

Unless it sees cause to the contrary.—See notes to O 21, r. 37, under the head "Whether an executing Court has discretion to refuse or suspend attachment of judgment debtor's property."

Delegation of authority to execute—The officer to whom a warrant is delivered for execution under this rule may deliver it to his subordinate for execution. It is not necessary that the "proper officer" should himself execute all warrants sent to him (a). But a warrant addressed to the person of a Court cannot be executed by a Nazir (b).

Arrest without warrant.—Where an officer of the Court arrests a judgment debtor without having the warrant in his possession at the time of arrest, the arrest is illegal(c)

"Shall be sealed"—The provisions of this rule being mandatory, the omission of the Court's seal on the warrant renders the attachment illegal (d)

Specification of day on or before which warrant should be executed—The warrant should specify the date on or before which it is to be executed. Resistance to the execution of a warrant which does not specify such date is not illegal (e). Moreover, a warrant cannot be executed after the expiration of the date specified in the warrant for its execution (f). If the warrant is extended, the date to which it is extended must be specified on the warrant. Stay of execution

26. [S. 239, 240.] (1) The Court to which a decree has been sent for execution shall, upon sufficient cause being shown, stay the execution of such decree for a reasonable time, to enable the judgment-debtor to apply to the Court by which the decree was passed, or to any Court having appellate jurisdiction in respect of the decree or the execution thereof, for an order to stay execution, or for any other order relating to the decree or execution which might have been made by such Court of first instance or appellate Court if execution had been issued thereby, or if application for execution had been made thereto

(2) Where the property or person of the judgment debtor has been seized under an execution the Court which issued the execution may order the restitution of such property or the discharge of such person pending the result of the application

(3) Before making an order to stay execution or for the restitution of property or the discharge of the judgment debtor, the Court may require such security from, or impose such conditions upon, the judgment debtor as it thinks fit against the holder of a decree of such Court, on the part of the person against whom the decree was passed, the Court may, on such terms as to security or otherwise, as it thinks fit, stay execution of the decree until the pending suit has been decided.

Pending in any Court.—If a suit is pending before a Joint Subordinate Judge he may stay execution in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for he is a Judge of the same Court (A). In the case last cited the Bombay High Court said that the Court in which the suit is pending is the Court authorized to stay execution and that if a decree is transferred for execution and a suit is pending against the decree holder in the transferor Court that Court would have power to stay execution in the transferee Court. Similarly if a suit is pending against the decree holder in the transferee Court the latter Court has power to stay execution (1).

Security.—The Court has ample discretion and if it thinks fit need not require security (3)

Whether provisions of Code relating to execution of decrees apply to an award filed under the Arbitration Act, 1889—The High Court of Bombay has held that an award filed in Court under sec 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1889 is not a decree, although it is enforceable, as provided by sec 15 of that Act, as if it were a decree. The execution therefore of such an award cannot be stayed under this rule (l). On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta holds that an award filed in Court under sec 11 of the Arbitration Act being enforceable under sec 15 of the Act as if it were a decree of the Court, the provisions of the Code applicable to the execution of decrees apply to an award so filed. It has thus been held that an award against a firm stands on the same footing as a decree against a firm for the purposes of O 21, r 50 (l) and that a transfer of an award stands on the same footing as a transfer of a decree for the purposes of O 21, r 16 (m). The High Court of Allahabad takes the same view as the Calcutta High Court (n). No such question, however, can arise where a decree is passed in terms of an award under para 16 of Sch II of the Code (o) for the award in that case is merged in the decree.

Appeal—The Punjab Court has held that the Court can in its inherent jurisdiction stay execution proceedings pending the decision of an appeal in the judgment debtor's suit (p). But the Calcutta High Court considers that it is not necessary to have recourse to the inherent jurisdiction and construes the words "until the pending suit has been decided" to mean until the claim in the pending suit has been finally decided, i.e., after all rights of appeal have been exhausted (q). See note to sec. 47, "Changes introduced by the section."

Mode of execution.

30. [S. 254.] Every decree for the payment of money, including a decree for the payment of money as the alternative to some other relief, may be executed by the detention in the civil prison of the judgment-debtor, or by the attachment and sale of his property, or by both.

Decree for payment of money

Alternative to some other relief.—See O 20, r 10

Property charged with payment of decretal amount.—No attachment is necessary where by a consent-decree certain property is charged with payment of the decretal amount and liberty is given to the decree holder to sell the property in case of default of payment (r) The Court has no authority to decline to make an order of committal to civil prison on the ground that the decree holder should proceed in the first instance against the property of the judgment debtor (s)

31. [S. 259.] (1) Where the decree is for any specific movable, or for any share in a specific movable, it may be executed by the seizure, if practicable, of the movable or share, and by the delivery thereof to the party to whom it has been adjudged, or to such person as he appoints to receive delivery on his behalf, or by the detention in the civil prison of the judgment-debtor, or by the attachment of his property, or by both

(2) Where any attachment under sub-rule (1) has remained in force for six months, if the judgment debtor has not obeyed the decree and the decree-holder has applied to have the attached property sold, such property may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award to the decree-holder, in cases where any amount has been fixed by the decree to be paid as an alternative to delivery of movable property, such amount, and, in other cases, such compensation as it thinks fit, and shall pay the balance (if any) to the judgment-debtor on his application

(3) Where the judgment-debtor has obeyed the decree and paid all costs of executing the same which he is bound to pay, or where, at the end of six months from the date of the attachment, no application to have the property sold has been made, or, if made, has been refused, the attachment shall cease.

Alterations in the rule.—The words "or for the recovery of a wife," which occurred in the corresponding sec 259 of the Code of 1882 after the words "share in a specific movable," have been omitted, for there can be no decree under the law for the recovery of a wife, as a wife cannot be treated as a chattel to be delivered over to the husband. Where any third person prevents the wife from returning to her husband, the latter may obtain an injunction against him which may be enforced in case of disobedience either by the imprisonment of the defendant, or by the attachment of his property, or by both, under r 32.

Decree for specific movable property.—Where a decree directs recovery of specific movable property and for payment of the price thereof if the property be not delivered, the decree holder is not entitled to execute the money part of the decree before applying for delivery of the property (t). As to the cases in which a decree may be passed for the delivery of specific movable property, see Specific Relief Act I of 1877, s 11.

Rule when not applicable.—It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that this rule does not apply where the property sought to be attached is not in the possession of the judgment debtor (u).

32. [S. 260, R. S. C., O. 42, r. 30.] (1) Where the party against whom a decree for the specific performance of a contract, or for restitution of conjugal rights, or for an injunction, has been passed, has had an opportunity of obeying the decree and has wilfully failed to obey it, the decree may be enforced in the case of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights by the attachment of his property or in the case of a decree for the specific performance of a contract or, for an injunction (v) by his detention in the civil prison, or by the attachment of his property or by both.

(2) Where the party against whom a decree for specific performance or for an injunction has been passed is a corporation, the decree may be enforced by the attachment of the property of the corporation or, with the leave of the Court, by the detention in the civil prison of the directors or other principal officers thereof, or by both attachment and detention.

(3) Where any attachment under sub-rule (1) or sub-rule (2) has remained in force for one year, if the judgment-debtor has not obeyed the decree and the decree-holder has applied to have the attached property sold, such property may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award to the decree-holder such compensation as he thinks fit, and shall pay the balance (if any) to the judgment-debtor on his application.

(5) Where a decree for the specific performance of a contract or for an injunction has not been obeyed, the Court may, in lieu of or in addition to all or any of the processes aforesaid, direct that the act required to be done may be done so far as practicable by the decree-holder or some other person appointed by the Court, at the cost of the judgment-debtor, and upon the act being done the expenses incurred may be ascertained in such manner as the Court may direct and may be recovered as if they were included in the decree.

4, a person of little substance, erects a building which renders uninhabitable a family mansion belonging to B. A in spite of his detention in prison and the attachment of his property, declines to obey a decree obtained against him by B and directing him to remove the building. The Court is of opinion that no sum realizable by the sale of A's property would adequately compensate B for the depreciation in the value of his mansion. B may apply to the Court to remove the building and may recover the cost of such removal from A in the execution proceedings.

Alterations in the rule.—Sub rules (2) and (5) are new. See notes below under the head "Sub rule (5)".

The words "or for an order requiring the performance of, or abstinence from, any other particular act" which occurred in s. 200 of the Code of 1882 have been omitted, and in lieu thereof the words "or for an injunction" have been substituted. See notes below under the head "Sub rule (1) decree for injunction".

Specific performance.—As to specific performance of contracts, see Specific Relief Act I of 1877, ss 12-30.

Injunction.—As to perpetual injunctions, see Specific Relief Act I of 1877, ss 34-37.

Restitution of conjugal rights.—The words italicized in sub rule (1) were added by Act 29 of 1923. Having regard to those words, a decree for restitution of conjugal rights can no longer be enforced by detention in the civil prison, whether it be against a husband or a wife. As to a decree against a husband, see also r 33 below.

Sub-rule (1): decree for injunction.—Sub rule (1) applies to both prohibitory and mandatory injunctions (u). Where an injunction has been granted, on each successive breach of it, the decree may be enforced under this rule by an application made within three years of such breach under art 181 of the Limitation Act (x). A separate suit to enforce the injunction is barred by the provisions of s 47 (y). If the decree is enforced by the imprisonment of the defendant, the period of imprisonment should not at any one time exceed six months see s 58

Where a woman, who had been directed by a decree to refrain from preventing her daughter returning to her husband, permitted the daughter, who was of age, to reside in her house, it was held that such conduct did not constitute a breach of the direction under the decree so as to render it punishable under this rule (z)

It was held under the old section that an order directing a defendant to render accounts within a specified time was an "order requiring the performance of a particular act" within the meaning of that section, and that disobedience to the order was punishable under that section (a) The words "performance of or abstention from any other particular act" which occurred in the old section were held to have a very wide general meaning, and they have been omitted from this rule, and the word "injunction" has been substituted Hence disobedience to an order directing a party to render accounts can no longer be punished under this rule, as such an order cannot be said to be an "injunction" within the meaning of this rule (b)

Opportunity of obeying the decree.—All that the Court has to see before directing execution to issue under this rule is whether the party bound by the decree has had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it If the party has had the opportunity and has wilfully failed to obey the decree, the Court may order execution to issue under this rule without giving him any further opportunity, and it is not obligatory upon the Court in such a case to serve a notice upon the party calling upon him to obey the decree or injunction (c)

Where an application is made under this rule, but the party bound by the decree has had no opportunity of obeying the decree, the application will be dismissed But the dismissal of the application is no bar to another application made after an opportunity has been afforded to the party of obeying the decree Thus if a decree is made directing the defendant to deliver certain articles necessary for the performance of the duties of priest in a temple to the plaintiff, the plaintiff is not entitled to execute the decree under this rule unless it is proved that he went to the temple after notice to the defendant to receive the articles from him (and thereby afforded an opportunity to the defendant to comply with the decree) and that the defendant failed to deliver the articles If such an opportunity has not been afforded, the plaintiff's application will be dismissed, but its dismissal will be no bar to a subsequent application after such opportunity has been afforded (d)

"Party against whom a decree for injunction has been passed."—See notes to s 50, Decree for injunction

Sub rule (5)—This sub rule is new It corresponds to O 42, r 30, of the English Rules In the absence of any provision in the old section similar to the one contained in this sub rule, it was held that where a decree directed the defendant to remove an obstruction, such as pulling down a wall or opening a path way, and the defendant failed to obey the decree, it was not competent to the Court to depute any of its officers to remove the obstruction, as that was not one of the modes of execution sanctioned under that section (e) Under the present rule, the Court may direct the act to be done so far as practicable by the decree holder or some other person appointed by the Court (f) But the Court has no power under this rule to order the police to see that its decree is carried out. Thus where a decree is passed declaring the plaintiff's right to perform certain ceremonies in a temple and restraining the defendant from obstructing the plaintiff's from performing the ceremonies, the Court has no power under this rule to order the police to see that the plaintiffs performed the ceremonies without interference on the part of the defendants (g). But it would appear that the Court will under this rule direct an application to be made to the Revenue authorities, for the Privy Council said that the provisions of the rule were sufficient to provide for the enforcement of a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale and an implied covenant to apply to the Revenue authorities for their sanction to the transfer (h).

Amendment of the rule.—The italicized words in sub rule (1) were added by Act 29 of 1923. The words "and the decree holder is the wife" which occurred in sub rule (2) after the words "under sub rule (1)" were omitted by the same Act. The effect of this omission is that the present rule applies to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights passed against a husband. The words "shall be executed in the manner provided in this rule" in sub r (1) have been substituted for the words "shall not be executed by detention in prison". See as to the latter words the undermentioned case (i). See r 32 above and note the alterations made in that rule by the same Act.

34. [Ss. 261, 262.] (1) Where a decree is for the execution of a document or for the endorsement of a negotiable instrument and the judgment-debtor neglects or refuses to obey the decree, the decree-holder may prepare a draft of the document or endorsement in accordance with the terms of the decree and deliver the same to the Court

(3) Where the judgment-debtor objects to the draft, his objections shall be stated in writing within such time, and the Court shall make such order approving or altering the draft, as it thinks fit

(4) The decree-holder shall deliver to the Court a copy of the draft with such alterations (if any) as the Court may have directed upon the proper stamp-paper if a stamp is required by the law for the time being in force, and the Judge or such officer as may be appointed in this behalf shall execute the documents so delivered

(5) The execution of a document or the endorsement of a negotiable instrument under this rule may be in the following form, namely —

Sub rule (6) Registration—This sub rule is new. It gives effect to a decision of the Allahabad High Court that if a document requires registration it must be registered though executed by the Court (n). At the same time provision is made for the registration of documents, though their registration is optional if the decree holder desires to have them registered.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule on an objection to the draft of a document or of an endorsement (O 43 r 1 cl (i))

35. [S. 263.] (1) Where a decree is for the delivery of any immovable property, possession thereof shall be delivered to the party to whom it has been adjudged, or to such person as he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf, and, if necessary, by removing any person bound by the decree who refuses to vacate the property.

Decree for immovable property

(2) Where a decree is for the joint possession of immovable property, such possession shall be delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property and proclaiming by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree.

(3) Where possession of any building or enclosure is to be delivered and the person in possession, being bound by the decree, does not afford free access, the Court, through its officers, may, after giving reasonable warning and facility to any woman not appearing in public according to the customs of the country to withdraw, remove or open any lock or bolt or break open any door or do any other act necessary for putting the decree-holder in possession.

Alterations in the rule—Sub rules (2) and (3) are new. See notes below

Bound by the decree—The forfeiture of a lease destroys the rights of the sub-lessee, and in a suit for ejectment of the lessee there is no necessity to implead the sub-lessee (o). He is a person bound by the decree and the decree in ejectment of the lessee can be executed against him although he is not a party (p). O. 21

Sub rule (2)—A plaintiff who is entitled to possession jointly with other persons may be granted a decree for joint possession, whether the plaintiff was originally in possession and was subsequently dispossessed (q), or whether he had never been in possession (r). But the Court has a discretion in the matter (s) and joint possession was refused where the defendant had been 24 years in separate possession with the acquiescence of the plaintiff (t). Sub rule (2), which is new, has been inserted to remove the difficulty experienced in executing decrees obtained for joint possession of immovable property as against co-sharers and persons holding under them.

Resistance to delivery of possession to decree holder—If a person has succeeded in getting a decree for possession of a certain property, he is entitled under this rule to get an order from the Court for delivery of that property to him by any person bound by the decree. He need not invoke the assistance of the Court if he can get possession peaceably. But he may apply under this rule or rule 36 for the assistance of the Court to put him in possession. If he is resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession through the Court the procedure to be followed is that prescribed by rules 97 to 103 of this order (u).

Actual and formal possession—The possession referred to in sub rules (1) and (3) is has or actual possession, while that referred to in sub r (2) and r 36 below is formal or symbolical possession. Formal or symbolical possession is delivered by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree.

Rules 35 and 36 refer to cases where a suit is brought for possession of immovable property, and a decree is passed in the suit for the delivery of the property to the decree holder. Rules 95 and 96 refer to cases where immovable property belonging to a judgment debtor is sold in execution of a decree passed against him and the purchaser is resisted in obtaining possession through the Court. In both cases the possession may be either actual or symbolical. If the immovable property of which possession is directed by the decree to be delivered to the decree holder is in the possession of the judgment debtor, actual possession must be delivered to the decree holder under r 35 (1). Where it is in the possession of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same only symbolical possession can be delivered, and that is to be done under r 36. Likewise where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree, and possession is sought by the auction purchaser, actual possession must be delivered to him under r 95, if the property is in the possession of the judgment debtor. But if the property is in the possession of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same, only symbolical possession can be delivered, and that is to be done under r 96.

There are thus three cases in which the law allows symbolical possession to be given, namely, the cases contemplated by sub rule (2) of the present rule, by r 36 and by r 96 of this Order. Symbolical possession given in such cases operates as actual possession.

O. 21, r. 35 against the judgment debtor, but not against third persons who were not parties to the decree (1). In other words, symbolical possession is no possession at all as against third parties. This distinction is of great importance in the law of limitation. The rule to be deduced from the cases on the subject is that where in execution of a decree symbolical possession is delivered of immovable property to the person entitled to possession thereof, and such person subsequently institutes a suit for actual possession, the symbolical possession is to be treated as actual possession where the suit is against the judgment debtor or his representatives and the period of 12 years allowed for such a suit is to be calculated not from the date of sale, but from the date of the subsequent dispossession [ill (2)]. But where a suit for actual possession is instituted against a third party claiming to be in possession of the property adversely to the judgment-debtor, no account is taken of the symbolical possession of the plaintiff in determining the period of limitation, and the period of 12 years is to be calculated, not from the date on which symbolical possession was delivered to the plaintiff, but from the date on which the possession of such third party became adverse as against the judgment debtor [ill (1)].

Illustrations

(1) P obtains a decree against D. In execution of the decree certain property alleged to belong to D is sold, and is purchased by A. A applies for possession, and is placed in symbolical possession of the property. C has been in possession of the property adversely to D for 10 years prior to the date on which A is placed in symbolical possession. C continues to be in possession of the property as before. After three years A sues C for possession. The defence is that C has been in adverse possession for more than twelve years, and the suit is therefore barred under art 144 of the Limitation Act. A contends that this symbolical possession operated to break the continuity of the adverse possession of C, and that the period of twelve years allowed by art 144 for a suit for possession should be calculated from the date on which symbolical possession was delivered to him. The suit is barred, for A's possession, being merely symbolical, did not operate at all as possession as against C who was not a party to the suit, and it could not therefore break the continuity of C's possession (iv). In other words, delivery of symbolical possession to A did not amount to a dispossession of C.

(2) A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property. The property being in the occupancy of B's tenants symbolical possession is delivered to A under r 36. Subsequently B dispossesses A by receiving the rents and profits. A thereupon sues B for actual possession. The period of limitation for such a suit is twelve years from the date of dispossession (x). The same principles apply where a person is placed in symbolical possession under sub rule (2) of this rule in cases where the decree is one for joint possession, and also where he is placed in symbolical possession under r 90 of this Order (y).

Note—It will be observed that in ill (2) the suit is against the judgment debtor, and in ill (1) it is against a third person who was not a party to the suit. Symbolical possession operates as actual possession against the judgment debtor, that being the only means by which, as between the parties, the order of the Court can be effectively carried out. But it does not operate as actual possession against third persons who were not parties to the suit, and the reason for this is very plain. A suit might be brought, and a decree obtained, by a person who has neither title nor possession, against another person who has neither title nor possession, and if the delivery of symbolical possession in such a suit were to constitute actual possession as against the true owner who had been in actual possession for many years, and who was no party to the suit, it would operate most unjustly (2).

It has already been stated that where a judgment debtor himself is in possession actual possession must be delivered to the person entitled to possession under sub r (1) of this rule or under r 95, as the case may be. If symbolical possession is delivered in a case where actual possession ought to have been delivered, the decree holder can refuse to accept such possession and claim to be given has possession, and if he does not do so a second execution application for has possession will not be maintainable (a). If after accepting symbolical possession he wishes to get has possession he must file a suit for the purpose. The question then arises as to whether limitation should run from the date when the symbolical possession was given. The High Court of Calcutta has held that the delivery of symbolical possession even erroneously is not a nullity and it operates as actual possession against the judgment debtor and his representatives, for it is said that after all it is possession obtained through an officer of the Court and by process of law, and the judgment debtor must be taken to be a party to the proceeding relating to the taking of possession. From this point of view, a suit for actual possession may be brought at any time within 12 years from the date on which symbolical possession is given (b). On the other hand, a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has held that symbolical possession given in circumstances in which actual possession ought to have been given is a nullity, and the period of limitation for a suit for actual possession is 12 years from the date of sale. The reason given by the High Court of Bombay is that symbolical possession is not actual possession nor is it equivalent to actual possession except where the Code expressly or by implication provides that it shall have that effect, and there is no section of the Code which provides that where symbolical possession is given in a case in which actual possession ought to have been given, such possession should be treated as equivalent to actual possession (c). The High Court of Allahabad has taken the same view as the Bombay High Court (d). In an earlier case (e), the Madras High Court took the same view as the High Court of Calcutta, but in later cases it has followed the Bombay ruling (f).

In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property belonging to B is sold, and is purchased by C in the year 1895. B is in possession of the property at the date of sale. C applies for possession, but instead of actual possession being delivered to him under r 95, symbolical possession is given to him in the year 1905. C subsequently sues B for actual possession in the year 1908, that is more than 12 years after the date of sale, but within 12 years from the date of delivery of symbolical possession. According to the Bombay and Allahabad High Courts, the suit is barred by limitation, according to the Calcutta High Court, it is not.

It has been held by a Full Bench of the Oudh Court that where a sale is of an undivided share in a property, delivery of possession by means of beat of drum is a valid and effective delivery of possession within O. 21, r. 93, and that it is sufficient to give to the auction purchaser a fresh start for limitation. Stuart, C.J., observed that the distinction between actual and symbolical possession had little to do in such cases and that the real question was whether the delivery was effective in the circumstances of each particular case. Gulab Khan v. Ataulah (1925) 3 Luck 506, 110 IC 70, (25) A.O. 251. In the Full Bench Bombay case referred to above the sale was also of an undivided share, but the question whether that circumstance made any difference was not before the Court. All that the Bombay case decided was that when in a case where actual possession ought to have been delivered mere symbolical possession is delivered, the delivery of symbolical possession does not give to the purchaser a fresh start for limitation.

Sub rule (2) affixing copy of warrant—Where in a case falling within sub r. (2) of the present rule or rule 36 below, or r. 96 below, no copy of the warrant is affixed but the substance of the decree is proclaimed by beat of drum in the presence of the judgment debtor, the possession so delivered is good symbolical possession and carries with it all the incidents of such possession as against the judgment debtor, if he had notice of the proceedings (g), but not if he had no such notice (h).

decree to relinquish such occupancy, the Court shall order delivery to be made by affixing a copy of the warrant in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or other customary mode, at some convenient place, the substance of the decree in regard to the property.

may, instead of issuing a warrant for his arrest, issue a notice O. 2 calling upon him to appear before the Court on a day to be specified in the notice and show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison.

(2) Where appearance is not made in obedience to the notice, the Court shall, if the decree-holder so requires, issue a warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor.

Warrant to whom addressed.—A warrant of arrest must show the name and designation of the person to whom it is issued for execution. If this is not shewn, the warrant is defective and the rescue of a person arrested on such a defective warrant is not an offence under s. 225B, Indian Penal Code (j). For form of warrant of arrest see Appendix E, Form No. 12.

Discretionary power to issue notice under this rule—When a decree is for the payment of money, and execution is applied for against the person of the judgment debtor, the Court has jurisdiction under rule 30 to issue a warrant of arrest without previously serving notice on the judgment debtor (k), but the Court may issue a notice to the judgment debtor calling upon him to show cause why he should not be committed to the civil prison in execution of the decree. The notice gives the debtor an opportunity of appearing before the Court within the time fixed and it is not a judicial exercise of discretion for the Court to issue a warrant and a notice simultaneously (l). As to the procedure to be followed when the judgment debtor appears in pursuance of the notice, see r. 40 below.

Whether an executing Court has discretion to refuse or suspend attachment of judgment debtor's property—A Court executing a decree may, in its discretion under r. 40 below, allow an application for the arrest or imprisonment of a judgment debtor. But there is no rule which empowers the Court, in express terms, where an application is made for attachment of the judgment debtor's property, to give time to the judgment debtor to pay the judgment debt and for that purpose to stay execution. O. 21, r. 24 (1) provides that "when the preliminary measures required by the foregoing rules have been taken, the Court shall, unless it sees cause to the contrary, issue its process for the execution of the decree." In a Calcutta case under s. 250 of the Code of 1852, it was held that when an application is made for attachment of the property of a judgment debtor, the Court has no power to refuse or stay execution except in the cases expressly provided for by the Code (m). As to the words "unless it sees cause to the contrary" it was held that they referred only to the express provisions contained in the Code itself, such as s. 246 (now r. 18 above), s. 243 (now r. 29 above), etc., but that they did not give any discretion to the Court to refuse or stay execution. In a later case under the present Code it was held that the Court has inherent power under s. 151 to defer the issue or operation of its own process and that it may in a proper case grant time to the judgment-debtor. In that case the Subordinate Judge gave five days time to the judgment debtor and it was held by Mukerjee, J., that the time was rightly granted in the circumstances of the case. Graham, J., did not express any definite opinion as to the validity of the order, but said that there might be circumstances in which the Court would have discretion to grant reasonable time, e.g., in the case of illness of the judgment debtor (n). Assuming that the Court has an inherent power to allow time to a

"Any and what other property"—This refers to property which is liable to attachment and sale under the decree against the judgment-debtor. Property of a judgment-debtor which he has mortgaged is prima facie liable to be seized in execution of a decree against him, and the fact that he has mortgaged it will not prevent its being attached and sold in execution of the decree subject to the mortgage debt (see s. 73). If the mortgagee claims that he is in possession as mortgagee, he may be examined under this rule (e). See note to r. 62 below.

What property may not be attached—See s. 60

42. [S. 255.] Where a decree directs an inquiry as to rent or mesne profits or any other matter, the property of the judgment-debtor may, before the amount due from him has been ascertained, be attached, as in the case of an ordinary decree for the payment of money.

Attachment under a preliminary decree—In a suit by A against B for the recovery of possession of immovable property and for mesne profits, a preliminary decree is passed against B for the delivery of the property to A, and an inquiry is directed as to the mesne profits due by B to A. B delivers possession of the property to A. Subsequently while the inquiry as to mesne profits is still pending, A applies for attachment of certain property belonging to B. The attachment may be allowed under this rule (f). See O. 20, r. 12.

43. [S. 269.] Where the property to be attached is movable property, other than agricultural produce, in the possession of the judgment-debtor the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and the attaching officer shall keep the property in his own custody or in the custody of one of his subordinates, and shall be responsible for the due custody thereof.

44. [New] Where the property to be attached is agricultural produce, the attachment shall be made by affixing a copy of the warrant of attachment,—

Attachment of agricultural produce

- (a) where such produce is a growing crop, on the land on which such crop has grown, or
- (b) where such produce has been cut or gathered, on the threshing-floor or place for treading out grain or the like or fodder stack on or in which it is deposited, and another copy on the outer door or on some other conspicuous part of the house in which the judgment debtor ordinarily resides or, with the leave of the Court, on the outer door or on some other conspicuous part of the house in which he carries on business or personally works for gain or in which he is known to have last resided or carried on business or personally worked for gain, and the produce shall thereupon be deemed to have passed into the possession of the Court

Attachment of agricultural produce.—This and the following rule provide for the attachment of agricultural produce. Both these rules are new. Growing crops are under this Code included in the category of movable property [see s 2, cl (13)]. But the procedure relating to the actual seizure of movables cannot be applied in its entirety to growing crops, for considerable injury would result to both parties if such crops were allowed to be removed on attachment like other movable property. With a view to prevent such injury, and to secure to both parties the fullest value from the property attached it is enacted by the next following rule that where agricultural produce is attached the Court should make such arrangements for the custody thereof as it may deem sufficient and subject to such conditions as may be imposed by the Court, the judgment debtor should be allowed to continue to perform all acts of husbandry and if he endeavours to defeat the attachment by neglecting the crop, the decree holder should be allowed to intervene and protect his interests.

 the Court shall make such arrangements

Provisions as to agricultural produce under attachment

(2) Subject to such conditions as may be imposed by the Court in this behalf either in the order of attachment or in any subsequent order, the judgment debtor may tend, cut, gather and store the produce and do any other act necessary for maturing or preserving it, and if the judgment-debtor fails to do all or any of such acts, the decree holder may, with the permission of the Court and subject to the like conditions, do all or any of them either by himself or by any person appointed by him in this behalf, and the costs incurred by the decree-holder shall be recoverable from the judgment debtor as if they were included in, or formed part of, the decree

(3) Agricultural produce attached as a growing crop shall not be deemed to have ceased to be under attachment or to require re attachment merely because it has been severed from the soil

(4) Where an order for the attachment of a growing crop has been made at a considerable time before the crop is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered, the Court may suspend the execution of the order for such time as it thinks fit, and may, in its discretion, make a further order prohibiting the removal of the crop pending the execution of the order of attachment

(5) A growing crop which from its nature does not admit of being stored shall not be attached under this rule at any time less than twenty days before the time at which it is likely to be fit to be cut or gathered

Time at which the crop is likely to be cut or gathered —The decree holder should specify in the application for attachment the time at which the crop is likely to be cut or gathered. The object is to enable the Court to make necessary arrangements for the custody of the crop [sub r (1)]. If the application is presented within twenty days before the maturity of a crop not lending itself to storage it should be refused [sub r (5)]. See notes to r 44 above

The following are some of the more important rules relating to the attachment of debts —

1 It is not necessary for the purpose of attaching a debt that the exact amount of the debt should be stated, provided there is a debt actually due at the time of attachment. B delivers certain goods to his agent C for sale. The goods are sold by C and the sale proceeds are received by him. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B, A may attach the sale proceeds in the hands of C, though the exact amount due to B may not then have been ascertained (c).

2 The attachment of a debt does not prevent the judgment debtor from suing his debtor or from taking any other step necessary for the recovery thereof, but he is not entitled to receive payment thereof from his debtor unless the claim in respect of which the debt is attached is first satisfied. C owes a debt to B. The debt is attached in execution of a decree obtained by A against B. This does not preclude B from suing C to recover the debt, or from prosecuting the suit if a suit has already been instituted, but he cannot receive payment of the debt from C unless he first satisfies A's decree (d). See sub rule (1), cl. (i).

Attachment of mortgage debt.—A executes a mortgage of immovable property to B to secure payment of Rs. 5,000 lent to him by B. It is provided by the mortgage bond that if A fails to pay the mortgage debt on the due date, B should have the right to sue A personally for the debt, and also to realise the debt by the sale of the mortgaged property. In such a case B's interest in the mortgage bond comprises (1) the right to sue A personally for the mortgage debt and (2) the right to realise the debt by sale of the mortgaged property. If C obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5,000 and seeks in execution of the decree to attach the mortgage debt due to B, how is the attachment effected? Is the mortgage debt a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument within the meaning of this rule and attachable in the mode prescribed by this rule or being secured by a mortgage of immovable property is it immovable property within the meaning of r. 54 and attachable in the mode prescribed by that rule? The answer afforded by the decisions on the subject, eliminating what are merely obiter dicta (e), is that a mortgage debt is a debt within the meaning of this rule and it is therefore to be attached in the manner prescribed by this rule. Again if the mortgage debt due to B is attached under this rule in execution of C's decree, and sold in execution and purchased by P, what are the rights of P? The answer is that they are the same as those of B, the mortgagee. P may sue A for a personal decree against him. He may also sue him for a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property (f). It does not make any difference that the mortgage bond gives a right to the mortgagee to enter into possession and that he is in possession at the date of the attachment (g). The cases referred to above were all cases either of a simple mortgage or of a hypothecation bond. As regards usufructuary mortgages, it was held by the High Court of Bombay in a case where the bond provided that the mortgagee was to enjoy the profits in lieu of interest for ten years and that the mortgage was to be redeemed on the expiration of the term by payment of the mortgage debt, that there was no debt which the mortgagee was entitled to recover at the date of the attachment and that the interest of the mortgagee could only be attached in the mode

46. [S. 268.] (1) In the case of—

- (a) a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument,
- (b) a share in the capital of a corporation,
- (c) other movable property not in the possession of the judgment-debtor, except property deposited in, or in the custody of, any Court, the attachment shall be made by a written order prohibiting,—

- (i) in the case of the debt, the creditor from recovering the debt and the debtor from making payment thereof until the further order of the Court ;
- (ii) in the case of the share, the person in whose name the share may be standing from transferring the same or receiving any dividend thereon ;
- (iii) in the case of the other movable property except as aforesaid, the person in possession of the same from giving it over to the judgment-debtor.

(2) A copy of such order shall be fixed on some conspicuous part of the Court-house and another copy shall be sent in the case of the debt, to the debtor, in the case of the share, to the proper officer of the corporation, and, in the case of the other movable property (except as aforesaid), to the person in possession of the same.

(3) A debtor prohibited under clause (i) of sub-rule (1) may pay the amount of his debt into Court, and such payment shall discharge him as effectually as payment to the party entitled to receive the same

Attachment of debt.—A debt cannot be attached unless it is actually due from the garnishee (judgment debtor s debtor) to the judgment debtor. It may be either presently payable, or payable in the future by reason of a present obligation (2). As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the undermentioned case (a) an existing debt, though payable at a future day, may be attached. But only such debts can be attached as the judgment debtor could deal with properly and without violation of the rights of third persons (b). at Asansol. The Court may issue a prohibitory order restraining B from receiving and C from paying the debt, and it will not be necessary to transfer the execution proceeding to the Court of the place where C resides as in the case last cited which was a case of a simple contract debt (s)

Claims over which Courts in British India have no jurisdiction, e.g., a debt due to the judgment debtor from a non resident foreigner in respect of which no suit could be brought by the judgment-debtor in a British Indian Court, are not debts liable to be attached under this rule (t). The general rule as to the situs of a debt is the residence of the debtor. It has been suggested that this is subject to an exception which situates the debt at the place where it is properly payable. The Privy Council referred to this rule and exception and held that if the debtor and creditor are residents of Indore the debt cannot be attached by the High Court of Bombay in the absence of a contract expressly or impliedly providing for payment of the debt in Bombay (u). But where a judgment is recovered in the High Court of Bombay against a foreign corporation which submitted to jurisdiction, and a bank in Bombay owes the Corporation, a debt payable in Bombay, the High Court of Bombay has jurisdiction to attach the debt and direct the bank to pay the amount of the debt into Court (t).

Movable property not in possession of the judgment debtor.—If the judgment debtor has transferred his property to the possession of a third person the attachment must be made by a prohibitory order. The rule does not justify the sealing up of the third person's warehouse in which the goods are stored (u).

Shares.—A deed of transfer of shares in a company which does not comply with the formalities prescribed by the Indian Companies Act and the Articles of Association of the Company is invalid as against a subsequent purchaser of the shares in execution of a decree against the shareholder (x). See rr 79 and 80 below.

Life policy.—Where a life policy is payable on proof to the satisfaction of the directors of the death of the assured the policy amount cannot be said to be a debt, due by the company before such proof is given (y).

Sub rule (3) payment into Court.—A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree A attaches a debt due ostensibly from C to D, but alleged by A to be in reality due from C to B. In such a case, if the Court orders the amount of the debt to be paid into Court, it is incumbent upon the Court to provide by its order that the money when deposited should not be paid to the decree holder [A] until adjudication of the question as to who is entitled to the money, B or D (z).

Garnishee order.—Company in liquidation.—Where a judgment is recovered against a company which is in voluntary liquidation, the invariable practice of the Courts is to stay execution of the judgment unless there are very exceptional reasons for exercising its discretion otherwise. Thus if A obtains a decree against a limited company and the company thereafter goes into liquidation, and a debt is due by D to the company, the debt forms part of the general assets of the Company, and is divisible among the creditors pari passu and for this reason A is not entitled to a garnishee order against D (a).

47. [New] Where the property to be attached consists of the share or interest of the judgment-debtor in movable property belonging to him and another as co-owners, the attachment shall be made by a notice to the judgment-debtor prohibiting him from transferring the share or interest or charging it in any way

movables

Attachment of share in movables—This rule is new. It provides for the attachment of a share or interest in movable property belonging to the judgment debtor and others in co ownership. Such a share or interest is obviously incapable of actual seizure and provision has therefore been made for the issue to the judgment debtor of a notice prohibiting him from transferring his share or interest in any way. If the property is wrongly attached by seizure it must be released under rule 60 and the debtor holder may then proceed under this rule (b)

The procedure of this rule should be followed in the case of an attachment under s. 386 of the Criminal Procedure Code (c)

48. [New] (1) Where the property to be attached is the salary or allowances of a public officer or of a servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court, whether the judgment-debtor or the disbursing officer is or is not within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction, may order that the amount shall, subject to the provisions of section 60, be withheld from such salary or allowances either in one payment or by monthly instalments as the Court may direct, and, upon notice of the order to such officer as the Government may, by notification in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be, appoint in this behalf, the officer or other person whose duty it is to disburse such salary or allowances shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be

(3) Every order made under this rule, unless it is returned in accordance with the provisions of sub rule (2), shall, without further notice or other process, bind the Government or the railway company or local authority, as the case may be, while the judgment-debtor is within the local limits to which this Code for the time being extends and while he is beyond those limits if he is in receipt of any salary or allowances payable out of His Majesty's Indian revenues or the funds of a railway company carrying on business in any part of British India or local authority in British India, and the Government or the railway company or local authority, as the case may be, shall be liable for any sum paid in contravention of this rule

Attachment of salary of public officer, etc.—This rule is new. It provides a special procedure for the attachment of the salary of public officers railway servants and servants of local authorities. The rule follows upon the lines of section 151 sub section (3) of the Army Act (44 and 45 Vict., c 58) which it may be observed applied only to officers of the army. Under the Code of 1882 the salary of a public officer or railway servant could not be attached unless the disbursing officer was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree (d). This led to considerable inconvenience in the execution of decrees and put the decree holder in many cases to an enormous expense. The present rule substitutes a less expensive and at the same time more effective machinery for the execution of decrees against this class of judgment debtors. Under it the salary of a public officer or a railway servant of a local authority may be attached whether the judgment debtor or the disbursing officer is or is not within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree. A Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has the same power (e). As to how much of the salary of such persons may be attached see s 60 clis (h) and (i).

Sub rule (3) Liability of Government.—Sub r (3) provides that if an attachment order is not returned in accordance with the provisions of sub r (2) the Government shall be liable for such sum as should have been stopped out of the judgment debtor's pay. But no order can be made against the Government unless the Government is on the record (f).

(6) Service under sub-rule (4) or sub-rule (5) shall be deemed to be service on all the partners, and all orders made on such applications shall be similarly served

Attachment of partnership property—This rule is new. The first three sub-rules are a reproduction of the English Partnership Act 1890 [53 and 54 Vict., c. 30], s. 23. The last three rules correspond to O. 46, rr. 1A and 1B of the English Rules. As to suits by and against firms, see O. 30 below.

The object of this rule is to put an end to the practice of attaching in the ordinary way partnership assets under a judgment against a single partner (q). It therefore provides that no execution can issue against any partnership property except on a decree passed against the firm or against the partners in the firm as such (h) but a judgment creditor of a partner in a firm may apply for an order charging that partner's interest, and for a receiver. The share of a partner in a partnership business is liable to attachment under s. 60 (i). See notes to r. 50 under the head Where decree has been passed against a firm."

"Against the partners in the firm as such"—These words in sub-r (1) do not occur in s. 23 of the English Partnership Act. They have been added to show that the operation of this rule is not ousted by the mere circumstance that the decree is passed, not against the firm, but against the partners constituting it, where those partners have been sued as such

'Direct accounts'—It has been held in England under the Partnership Act, s 23 sub s 2 of which sub r (2) is a reproduction that the discretion given to direct accounts should only be exercised under special circumstances as for instance, with a view to a dissolution. The decision is based upon the words 'if a charge had been made in favour of the decree holder by such partner'. These words, it has been said should be read with s 31, sub s 1, of the English Partnership Act, which provides that an assignment by a partner of his share in the partnership either absolute or by way of charge, does not, as against the other partners entitle the assignee, during the continuance of the partnership, to require any accounts of the partnership transaction but entitles the assignee only to receive the share of the profits of the assigning partner and the assignee must accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners. Relying upon these provisions, Rigby L J, said 'I think it plain that the intention of the legislature was that under ordinary circumstances in dealing with a case under sub s 2 of s 23 [sub r (2) of this rule], the analogy of an assignment by a partner of his share should be adhered to' (j).

Charging order and insolvency—A charging order under this rule upon a judgment debtor's interest in a partnership is not an attachment within the meaning of section 9 of the Presidency towns Insolvency Act, 1909 (k). Moreover being a proceeding in invitum it is not a transaction protected by s 57 of the Presidency towns Insolvency Act (l).

50. [New R. S. C., O. 48A, r. 8.] (1)

Execution of decree against firm

Where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution may be granted—

- (a) against any property of the partnership,
- (b) against any person who has appeared in his own name under rule 6 or rule 7 of Order XXX or who has admitted on the pleadings that he is, or who has been adjudged to be, a partner,
- (c) against any person who has been individually served as a partner with a summons and has failed to appear

Provided that nothing in this sub-rule shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the provisions of section 247 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872

(2) Where the decree-holder claims to be entitled to cause the decree to be executed against any person other than such a person as is referred to in sub-rule (1), clauses (b) and (c), as being a partner in the firm, he may apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave, and where the liability is not disputed, such Court may grant such leave, or where such liability is disputed may order that the liability of such

(3) Where the liability of any person has been tried and determined under sub-rule (2), the order made thereon shall have the same force and be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise as if it were a decree.

(4) Save as against any property of the partnership, a decree against a firm shall not release, render liable or otherwise affect any partner therein unless he has been served with a summons to appear and answer.

Scope of the rule—This rule is new. It is a reproduction of O 484, r 8, of the English Rules. Execution under this rule can only be granted where a decree has been passed against a firm. A decree passed against a firm must perforce be in the firm's name. Under this rule execution may be granted against the partnership property. It may also be granted against the partners, in which case the decree holder may proceed against the separate property of the partners. It must not be supposed, however, that where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution will be granted as a matter of course against all the partners, in certain cases, special leave is necessary to issue execution against a partner. It is only when execution is applied for against a person referred to in sub r (1), cls (b) and (c), that it will be granted as of course. But where execution is sought against any other person alleged to be a partner, the decree holder must apply to the Court which passed the decree for leave to execute the decree against him. Thus if in a suit against a firm a person has been individually served as a partner with the writ of summons, but fails to appear at the hearing, and a decree is passed against the firm, the decree holder is entitled to execution against him as a matter of course, see cl (c) of sub r (1). But a decree holder is not entitled to execution as of course against a person who is sought to be made liable as a partner, but who was not served with the summons and who did not appear at the hearing. In such a case the decree holder must apply for leave to execute the decree against such person. If such person admits the liability, the Court may grant leave without further inquiry (m). But if he disputes the liability the Court may direct an issue to determine whether he was a partner or held himself out to be a partner in the defendant firm (n). These rules follow from the peculiar nature of a suit against a firm and from the special rules as to service of summons in such a suit. To understand the present rule, it is necessary to peruse rules 3, 6 and 7 of Order 30. The important point to note is that where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, it is not necessary that the summons should be served upon each one of them or indeed upon any one of them. It may be served upon any one or more of the partners, or at the principal place of the firm's business upon any person having the control or management of the business though he may not be a partner.

"Where a decree has been passed against a firm"—Execution under this rule can only be granted where a decree has been passed against a firm in the firm's name. A decree cannot be passed against a firm, unless the suit is against partners in the name of their firm. And, conversely, where a suit is against partners in the name of their firm, the decree must be against the firm in the firm's name. See O 30, r 6, and notes thereto.

"Against any person who has appeared."—See O 30, rr 3, 5, 6 and 7, and notes.

"Against any person who has been individually served."—See O 30, r 5, and notes.

Sub rule (2). Leave to issue execution.—Order 30 deals with suits by or against firms. Rule 1 provides that two or more persons being liable as co partners may be sued in the firm's name. It does not matter that the firm is dissolved at the date of the suit, so long as the claim in respect of which the suit is brought arose during the continuance of the partnership (o). But where a firm is dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the institution of the suit, the plaintiff is bound to serve the summons upon every person within British India whom it is sought to make liable as provided by O 30, r 3. No order can be made under sub rule (2) against a former partner who has, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, left the firm before the institution of the suit. The reason is that O 30, r 3 overrides sub r (2) of the present rule. Sub r (2) applies only where there has been no dissolution or none to the knowledge of the plaintiff. Where there has been a dissolution to the knowledge of the plaintiff, an outgoing partner cannot be made liable unless he has been served with the summons in accordance with the proviso to rule 3 of Order 30 (p).

O 21, r 50, is not controlled by O 30, r 2 (3). A suit is brought by a firm against A. On A's application the names of the partners of the firm are disclosed by the attorneys for the firm under O 30, r 2. A then files a counter claim against the firm. The firm's suit is dismissed, and a decree is passed against the firm on the counter claim. A takes out execution against A whose name was given by the firm's attorneys as one of the partners of the firm. A denies that he was a partner and says that he did not instruct the firm's attorneys to give his name as a partner. There is nothing in the provisions of O 30, r 2 (3) to preclude A from raising this contention and the question whether he is a partner or not should be decided in the manner provided by O 21, r 50 (2) (q).

The application under sub r (2) is ancillary to the application for execution and can be made so long as the application for execution is not barred by limitation under art 182 of the Limitation Act (r).

Execution against legal representatives.—If a partner has died the suit against the firm cannot include the legal representatives of the deceased partner, though they may be added as defendants and served with summons under O 30, r 3 if it is sought to make the separate estate of the deceased partner liable. Sub rule (2) which is subject to O 30, r 3 does not empower the Court to give leave to execute the decree against the legal representatives (s). If a decree against a firm makes a partner personally liable under sub-rule (1) (a) or (1) (b), it may be executed against his legal representatives after notice under r 22 (i).

Issue to determine liability.—A Bench of the Bombay High Court has held that the issue as to the liability of the persons not served is not limited to the question

O. 21, r. 50 as to whether they were partners but that such persons may raise a general issue as to liability. If the decree is an award decree they may plead that it is not binding on them as that particular partner had no power to refer the disputes to arbitration (u). On the other hand a single Judge of the same High Court had held that the issue is limited to the question of partnership and that the alleged partner who denies that he is a partner cannot plead in the alternative that the firm is not liable (v), for he cannot both deny the partnership and claim to defend the action on behalf of the firm (w).

Court which passed the decree—The leave required under sub rule (2) to execute the decree against a person other than a person named in sub rule (1) (b) or (1) (c) must be obtained from the Court which passed the decree. The Patna High Court holds that if the decree is transferred for execution to another Court the transferee Court is not empowered to grant such leave as that would be making a new decree (x). On the other hand the Allahabad High Court has held that the transferee Court may grant such leave (y).

Where decree transferred for execution—An ex parte order under sub rule (2) granting leave to execute the decree and transferring the decree for execution to another Court does not preclude the transferee Court from determining the question whether the decree transferred was a nullity (z).

Sub rule (3)—An ex parte order made under sub rule (2) above is not within sub rule (3). Sub rule 3 contemplates an order where the liability has been tried and determined (a). As a proceeding under this rule is subject to the same conditions as to appeal as a decree an appeal from an order under the sub rule should be stamped ad valorem as a regular appeal (b). But the proceeding is a subsidiary proceeding and not a suit so that a new trial cannot be ordered under s. 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (c). On the other hand for the purpose of a reference under s. 8 of the Indian Civil and Criminal Justice Act, Bom. Act 2 of 1864 such a proceeding has been held to be a suit (d).

Sub rule (4)—This sub rule relates to persons other than those referred to in sub r (1) cls (b) and (c). The summons to appear and answer in sub r (4) does not mean the writ of summons. It means a summons or a notice to appear and answer the application specified in sub r (2). The object of sub r (4) is to give an opportunity to a person against whom the decree holder seeks to execute the decree other than such a person as is referred to in sub r (1) cls (b) and (c) of disputing his liability as a partner if he desires to do so (e).

Minor partner—The proviso to sub r (1) declares that nothing in that sub rule should be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the provisions of s. 247 of the Contract Act. The combined effect of that section and the present rule is that where decree has been passed against a firm containing a minor who is admitted to the benefits of a partnership execution may be granted against the property of the firm including the share of such minor in the property of the firm but it cannot be granted against the separate property of the minor. Having regard to the definition of a firm in

see 239 of the Contract Act, and to a minor's inability to contract, "the share of such minor in the property of the firm" mentioned in s. 247, is merely his right to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations have been discharged (f)

Award.—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta (g), Bombay (h) and Allahabad (i), that an award against a firm under s. 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, stands on the same footing as a decree, and that the provisions of this rule apply to such an award. In the case of an award "the Court which passed the decree" referred to in sub r. (2) is the Court in which the award is filed (j). Under the rules of the Bombay High Court the application must be made by an originating summons (k).

Insolvency of firm.—Where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution may be taken out against any partner who was served with the summons. The insolvency of the firm is no bar to execution against individual partners (l).

51. [S. 270.] Where the property is a negotiable instrument not deposited in a Court, nor in the custody of a public officer, the attachment shall be made by actual seizure, and the instrument shall be brought into Court and held subject to further orders of the Court.

Attachment of negotiable instruments

The proper method of attaching a promissory note in the hands of an individual is by its actual seizure, and not by the issue of a prohibitory order, for if it is not seized the promisee may negotiate it and mere notice will not avail against a holder in due course (m). But notice of the order of attachment to the debtor or promisor is sufficient protection against his paying the amount due to the promisee or anyone else (n).

52. [S. 272.] Where the property to be attached is in the custody of any Court or public officer, the attachment shall be made by a notice to such Court or Officer, requesting that such property, and any interest or dividend becoming payable thereon, may be held subject to the further orders of the Court from which the notice is issued.

Attachment of property in custody of Court or public officer

Provided that, where such property is in the custody of a Court, any question of title or priority arising between the decree-holder and any other person, not being the judgment-debtor, claiming to be interested in such property by virtue of any assignment, attachment or otherwise, shall be determined by such Court.

Attachment of dividends in the hands of Official Assignee—The Official Assignee is a public officer within the meaning of this rule, and moneys in his hand payable by way of dividend to a creditor of an insolvent may be attached in execution of a decree against the creditor in the manner provided by this rule (a)

Attachment of property in the hands of a receiver—A receiver is an officer of the Court. No attachment therefore of money in the hands of a receiver can be made without leave of the Court (p), but the leave must be applied for in the suit in which the receiver was appointed (q)

Charging order.—When the assets of a firm are in the hands of a receiver appointed in a partnership suit, a decree holder seeking execution against the firm may apply for a charging order. The Bombay High Court had held that he should file an application for execution under rule 11 and then obtain an attachment under this rule by notice to the receiver. He should then apply, not in his own suit but in the partnership suit, for payment or for leave to levy execution under rule 50 and for a charging order. If there are ample assets the Judge in the partnership suit may direct the receiver to make immediate payment. But if the assets require nursing, then in order on the one hand to gain time and on the other to protect the decree holder, the Judge will make a charging order (r). The effect of the charging order is to constitute the decree holder a secured creditor and to give him a priority over other creditors although he undertakes to deal with the charge subject to the further orders of the Court (s). The Court dissented from a judgment of Macleod, J., which held that the procedure was to apply for a charging order and not to apply for execution against the assets in the hands of the receiver (t). The Court also dissented from the view expressed in other Bombay cases that assets held by the receiver must necessarily be distributed equally (u).

A charging order may also be made when a decree holder seeks to attach movable property of which a receiver has been appointed. See notes "Attachment of movable property in the hands of a receiver" under r. 54.

Anticipatory attachment—This rule does not permit an anticipatory attachment of money expected to reach the hands of a public officer, but applies only to money actually in his hands. An attachment made before the money has reached the hands of the officer is invalid (v).

Priority—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether if a fund in Court is attached by several decree holders, they are entitled to share ratably or whether they are to be paid in the order of their attachments. As to partnership assets in the hands of a receiver, the High Court of Bombay held in one case that, no one judgment creditor of a firm is entitled to priority over others by attaching the partnership assets, and that they should be distributed pro rata among all the judgment creditors (w). On the other hand, it was held in a recent case that the judgment creditor who first took out execution against the assets was entitled to have his decree satisfied to the full in priority over other non attaching creditors (x) It is submitted with great respect that the latter decision is incorrect Where a receiver is appointed in an administration suit, and a creditor of the deceased obtains a decree against the legal representative of the deceased after such appointment, he is not entitled to execute the decree against the estate of the deceased (y)

The following propositions have been laid down by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Visvanadhan v Arunachalam (2), overruling Katum v Haji Mahomed (a), an earlier decision of the same High Court

(1) Where the property attached is in the custody of a Court it is the duty of such Court to hold it at the disposal of the attaching Court, and it is the duty of the attaching Court, if the property attached is money, to call upon the custody Court to pay it into the attaching Court and in other cases, to provide for the realisation of the property, and to divide the money or proceeds rateably between the attaching decree holder and the other decree holders who are entitled to distribution under sec 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure, viz, those who have applied to it for execution before the receipt of such assets

(2) Where the property in the custody Court is the subject of several attachments in execution of several decrees the custody Court must award priority to the first in point of time If the other decree holders want to share in the rateable distribution they must apply in time to the first attaching Court The power conferred on the custody Court by the proviso to O 21, r 52, to determine claims to priority, etc, does not entitle the custody Court itself to distribute the assets rateably among the attaching decree holders

(3) When the attaching Court and the custody Court are the same, there is a receipt of assets within the meaning of sec 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure, only when so much of the money standing to the credit of the judgment debtor as is necessary to satisfy the decree holders who have applied to it for execution, is ordered to be transferred to the credit of the first attaching creditor's suit

The Calcutta High Court (b) has followed Katum v Haji Mahomed, but this was before the Full Bench case, and the case was one in which the custody Court was also the attaching Court The Calcutta High Court has also held that the custody Court has no authority to make rateable distribution (c)

(i) the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed cancels the notice or

(ii) the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment debtor applies to the Court receiving such notice to execute his own decree

(2) Where a Court makes an order under clause (a) sub rule (1) or receives an application under sub head (ii) clause (b) of the said sub rule it shall on the application of the creditor who has attached the decree or his judgment-debtor proceed to execute the attached decree and apply the proceeds in satisfaction of the decree sought to be executed

(3) The holder of a decree sought to be executed by attachment of another decree of the nature specified in sub rule (1) shall be deemed to be the representative of the holder of the attached decree and to be entitled to execute the attached decree in any manner lawful for the holder of the same

(4) Where the property to be attached in the execution of a decree is a decree other than a decree of the nature referred to in sub rule (1) the attachment shall be made by a notice by the Court which passed the decree sought to be executed to the holder of the decree sought to be attached prohibiting him from transferring or charging the same in any way and where such decree has been passed by any other Court and by sending to such other Court a notice to abstain from executing the decree sought to be attached until such notice is cancelled by the Court from which it was issued

(5) The holder of a decree attached under this rule shall give the Court executing the decree such information and do as may reasonably be required

(6) On the application of the holder of a decree sought to be executed by the attachment of another decree the Court making an order of attachment under this rule shall give notice of such order to the judgment debtor bound by the decree attached; and no payment or adjustment of the attached O. 2 decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of such order after receipt of notice thereof, either through the Court or otherwise, shall be recognized by any Court so long as the attachment remains in force

Alterations in the rule—This rule corresponds with sec 273 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

- 1 The words ' or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge ' in sub r (1) are new See notes below, " Attachment and realization of decrees "
- 2 The words ' or his judgment debtor ' in sub r (1) cl (b) sub head (u) are new These words give effect to the opinion expressed by Maclean, C J in the undermentioned case (d)
- 3 Sub rules (3) and (6) are also new See notes below under these sub rules

Attachment and realization of decrees—For the purpose of this rule decrees have been divided into two classes, namely —

- (1) decrees for the payment of money or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge, and
- (2) other decrees

First, as to attachment of decrees—Decrees of the first class are attached in the manner prescribed by sub r (1). Decrees of the second class are attached in the manner prescribed by sub r (4).

Next as to realization of attached decrees—Decrees of the first class are realized in the manner prescribed by sub r (2). There is no provision in this rule for the realization of decree of the 2nd class e.g. a decree for partition (e) or for foreclosure of a mortgage (f). These decrees are realized by a sale of the decree itself. But decrees of the first class that is money decrees (g) and mortgage-decrees are not realized by sale (h). They can only be realized in the manner prescribed by sub r (2). The reason of this distinction is as follows:—

"Decrees are not expressly mentioned in sec 60 as property liable to attachment and sale. Hence they are attachable and saleable as comprised in the expression "all other saleable property" which occurs in that section. Being liable to attachment as saleable property they can be sold in execution of another decree. But money decrees and mortgage decrees must not be sold because the present rule prescribes special procedure for the realization of such decrees [sub r (2)]. But for this provision, money decrees and mortgage decrees would have to be realized by sale like other decrees. The special procedure prescribed by sub-r (2) is an exception to the general rule that property when attached can only be realized by sale.

Under the old section decrees were divided into two classes namely —

- (1) decrees for the payment of money and
- (2) other decrees

O. 21, r. 53 • There was no specific provision for decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage. Hence the question arose whether such decrees belonged to the first class or the second class. The decisions on the subject were conflicting (1). To remove this doubt, the words "or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge" have been inserted in sub r (1). These words make it clear that mortgage decrees should be attached and realized in the same manner as money decrees [see sub rr (3) and (2)].

Decrees for dissolution of partnership—A decree for the dissolution of a firm and for the taking of accounts, where a receiver has been appointed by the decree for the sale of the assets of the firm and for the payment of the partnership debts is a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this rule, though part of the partner ship assets consists of immovable properties (3).

Decrees other than money decrees and mortgage decrees—D1 holds a decree against J for partition of certain property passed in Court X. D2 obtains a decree against D1 for Rs 6,000 in Court Y. If D1 fails to satisfy the decree obtained against him by D2, D2 may apply to Court Y to execute his decree by attachment and sale of the decree held by D1 against J. The decree held by D1, being neither a money-decree nor a mortgage-decree, the only mode of realizing it in execution of D2's decree is by attachment and sale (1).

Money decrees and mortgage decrees.—Where the decree attached is a money decree or a mortgage decree, it can only be realized by execution, it cannot be sold in execution. For this purpose, two applications must be made, one for attachment of the decree, and the other for its execution. The application for attachment must be made by the holder of the decree sought to be executed to the Court which passed it. But the application for execution of the attached decree must be made to the Court which passed the decree attached, and it may be made either by the holder of the decree sought to be executed or by the holder of the decree attached, as in the following illustrations.

(a) Where the decree sought to be executed and the decree sought to be attached are passed by the same Court—D1 holds a decree against J for Rs 5,000 passed by Court X. This is a money decree. D2 obtains a decree against D1 also in Court X for Rs 1,000. If D2 seeks to attach D1's decree in execution of his decree, he should apply to Court X for attachment, and either he or D1 may then apply to that Court for execution of the decree held by D1 against J. D2 can apply for execution, for he is deemed to be the representative of D1 [see sub r (3)].

(b) Where the decree sought to be executed and the decree sought to be attached are passed by different Courts—D1 sues J on a mortgage, and obtains a decree for sale of the mortgaged property under O 34, r 5 in Court X. This is a mortgage decree. D2 obtains a decree against D1 for Rs 6,000 in Court Y, and in execution of his decree applies to Court Y for attachment of the mortgage decree held by D1 against J. The attachment is to be made by the issue to Court X of a notice by Court Y requesting Court X to stay execution of D1's decree against J unless and until—

- (i) the notice is cancelled by Court Y, or
- (ii) an application is made to Court X by D2 or D1 to execute the decree held by D1 against J.

If an application is made by D2 or D1 to Court X to execute the decree held by D1 against J, Court X will proceed to execute the decree and the nett proceeds that may be realized in execution will be applied in satisfaction of D2's decree.

(1) See Delhi and London Bank Ltd v Parthab Singh (1903) 28 All 771 (mortgage-decree held not to be a money-decree). Vaidhi nallazamy v Somasundaram (1905) 23 Mad 473 (mortgage-decree held to be

(1) Sudarsan v Manindra (1931) 55 Cal 934

If in the case put above, Court X does not stay execution of D1's decree on receiving the notice from Court Y, and proceeds with the execution in spite of the notice, the proceedings will be deemed to be ultra vires, and a sale held in execution of that decree will be set aside as void (1)

Sub rule (1) - Stay—The stay under sub r (1) (b) is only a limited stay and does not prevent either the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment debtor from seeking to execute the original decree (m)

O. 21, r. 53

• There was no specific provision for decrees for sale in enforcement of a mortgage. Hence the question arose whether such decrees belonged to the first class or the second class. The decisions on the subject were conflicting (i). To remove this doubt the words 'or for sale in enforcement of a mortgage or charge' have been inserted in sub r (1). These words make it clear that mortgage-decrees should be attached and realized in the same manner as money decrees [see sub rr (1) and (2)].

Decrees for dissolution of partnership—A decree for the dissolution of a firm and for the taking of accounts, where a receiver has been appointed by the decree for the sale of the assets of the firm and for the payment of the partnership debts is a decree for the payment of money ' within the meaning of this rule, though part of the partnership assets consists of immovable properties (j).

Decrees other than money decrees and mortgage decrees—D1 holds a decree against J for partition of certain property passed in Court X. D2 obtains a decree against D1 for Rs 6 000 in Court Y. decree held by D1 against J. D2 can apply for execution for he is deemed to be representative of D1 [see sub r (3)].

(b) Where the decree sought to be executed and the decree sought to be attached are passed by different Courts—D1 sues J on a mortgage, and obtains a decree for sale of the mortgaged property under O 34 r 5 in Court X. This is a mortgage decree. D2 obtains a decree against D1 for Rs 6 000 in Court Y. D2 may apply to Court Y for attachment of the mortgage decree held by D1 against J. The application for execution of the attached decree is to be made by the issue to Court X of an application for execution of D1's decree against J unless and until—

- (i) the notice is cancelled by Court X, or
- (ii) an application is made to Court X by D2 or D1 to execute the decree held by D1 against J.

If in the case put above, Court X does not stay execution of D1's decree on receiving the notice from Court Y, and proceeds with the execution in spite of the notice, the proceedings will be deemed to be ultra vires, and a sale held in execution of that decree will be set aside as void (l)

Sub rule (1) Stay—The stay under sub r (1) (b) is only a limited stay and does not prevent either the holder of the decree sought to be executed or his judgment debtor from seeking to execute the original decree (m)

Sub rule (3) Representative—This sub rule is new It gives effect to the undermentioned decisions (n) under the Code of 1882 It declares in effect that one who attaches a decree is a representative of the decree holder within the meaning of s 47 Thus in the cases put above D2 is the representative of D1.

A holds a money decree against B, and B holds a money decree against C A in execution of his decree against B, attaches the decree of B against C Before the attachment C had paid the amount of his decree to B, but the adjustment was not recorded or certified Under O 21, r 2, the payment cannot be recognised and A is entitled to execute the attached decree (n1)

A holds a money-decree against B B holds a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage against C A attaches in execution of his own decree the decree held by B against C C brings into Court from time to time sums of money for satisfaction of the decree held against him by B Since A is the "representative" of B, the payments made by C, become forthwith available to A, and operate from their respective dates as partial satisfaction also of the decree held by A against B Hence interest on the decree held by A runs only up to the dates of the deposit, and not up to the date when A withdraws the moneys from Court (o)

As the attaching decree holder is the representative of the holder of the attached decree, it has been held that if the latter decree is reversed on appeal restitution may be claimed against the attaching decree holder if he has realized the attached decree (p)

Sub rule (3) does not apply if the attachment is not of the decree but merely of money paid into Court under r 89 in order to set aside a sale in execution of a decree (q)

Sub rule (6) Adjustment of attached decree—This sub rule is new The latter part of the rule gives effect to a Bombay decision that where a decree is attached, no adjustment of the decree subsequent to the attachment can be recognized by the Court (r) see O 2, r 2 A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that though the attachment is effected by notice to the Court under sub r (1) yet a payment or adjustment made by the judgment-debtor in ignorance of the attachment and before he has received notice of the order of attachment under sub r (6) is valid This sub rule merely provides, in cases of bona fide transactions by judgment debtors, an exception to the general rule laid down in s 64 above (s) In the case of an order of attachment communicated to the Court which passed the decree by a notice signed by

"Decree."—A decree, whereby B was compelled to deliver up possession of certain lands to C, is reversed in appeal, and B is declared to be entitled to recover back possession from C with mesne profits. A obtains a decree against B, and applies in execution of his decree to attach B's right to recover mesne profits from C. The right is not attachable, for it is not a decree. "The language [of this rule] seems to apply only to cases where the right attached is a right expressly settled by the decree, and not a right arising from the decree by way of restitution" (u)

54. [S. 274.] (1) Where the property is immovable, the attachment shall be made by an order prohibiting the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way, and all persons from taking any benefit from such transfer or charge.

(2) The order shall be proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to such property by beat of drum or other customary mode, and a copy of the order shall be affixed on a conspicuous part of the property and then upon a conspicuous part of the Court-house, and also, where the property is land paying revenue to the Government, in the office of the Collector of the district in which the land is situate.

Attachment shall be made.—The attachment is not effective to invalidate a subsequent transfer unless an order of attachment is first made and the other things prescribed by the rule have been done (1) See notes to s. 64 "Where an attachment has been made"

Immovable property.—The equity of redemption of a mortgagor is "immovable property within the meaning of this rule (1c) The life interest taken by a Parsi widow under her husband's will in the income of his immovable property is not movable but immovable property, and is attachable under this rule (2)

Previous contract of sale.—A contract of sale does not create any charge which will prevail over the attachment. If A agrees to sell immovable property to B, and before the conveyance is executed a creditor C attaches the property, the subsequent sale by A to B will be subject to the claim of C enforceable under the attachment (3) In some cases, however, it has been held that the contractual obligation prevails over the attachment (2)

Proof of service of prohibitory order.—Where it is found as a fact that a prohibitory order was duly served on all the judgment debtors, the destruction of part of the record which afforded proof of the service of notice does not render the execution-sale invalid (a)

Mortgage debt—The sale of a mortgage debt in execution of a decree carries with it the security and an attachment of the property under this rule is not necessary, see notes to r 46, 'Attachment of mortgage debt'

Court house—A copy must be affixed to a conspicuous part of the Court house in every case and in the office of the Collector when the land attached is land paying revenue to Government (b)

Attachment of immovable property in the hands of a receiver—If a receiver has been appointed of the immovable property sought to be attached, application must be made to the Court that appointed the receiver for leave to ignore the receivership altogether, so far as that property is concerned. If the Court gives leave the property is attached by the procedure prescribed by this rule exactly as if no receiver had been appointed. The Court instead of giving leave may make a charging order (c). See notes to r 52 above, 'charging order'

Omission to beat drum—Such an omission is a 'material irregularity' within the meaning of r 90 of this Order (d)

Land paying revenue to Government—Shrotriyam villages in the Madras Presidency are lands paying "revenue" to Government within the meaning of this rule (e)

Proclamation of sale—See r 64 below and notes thereto. See also notes to s 64, "Where an attachment has been made"

Removal of attachment after satisfaction of decree 55. [S. 275.] Where—

- (a) the amount decreed with costs and all charges and expenses resulting from the attachment of any property are paid into Court, or
- (b) satisfaction of the decree is otherwise made through the Court or certified to the Court, or
- (c) the decree is set aside or reversed, the attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn, and, in the case of immovable property, the withdrawal shall, if the judgment-debtor so desires, be proclaimed at his expense, and a copy of the proclamation shall be affixed in the manner prescribed by the last preceding rule

Alterations in the rule —

- 1 The words 'or certified to the Court' in cl (b) are new. The effect of these words is to place satisfaction certified under r 2 of this Order on the same footing as satisfaction made through the Court
- 2 The latter part of the rule commencing with the words 'the attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn' etc., is new. Under the old section an express order was necessary for the withdrawal of the attachment. No such order is necessary under the present rule. The attachment is to be deemed to be withdrawn on the happening of any of the events specified in cl^s (a), (b) and (c).

Relation of this rule to s 73—See notes to s 73, "Assets not available for rateable distribution."

* The attachment shall be deemed to be withdrawn.—A's property is attached in execution of a decree obtained against him by B. C, another judgment creditor of A, applies for execution of his decree, but no attachment is issued upon his application. On the date fixed for the sale A pays into Court the amount payable under B's decree. The next day C applies for sale of the property. C is not entitled to have the property sold because the effect of the payment into Court was the withdrawal of the attachment under this rule, and there being no attachment under C's decree no sale can be ordered in execution of his decree (f).

56. [S. 27.] Where the property attached is current coin or currency notes, the Court may, at any time during the continuance of the attachment, direct that such coin or notes, or a part thereof sufficient to satisfy the decree, be paid over to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same.

Order for payment of coin or currency notes to party entitled under decree

57. [New] Where any property has been attached in execution of a decree but by reason of the decree holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a future date. Upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease.

Determination of attachment

Object of the rule.—The object of the rule is to put a stop to the practice of making orders striking off proceedings or removing proceedings from the file a form of order for which there was no justification under any of the earlier Codes (g) and which made it doubtful whether the attachment ceased or it still continued. This subject has already been discussed in the notes to s 64 under the head "Effect of striking off execution proceedings or of removing them from the file."

By reason of the decree holder's default.—The provisions of this rule that the attachment should cease upon the dismissal of the application for execution do not apply unless the dismissal was on the ground of "default" on the part of the decree holder (h). The word "default" is not confined to default in appearance or in payment of process fees or in production of documents but includes failure to do what a decree holder is bound to do that is to proceed with his application for execution. Failure, therefore, to give notice to the judgment debtor prior to the drawing up of the proclamation as required by r 66 of this Order, is default within the meaning of this rule (i) Where a sale in execution of a decree is set aside for any reason other than this default on the part of the decree holder, the antecedent attachment is revived so as to support a second application for execution of the decree by sale of the same property and no fresh attachment is necessary (j)

Upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease—These words are imperative A Court therefore has no power while dismissing an application for default on the part of the decree holder to direct by its order that the attachment shall continue Thus where an executing Court made an order that “the execution case is accordingly dismissed, the properties will remain under attachment,” it was held that the order being one dismissing the application for execution, the attachment ceased by virtue of the provisions of this rule notwithstanding the direction that the attachment should continue (k) In an Allahabad case, the order ran in these terms “The execution case should for the time being be dismissed but the attachment shall remain in force” The Court held that it was in effect an order adjourning the proceedings and was therefore valid (l) In a later Allahabad case the executing Court struck off the file an application of its own motion and without any default on the part of the decree holder. It was held that there was no dismissal of the application within the meaning of this rule and that the attachment had not ceased (m) These questions derive importance from the fact that an alienation of property after the attachment has ceased is not within the prohibition contained in s 64.

Attachment before judgment—A Full Bench of the High Court of Madras has held that the words “property attached in execution of a decree” apply to property attached before judgment So when an execution application for the sale of property attached before judgment was dismissed for default, the attachment though it was made before judgment, ceases (n) A sues B and obtains an order for attachment before judgment A then obtains a decree in the suit against B Thereafter A applies for execution of the decree, but the application is dismissed for default of prosecution The dismissal of the application puts an end to the attachment before judgment This is directly opposed to the decisions of the High Courts of Allahabad (o) and Calcutta (p), where it was held that the words “attached in execution of a decree” do not include an attachment before judgment The High Court of Bombay has followed the Madras decision (q)

Rules 58 to 63—The e rules deal with investigation of claims preferred to property attached in execution of a decree and of objections to the attachment of such property.

Scope of the rule—Objections to attachment raised by a party to the suit in which the decree under execution was passed or his representative fall within the scope of s. 47. Objections to attachment raised by a third party come under the present rule. This distinction is important in two ways—

I Where an objection to attachment is made by a party to the suit or his representative the objector should proceed by an application under s 47 a separate suit for the purpose is barred But where an objection to attachment is made by a third party the objector may either proceed by an application under this rule or he may bring a regular suit to establish his objection failure to proceed by an application under this rule is no bar to a separate suit The object of this rule is to give a claimant a speedy and summary remedy but the rule does not deprive him of his remedy by suit The summary remedy given by this rule is alternative to the remedy by way of suit (r) See notes to s 47 Objections to attachment or sale by third parties and notes to r 63 below Payment by claimant under protest

The following illustration shows the operation of r 59(3). In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property alleged to belong to B is attached. If the property attached is claimed by C, C may bring a regular suit for a declaration that the property attached belongs to him and for removal of the attachment. Or if he desires to avail himself of the speedy remedy provided by this rule, he may present an application existence (r 66), and if it was satisfied that no debt existed, it should abstain from proceeding to sell the debt (d) But this view has since been dissented from, and it has been held that the words "possessed of" in rr 60 and 61 are not restricted to objects capable of physical possession, but apply also to objects capable of constructive possession, such as a debt Moreover, the word "property" in the present rule is wide enough to include a debt As to a garnishee's right to set-off, see notes to r 46 above

S 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, excludes rule 58—Section 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act bars claims under rule 58 in all cases If a tenure is attached in execution of a rent decree it is not open to a third party to make a claim under this rule that the tenure belongs not to the judgment debtor but to him (e)

Appeal—No appeal lies under the Code from an order made in a claim case where the claimant is not the representative of the judgment debtor (f) [see notes to s 47 "Objections to attachment or sale by parties or their representatives," and "Objections to attachment by third parties"] A landlord in execution of a decree in a rent suit attached the surplus sale proceeds of the sale of the tenure in execution of his decree in a previous rent suit A claim was then preferred by a mortgagee of the tenure The Court held that as the mortgagee was not a representative of judgment debtor no appeal lay from the order allowing his claim (g) It has been held by the High Court of Madras, that an appeal lies from such an order under cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and that where such an appeal is preferred the period of limitation for the suit contemplated by r 63 below is to be calculated from the date of the order made on appeal (h) The High Court of Rangoon has held that there is no appeal from an order under this rule under the Letters Patent (i) The Calcutta High Court has held that whether the order is a judgment or not r 63 prevents an appeal under the Letters Patent (j)

59. [S. 279.] The claimant or objector must adduce evidence to show that at the date of the attachment he had some interest in, or was possessed of, the property attached.

Evidence to be adduced
by claimant

"Some interest"—These words mean "such interest as would make the possession of the judgment debtor possession not on his own account, but on account of or in trust for the claimant (k)

"Or was possessed of"—These words mean "was possessed of for himself, and not as trustee for the judgment debtor" See the next rule and the notes thereto

Limits of inquiry under rules 59 to 61—In Sardhani Lal v Ambika Pershad (l), their Lordships of the Privy Council said "the Code does not prescribe the extent to which the investigation should go, and though in some cases it may be very proper that there should be as full an investigation as if a suit were instituted for the very purpose of trying the question in other cases it may also be the most prudent and proper course to deliver an opinion on such facts as are before the Court at the time, leaving the aggrieved party to bring the suit which the law allows to him" [see r 63] Rules 59 to 62 provide for a summary investigation into possession as distinct from a thorough trial of ultimate right. It is impossible to separate altogether the question of possession and of title. Thus if the judgment debtor was in possession, he may have been in possession as agent or trustee for another (rr 60 61) and this has to be inquired into. To that extent the title may be part of the inquiry in a claim case, but no ultimate questions of trust are intended to be thrashed out (m). In execution of a decree obtained by A against B three pieces of Government securities are attached. The securities stand in the name of C. C applies for removal of the attachment under r 58, alleging that the securities belong to him and they are held by him on his own account. A alleges that the securities are held by C benami for B. It is not open to the Court under these circumstances to inquire whether C, in whose name the securities stand is merely a benamidar for B. The property must therefore be released from attachment (n), and the question whether C is merely a benamidar is a question of title, which should be the subject of a suit under r 63. Similarly if the property attached is claimed by a person as a Mutawali under a deed of wakf, and it is proved that he has been in possession as Mutawali for upwards of 20 years, the property must be released from attachment. The Court has no power under these rules to decide whether the deed of wakf is valid (o). The words "possession of the judgment debtor or of some person in trust for him" in rr 60 and 61 refer to cases in which the possession of a claimant as a trustee is of such a character as to be really the possession of the judgment debtor, and not to cases in which very intricate questions of law may arise as to whether or not valid trusts may result in particular instances (p). If, instead of determining the question of possession, the Court determines the question of title, and disposes of the application on the question of title, the order is open to revision under sec 115 of the Code (q). Similarly where a Court ought to inquire into the question whether the possession of the judgment debtor was on his own account or on account of some other person but it refuses to do so the order is open to revision. The word conclusive in r 63 means non appealable, it does not mean not capable of revision (r). When the Court omitted to notice that the sale deed under which the claimant professed to be in possession was invalid for want of registration the order allowing the claim was reversed in revision (s).

Partition after attachment—If an undivided share of a coparcener in the whole property is attached and that share is converted by partition into a defined portion held in severalty, the attachment operates on that portion only and the other coparceners are entitled to have their shares released from attachment (t).

Limits of inquiry under rules 59-61.—See notes to r 59 above under the same head

Property in possession of some person not in trust for judgment debtor—A obtained a decree against B as the heir and legal representative of his deceased father, and in execution of the decree attached certain money in the hands of C due to the estate of the deceased. Prior to the date of the decree an order had been made by the High Court under secs 17 and 18 of the Administrator General's Act 2 of 1874 [now Act 3 of 1913, ss 10 and 11], authorising the Administrator General to collect the assets of the deceased. It was held on the application of the Administrator General that the attachment should be removed. As the order under the Administrator General's Act authorised the Administrator General to realise the debt from C as part of the assets of the deceased, the amount in the hands of C could not be said to be property in the possession of a third person in trust for the judgment-debtor B (u). See notes to r 62 below

Property in possession of a judgment debtor not on his own account but on account of or in trust for some other persons—Such property, if attached should be released from attachment under this rule. A consigned goods by railway to B, and B had made specific advances against them, and the goods on arrival at the railway station were attached in execution of a decree against A, it was held that the goods though in the hands of the Railway Company were in the possession of A, but 'on account of or in trust for' B, and should therefore be released from attachment on B's application (v).

Partly on his own account—If the judgment debtor is only entitled to a share in the property attached, and it is attached by seizure under r 43 it must be released under this rule and the decree holder may then proceed under r 47 (u).

Effect of order of release—An order made under this rule releasing the property attached from attachment is only provisional and liable to be set aside by a regular suit (r 63). "It is not conclusive, a suit may be brought to claim the property, notwithstanding the order" (x). It has not the effect therefore of putting an end to an attachment duly made, so as to leave the claimant free to deal with the property as he likes. In the case of movable property in the possession of the judgment debtor which is attached by seizure under r 43 the release from seizure determines the attachment and a fresh seizure is necessary (y). But in the case of immovable property if a suit is brought by the decree holder to establish his right to attach the property and the decree is in his favour, it has the effect of setting aside the order of release and of maintaining the attachment originally made. The result is that any private transfer of the property by the claimant, though made after an order under this rule releasing the property from attachment, will be void under sec 64, if the right to attach is subsequently established by suit

D. 21, r. 62

62. [S. 282.] Where the Court is satisfied that the property is subject to a mortgage or charge in favour of some person not in possession, and thinks fit to continue the attachment, it may do so, subject to such mortgage or charge.

Continuance of attachment subject to claim of encumbrancer

Scope of the rule.—This rule is an enabling rule, empowering the Court to make an order continuing the attachment subject to a mortgage if the Court is satisfied that the property attached is subject to a mortgage in favour of some person not in possession. If the mortgage is proved the Court should make an order continuing the attachment subject to the mortgage. It should not direct the property to be sold with notice of the mortgage. Such an order can be made under rule 66 but is outside the scope of this rule (f). In a Rangoon case (g) the Court, however, took quite the opposite view. It held that there was a connection between rules 62 and 66 and that unless a mortgage was proved under rule 62 it should not be notified under rule 66 and that an incumbrance which was merely alleged to exist should not be notified. The Lahore High Court, however, has said that the object of notifying an incumbrance is to warn the purchaser that he is buying the property subject to the claim which may be put forward against the property, but it does not mean that the incumbrance, charge or any other claim has been established (h). See also rule 66 (e). The decisions are conflicting as to whether an order which refuses to recognize a mortgage or a charge and directs the continuance of an attachment free from such mortgage or charge is to be referred to rule 66 or to this rule. The Bombay High Court and an old Allahabad case refer it to rule 66 (i). But the Madras High Court and a recent Allahabad case decide that rule 53 applies (j). The latter view cuts down the mortgagee's time for suing to one year, see s. 63. But the Lahore High Court which also applies s. 53 has observed that a person who chooses to take advantage of a summary procedure must suffer its disadvantages as well as enjoy its benefits (k).

"Subject to a mortgage"—The Code clearly makes a distinction between the case in which property is expressly sold subject to a mortgage and the case in which notice of an alleged mortgage is given in the proclamation of sale. The former is provided for by the present rule and the latter by r 66 below. In the former case the Court, after being satisfied of the existence of the mortgage sells only the judgment-debtor's equity of redemption, that is to say, the purchaser buys the property subject to the mortgage. In the latter case he buys the property with notice of the mortgage and subject to such risk as the notice might involve, the executing Court does not decide whether the mortgage subsists or not. Such being the case, if there is in reality a subsisting mortgage, then the purchaser has to redeem it. If, on the other hand, the mortgage specified in the proclamation of sale turns out invalid, the purchaser acquires the property free from liability for the mortgage. The point to be noted is that mere notice of an alleged mortgage in the proclamation of sale does not preclude the purchaser from questioning the validity of the mortgage (1). So when the plaintiff purchased a house at a Court sale and a right of residence of two ladies was notified, he was not estopped from suing to evict them on the ground that they in fact had no such right (m). And it is also to be noted that if the mortgage specified in the proclamation proves to be invalid, the judgment-debtor is not entitled to claim from the purchaser the amount alleged to have been due on the mortgage (n).

"Mortgage in favour of some person not in possession."—It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that where a mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property at the time of attachment, he can claim to have the attachment removed under r. 60, the reason given being that a mortgagee cannot be said to be in possession as a trustee for the judgment-debtor (o). The High Court of Patna has taken the contrary view (p). See notes to r. 41 above. See also s 73 (l).

Attachment of property agreed to be sold.—An agreement for a sale of immovable property does not create any interest in or charge on the property, even if earnest money has been paid. The property may therefore be attached after the agreement, and a sale thereof in execution will pass a good title to the auction purchaser (q). But it is otherwise where the purchase money has been paid and possession delivered, for the purchaser is in that case entitled to a charge on the property (r).

63. [S. 283.] Where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but, subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Saving of suits to establish right to attached property.

Alteration in the rule.—S 283 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows: "The party against whom an order under sections 280, 281 or 282 [now rr 60, 61 or 62] is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims," etc. The present rule, on the other hand, says that "where a claim or an objection is preferred, the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims, etc." The specific reference to the previous sections or rules has been omitted. A corresponding change has also been made in the Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art. 11. See notes below, "Order against party to a claim or objection."

Parties to suits under this rule.—This rule provides that unless the party against whom an order is made institutes a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute [within the period of a year from the date of the order as provided by art 11 of the Limitation Act, 1908], the order made against him shall be conclusive (s). Now the party against whom an order may be made may be the decree-holder (r 60), or the claimant including an incumbrancer (r 61), or even the judgment-debtor. The result, therefore, is as follows:—

1. The decree holder against whom an order is made under r 60 may sue the successful claimant for a declaration of his right to attach and sell the property released from attachment (t). To such a suit the judgment debtor is not a necessary party (u).

2 The claimant whose claim has been disallowed under r 61 may sue the decree holder to establish his right to the property attached (1) To such a suit the judgment debtor is a necessary party (w) And since the right conferred by this rule is not a personal one confined to the original claimant, a purchaser of the interest of the original claimant can also bring a declaratory suit under this rule (x)

3 A attaches a house in execution of a decree against B The property is claimed by C The Court allows C's claim, and the property is released from attachment This is an order against A, the decree holder (r 60) Does it also amount to an order against the judgment-debtor? In other words, can it be said by reason of the fact that C's claim to the property is allowed that the order operates also against B, the judgment-debtor? Assuming that the order does operate against B, it can only do so if B is deemed to be a party against whom an order is made" within the meaning of this rule If so, B must bring a declaratory suit against C, within a year from the date of the order, other wise the order against him would be conclusive But it has been held that a judgment debtor who is not in fact a party to the claim proceedings does not in the eye of the law become such by reason solely of his being the judgment-debtor Unless therefore he is a party in fact, the order is not binding upon him, and he may institute a suit even after the lapse of one year from the date of the order provided he does so within the ordinary period of limitation applicable to the suit, to establish his title to, and recover possession of, the property from the claimant [C] (y) But if he was a party in fact, the order would be binding on him unless he brought the suit within the period of one year

Alienation by claimant after order in his favour.—A purchaser of property from a claimant, after an order has been passed in the claimant's favour removing the attachment on the property, but before the institution of a suit by the decree holder against the claimant under this rule, is an alienee pendente lite, and is not therefore a necessary party to the suit The alienee, however, takes the property subject to the provisions of s 52 of the Transfer of Property Act (z) In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property alleged to belong to B is attached C claims the property C's claim is allowed, and the attachment is removed C then sells the property to D A then sues B and C for a declaration that at the date of attachment the property belonged to B and that he was entitled to attach it D is not a necessary party to the suit But the alienation by C to D will be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens as laid down in s 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882

Period of limitation for suit under this rule.—The period of limitation for a suit under this rule is one year from the date of the order [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art 11] In Sardhari Lal v Ambika Pershad (a), the Judicial Committee said

It [that is, the order] is not conclusive, a suit may be brought to claim the property notwithstanding the order, but then the law of limitation says that the plaintiff must be prompt in bringing his suit The policy of the Act evidently is to secure the speedy settlement of questions of title raised at execution sales and for that reason a year is fixed as the time within which the suit must be brought If the claimant is unsuccessful the period of limitation for his suit is curtailed but as to this the Lahore High Court has said that a person who chooses to take advantage of a summary procedure must suffer its disadvantages as well as enjoy its benefits (b) Where an appeal is preferred from the order, the period of one year is to be calculated from the date of the appellate order (c) But although the period of limitation runs from the date of the order art 11 of the Limitation Act does not apply unless the attachment has actually been effected in pursuance of the order (d)

Suit may be a step in aid of execution.—A in execution of a money decree against B attached immovable property C objected that the property belonged to him and the property was released from attachment A filed a suit under this rule to establish his right to attach A's suit was dismissed It was held that A's plaint in the suit under rule 63 was a step in aid of execution of his money decree against B (e)

Suit not necessary if the property is released from attachment within the period of limitation—Where after an order disallowing a claimant's claim and

attachment on payment by the judgment debtor to be decree holder of the amount of the decree (g), it is not incumbent upon the claimant to institute a suit under this rule or to prosecute the suit if he has already brought one, and he will not be affected by any of the consequences which result from a failure to institute a suit under this rule In execution of a decree obtained by A against B certain property alleged to belong to B is attached C claims the property as his own, but the claim is disallowed Within one year from the date of the order A's application for execution is dismissed under r 57 above C is not bound to bring a suit under this rule and if A makes a fresh application for execution and the property is again attached C may again take an objection to the attachment (h)

Scope of suit under this rule Consequential relief—This rule provides that a party against whom the order referred to in this rule is made may institute a suit "to establish his right to the property in dispute The words to establish his right to the property are it has been held wide enough to cover a suit not only for a declaration but a suit for a declaration and consequential relief (i) Thus a plaintiff may under this rule sue to establish his right to the goods attached, and for damages in respect of the wrongful attachment Where the goods have already been sold he may sue for the value of the goods (j) He may also claim the full value of the goods where the goods have depreciated owing to a fall in the market between the date of attachment and the date of sale (k) But he is not bound to claim any consequential relief (l) If he sues for a declaration of his title and obtains a decree he is entitled to bring a suit for possession against the auction purchaser Such a suit is not barred by the provisions of O 2, r 2 above (m)

A suit under this rule is not limited by any special standard of evidence or of law The claimant may if necessary, thrash out his title in the fullest and most ultimate sense

O. 21, r. 63 But if the title which he claims is not the ultimate full title to the property, then, of course, he must be content to assert whatever the title claimed may be. So, too, the decree holder may make out his debtor's title exactly as if it were a suit for possession by the debtor (n) |

"Subject to the result of such suit, the order shall be conclusive"—This means that unless the suit is brought as provided by this rule, the party against whom the order is made cannot assert, either as plaintiff or as defendant in any other suit or as a party to any other proceeding, the right denied to him by the order (o) A obtains a decree against B, and in execution of the decree attaches certain property alleged to belong to B. C claims that he is in possession of the property under a sale from B of a date prior to the attachment, and applies that the property be released from attachment. The executing Court finds that C was in possession at the date of the attachment, but that the sale to him was fictitious and disallows C's claim. No suit is brought by C within the period of a year to establish his right to the property. The property is then sold in execution, and purchased by P. P then sues C for possession. C is precluded in this suit from again asserting his right as purchaser from B. No suit having been brought by him within the period of limitation, the order disallowing his claim became conclusive against him under this rule. Similarly if A in execution of a decree against B attaches a debt alleged to be due by C to B, and C objects to the attachment on the ground that no such debt is due, and C's objection is overruled, but C brings no suit under this rule, he will be precluded in a suit against him by the execution purchaser of the debt from contending that no debt was due by him to B (p). The result would be the same even if C had brought a suit against A and B to establish his right to the debt, and the suit had been dismissed. The result of failure to file the suit as also of the dismissal of the suit if one is filed, is that the order becomes conclusive not only as regards the parties to the order or the suit, but also as regards the auction purchaser. In either case C cannot assert his claim in a substantive suit against the auction purchaser, nor can he set it up by way of defence to a suit against him by the auction purchaser (q).

The order is conclusive as against the party against whom it is made—A obtains a decree against B, and attaches B's property in execution of his decree. C claiming to be a mortgagee of the property puts in a claim under r. 63. A contends that the mortgage is not valid, but his contention is disallowed. No suit is instituted by A as required by the present rule, and the order becomes conclusive against him. The property is then sold subject to C's mortgage, and it is purchased by A. Subsequently C sues A (purchaser) and B (mortgagor) to recover the mortgage debt by sale of the mortgaged property. B, not being a party to the claim proceedings, may contend in C's suit that the mortgage is not valid, but A cannot, for the order became conclusive against him. The fact that B, the judgment-debtor, can impeach the validity of the mortgage, and that the property purchased by A is the property which belonged to B does not entitle A to be placed in B's position so as to give him the same right to attack the mortgage as B has (r). See notes above, 'Parties to suits under this rule,' para 3.

Property in respect of which order is conclusive—An order in a claim case is conclusive only as regards the particular property in dispute (s)

Order "against" party to a claim or objection :—

1. An order made on an application which does not come within the scope of r. 58 is not an order to which the present rule applies (f)

2 Order dismissing a claim for default.—Section 283 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows : "The party against whom an order under sections 280, 281, or 282 is passed may institute a suit," etc. It was accordingly held in some cases that the order referred to in sec. 283 must be one made after investigation of the claim as contemplated by sections 280, 281 and 282, and that an order dismissing a claim for default and without investigation did not come under that section. Accordingly it was held that an order dismissing a claim for default did not become "conclusive" against the party against whom it was made so as to preclude him from instituting a suit more than one year after the date of the order, provided the suit was within the ordinary period of limitation (u). The language of the present rule is more comprehensive than the language of sec. 283. This rule makes no reference to the previous rules, namely, rules 60, 61 and 62, and a corresponding change has also been made in art. 11 of the Limitation Act. The result is that the rule applies to every order made against a party to a claim preferred or an objection made under r. 58, even if the order was made for default and without investigation (v). But this does not take away the right of the party to apply to have the order of dismissal for default set aside (w).

3 Order refusing to investigate a claim on the ground of delay—Where a claim or objection is preferred under r. 58, and the Court rejects it under the proviso to that rule on the ground that it was designedly or unnecessarily delayed, the order is one made "against" the claimant or objector within the meaning of this rule (x).

4. An order on a claim petition stating that as the petition was filed late the claim

Such an order is But an order in
by this Court, petition dismissed," has been held not to be an order "against" the claimant (z). Similarly where a mortgagee applied that the sale proceeds should be kept in Court to satisfy his mortgage, but the application was dismissed on the ground that the sale had already taken place and the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the application, it was held that there was no order "against" the mortgagee (a). Where A preferred a claim to the property attached on the ground that he was entitled to a share in the property, and the Court made an order in these terms, namely, "Whatever right the judgment debtor has will pass by the sale, the claim does not require any further investigation, the claim put forward will be noted in the sale proclamation," it was held that it was not an order "against" the claimant (b).

D. 21, r. 63

5 If in point of fact there has been no attachment, art 11 of the Limitation Act cannot apply, for "unless there has been an attachment, there can be no order made on an objection lodged to it, nor can any claim be made to the property so attached, and without such an order there is no terminus a quo for the running of limitation, and with this limitation itself is non-existent." So when a mortgagee preferred a claim in the belief that there was an attachment over the property mortgaged, and it is subsequently proved that the order of attachment had never been carried out, the Privy Council held that the order passed rejecting the claim was a nullity and art 11 did not apply to the mortgagee's subsequent suit on his mortgage (c)

6 See also notes to r 62 above, "Scope of the rule"

7 There is a material difference between an order which falls under this rule and an order which falls under r 66 below. In the one case if the party affected does not sue within 12 months to set it aside, it becomes conclusive. In the other case it has no such effect (d)

8 No suit can lie under this rule unless there has been an order either allowing or disallowing an objection to attachment. A person is not entitled to object to an attachment and then to withdraw the attachment and bring a suit under this rule (e)

Orders in proceedings for attachment before judgment.—Rules 53 to 63 apply to claims preferred to property attached before judgment (f). But a Provincial Court of Small Causes has no power to attach immovable property before judgment, and an order made by such Court adjudicating a claim to property so attached is ultra vires (g). See notes to sec 7 on p 23 above.

Suit for refund of purchase money.—This rule applies to a suit to establish the title to property. If A purchases property from B, and B claims the property as purchaser, but his claim is disallowed, B sues A for a refund of the purchase money more than a year after the date of the order, but within the ordinary period of limitation. The suit is not barred by limitation. The reason is that r 63 does not apply to such a suit (h).

Payment by claimant under protest.—If the claimant fails, and the attachment is not removed, he is not compelled to bring a suit under this rule for a declaration of his title to the property. He may prevent the sale of the property by paying the decretal amount to the decree holder, and then sue for it as money paid under compulsion of law, i.e., under pressure of execution proceedings (i). Further, the claimant is not bound to take proceedings at all under the Code to set aside the attachment. He may pay the amount of the decree under protest, and then sue as stated above (j). See notes to r 64 below.

Jurisdiction.—In a suit for a declaration that property is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, where the value of the property is in excess of the amount claimed in execution of the decree, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is not the value of the property, but the decretal amount (l). But where the plaintiff sues not only for a declaration that the property is not attachable, but for a declaration of his title to the property as against the decree holder and the judgment debtor, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the property (l).

Presidency Small Cause Court.—The Presidency Small Cause Court has power to execute its own decrees and its jurisdiction is not ousted by the fact that the claimant values his claim in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. Under the Rules of Practice the claim is made by filing a suit and the decision in the claim suit is final (m).

Burden of proof.—The burden of proof in a suit under this rule lies on the plaintiff as in other cases, and not on the defendant (n). If the plaintiff claims under a deed, but the plaintiff must prove the deed (ol); and this has also been so decided by the Privy Council (o2).

date of the attachment C's possession was for 11 years only, and at the date of the suit it was for upwards of 12 years. According to the Madras High Court the period of C's possession is to be counted upto the date of the suit, and A's suit is therefore barred, the reason given being that attachment could not prevent the running of time in favour of C. On the other hand, according to the Bombay High Court, the period of C's possession must be counted only upto the date of attachment, and hence A's suit is not barred, the reason given being that the real question in such a case was whether the judgment debtor [B] had a subsisting right to the property at the date of attachment (q). According to the Calcutta High Court also the material date is the date of attachment (r).

Fraudulent transfer by judgment debtor.—Where a claim is made to the property attached by one claiming to be a transferee from the judgment debtor, and the claim is disallowed, and the claimant subsequently institutes a suit under this rule to establish his title to the property, it is open to the attaching creditor to plead in defence

Suit for refund of purchase money.—This rule applies to a suit to establish the plaintiff's right to the property in dispute It does not apply to a case where a plaintiff whose claim to the property is disallowed under r 61 sues the judgment debtor for a refund of the money paid by him for the purchase of the property A sells certain property to B C obtains a decree against A and attaches the property in execution B claims the property as purchaser, but his claim is disallowed B sues A for a refund of the purchase money more than a year after the date of the order, but within the ordinary period of limitation The suit is not barred by limitation The reason is that r 63 does not apply to such a suit (h)

Sale generally.

- 64. [S. 284.] Any Court executing a decree may order that any property attached by it and liable to sale, or such portion thereof as may seem necessary to satisfy the decree, shall be sold, and that the proceeds of such sale, or a sufficient portion thereof, shall be paid to the party entitled under the decree to receive the same.

Power to order property attached to be sold and proceeds to be paid to person entitled

Any property attached by it.—These words do not imply that if the property attached is situate outside its territorial jurisdiction, a Court has power to sell it (a) See notes under s 28 above, "Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree"

Sale of goods not belonging to judgment-debtor.—A obtains a decree against B In execution of the decree A points out to the sheriff's agent goods belonging to C as the property of B C's goods are thereupon attached by the sheriff's agent, and sold in execution C is entitled to claim from A the market value of his goods as on the date of attachment. The sheriff is not liable in such a case (b)

Omission to attach does not invalidate sale.—An omission to attach is only an irregularity and does not render the sale a nullity (c) See notes under r 93, "Omission to attach property before sale".

- 65. [S. 286.] Save as otherwise prescribed, every sale in execution of a decree shall be conducted by an officer of the Court or by such other person as the Court may appoint in this behalf, and shall be made by public auction in manner prescribed.

Sales by whom conducted and how made

"Save as otherwise prescribed."—See r. 76 below. The Bombay High Court has held that the Court may for good reasons direct that the bidders at an auction sale shall be restricted to a particular class of persons (d)

Acceptance of bid.—There is nothing in the Code to require a bid to be accepted by a Judge before a contract of sale can be held to be complete. The officer conducting the sale is the person to declare the highest bidder to be the purchaser (e), and the sale is complete when he accepts the bid and the deposit under r 84 has been paid. But the Patna High Court has held that if the sale has been conducted by the nazir the bid sheet must be sent to the Court for acceptance and that there is no completed sale until the Court accepts the bid (f) The Calcutta High Court has followed this decision (g) But the Rangoon High Court has dissented holding that the sale is complete when the officer conducting the sale accepts the bid (h)

O. 21, r. 63 that the transfer was in fraud of the general body of creditors (a) If the claim is allowed the attaching creditor may sue on behalf of himself and all other creditors for a declaration that the transfer was void as it was in fraud of creditors, but he cannot sue exclusively on his own behalf (i) In execution of a decree obtained by A against B, B's property is attached C claims the property as having been purchased by him from B prior to the attachment but the claim is dismissed C then sues A and B under this rule to establish his right to the property A is entitled to plead in defence that the transfer by B to C was made with intent to defraud B's creditors On the other hand if C's claim is allowed and the attachment is raised then A as attaching creditor may bring a suit under this rule on behalf of himself and all other creditors of B to prove that the transfer was fraudulent and to establish his right to attach But such a suit by A on behalf of himself only is not competent (

Damages for wrongful attachment—Where goods attached as belonging to the judgment debtor are claimed by a third party and his claim is disallowed he may sue under this rule not only for a declaration of his title to the goods but also for the value of the goods as where they have depreciated owing to a fall in the market between the date of attachment and the date of sale He is not bound to allege and prove that the decree holder resisted his application for the removal of attachment maliciously and without probable cause (u)

Attachment by Revenue Court—When an attachment has been made by the Court of an Assistant Collector under the Agra Tenancy Act 1926 the party aggrieved has a right of suit under this rule even though the order has been confirmed on appeal by the Collector under s 247 of that Act (v)

Insolvency of judgment debtor—The Madras High Court holds that if the judgment debtor is adjudged insolvent leave of the Insolvency Court under sec 28 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 is not necessary for the commencement of a suit by the attaching creditor under this rule for a declaration that the property belonged to the judgment debtor at the date of the attachment (w) The Rangoon High Court however differs from this view and holds that in such a case a suit under r 63 is not maintainable without leave of the Court under s 28 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 (x)

Costs—The costs incurred in the summary proceeding under r 58 may be dealt with in the suit filed under this rule (y)

Court fee—The Court fee payable upon the plaint in a suit by a person whose claim to property attached in execution has been dismissed is Rs 10 under the Court Fees Act Sch II art 17 whether the claim is dismissed for default or after investigation (z)

D. 21, r. 66

66. [S. 287.] (1) Where any property is ordered to be sold by public auction in execution of a decree, the Court shall cause a proclamation of the intended sale to be made in the language of such Court

Proclamation of sale by public auction

(2) Such proclamation shall be drawn up after notice to the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and shall state the time and place of sale, and specify as fairly and accurately as possible—

- (a) the property to be sold,
- (b) the revenue assessed upon the estate or part of the estate, where the property to be sold is an interest in an estate or in part of an estate paying revenue to the Government,
- (c) any incumbrance to which the property is liable,
- (d) the amount for the recovery of which the sale is ordered,
- (e) every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property

(3) Every application for an order for sale under this rule shall be accompanied by a statement signed and verified in the manner hereinbefore prescribed for the signing and verification of pleadings and containing, so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by the person making the verification, the matters required by sub rule (2) to be specified in the proclamation

(4) For the purpose of ascertaining the matters to be specified in the proclamation, the Court may summon any person whom it thinks necessary to summon and may examine him in respect to any such matters and require him to produce any document in his possession or power relating thereto

Alterations in the rule

- 1 The provision in sub r (1) for notice to be given to the decree holder and the judgment debtor is new
- 2 Sub r (3) is also new

Incumbrances to which the property is liable—Where a decree holder who held a simple money decree stated in his application [sub r (3)] that the property to be sold was subject to a mortgage in his favour but no mention was made of the mortgage in the proclamation, the omission not being due to any fraud on his part, O. it was held that he was not estopped from enforcing his mortgage against the auction purchaser (1). But he would be so estopped if he omitted to mention his mortgage in the application (2). See notes to r. 62 of this order.

Value of the property.—Clause (e) of the rule provides that the proclamation shall specify as fairly and accurately as possible ' every other thing which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know in order to judge of the nature and value of the property ' There can hardly be any doubt that the value of the property to be put up for sale is a material fact within the meaning of cl (e) As said by the Judicial Committee in Saadatmand Khan v Phul Kuar (k) ' Whatever material fact is stated in the proclamation (and the value of the property is a very material fact) must be considered as one of those things ' which the Court considers material for a purchaser to know ' and it is enacted in terms (though express enactment is hardly necessary for such an object) that those things shall be stated as fairly and accurately as possible ' If the value is understated in the proclamation, and the understatement is such as is calculated to mislead bidders and to prevent them from offering adequate prices, and the sale results in a price altogether inadequate the sale must be set aside on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale within the meaning of r 90 below (l) This pronouncement of the Privy Council has been construed as meaning that when a valuation has been stated in the sale proclamation it is a material fact within cl (e) but it does not mean that the Court should make a valuation (m) and it gives no guidance as to whether it is the duty of the Court to make a valuation and enter it in the sale proclamation On this point there were many decisions of the Calcutta High Court which were not easy to reconcile (n) All these have been reviewed in Ban Behari v Bhukan Lal (o) where the Calcutta High Court has laid down the following rules (i) that it is the duty of the Court (apart from exceptional circumstances) to make a valuation, the result of which is to be included in the sale proclamation, (ii) that such duty (save in exceptional circumstances) is not discharged by merely stating the values respectively put upon the property by the parties The Court should make its own valuation and arrive at a single figure (iii) that if by reason of exceptional circumstances the course indicated in (i) and (ii) is found to be impracticable, such circumstances should be clearly set out in the order The Madras High Court has, however, held that the Court is under no obligation to fix in the proclamation of sale its own valuation of the property to be sold (p)

Specifying the amount.—The amount shewn in the sale proclamation as that for which the sale is ordered may be in excess of that shewn in the execution application, for if the decree directs payment of interest an account is taken up to the date of sale (g)

Specifying every other thing material—If a third party has preferred a claim to the property and has filed a suit the Court is justified in giving notice in the proclamation that the property is under litigation (r)

Notice to the decree holder—No notice is necessary in the case of sales in execution of decrees for rent under s 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (s)

Proclamation of sale to be settled by Court—The power to settle the proclamation of sale cannot be delegated to a commissioner. The proclamation must be settled by the Court (t). If it is settled by a commissioner the sale would be invalid.

Duty of Court in respect of Court Sales.—In a case in which the terms of the proclamation were not clearly explained by the officer of the Court conducting the sale to a bidder who asked for an explanation and who was thus misled into buying property which was subject to mortgages amounting to more than its value, the Judicial Committee in setting aside the sale observed. In sales under the direction of the Court it is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers. It would be disastrous, it would be absolutely shocking, if the Court were to enforce against a purchaser misled by its duly accredited agents a bargain so illusory and so unconscientious as this' (u)

Non compliance with provisions of this rule—See notes to r 90 below.
* Material irregularity in publishing or conducting sale nos 1A and 2

Where judgment debtor lies by.—See notes to r 90 below, 'Waiver and estoppel'

Appeal.—An order under this rule, not being included in the list of appealable orders given in O 43, is not appealable as an order. The question then arises whether an order under this rule is an order in execution proceedings within the meaning of s 47. Now an order in execution proceedings may be a final order, that is it may conclusively determine the rights of parties or it may be interlocutory. In the former case the order operates as a decree and is appealable as such [s 2 (2)], but not in the latter case [see notes to s 47, Interlocutory orders in execution proceedings]. The question therefore in each case is whether a particular order made under this rule conclusively determines the rights of the parties or not.

A Full Bench of the High Court of Madras in Siragani v Subrahmanya (v) which was a case under the corresponding s 287 of the Code of 1882, held that the proceeding of a Court under that section in relation to the proclamation of sale is an order within s 244 (now s 47) so as to be appealable as a decree. In the course of the Order of Reference the learned Judges said. We are disposed to think that the preliminary objection is well founded and that under s 287, Civil Procedure Code the proceedings are in themselves administrative and not judicial, but that if and when a sale does take place, if ever, and it has to be judicially confirmed, objection may be taken to the confirmation of the sale on any of the grounds mentioned in s 311, Civil Procedure [now O 21, r 90] some of which may relate to the contents of the proclamation. This view receives strong corroboration from the provision enacted by s 288, Civil Procedure Code, that no Judge or other public officer shall be answerable for any error, misstatement or omission in any proclamation under s. 287, Civil Procedure Code, unless the same has been committed or made dishonestly, a provision which, in view of Act XVIII of 1850 would have been quite superfluous if proceedings under s. 287 Civil Procedure Code, were 'judicial' and not 'administrative'. In delivering their opinion the Full Bench said: "We concur in the reasons given in the Order of Preference, and we may add that the view that the proceedings in themselves under s. 287, are of an administrative and not a judicial character is further supported by the fact that special provision is made in s. 287 [now O. 21, r. 6 (3)] to summon witnesses and make enquiry into the matters referred to in the section, a provision which would be superfluous if the proceedings were judicial. It has accordingly been held by that Court that an order under this rule determining the value of the property to be sold, the place where the sale is to take place, the lots in which it is to be sold, and the amount for the recovery of which the property is to be sold is not a judicial but an administrative order, and that it does not come within s. 244 (now s. 47) and is not appealable (w). It may here be stated that s. 288 of the Code of 1882 has not been reproduced in the present Code. In a case under this Code (x) the High Court of Madras observed that the Full Bench decision was good law even under the present Code, notwithstanding the omission of s. 288, though in another case (y) Schwabe, C. J., expressed a doubt on that point. As to a decision regarding the order in which the properties are to be put up for sale, the Madras High Court has held that such a decision is an order within s. 47, and that it is appealable if it affects the rights of co-defendants, inter se, for example, in a case of execution of a decree on a mortgage where the interests of the owners of the items of the mortgaged properties will be seriously affected by the order in which the properties are sold (z). In a recent case the same High Court held that the Court is under no obligation whatever under this rule to fix and state in the proclamation of sale its own valuation of the property to be sold (a).

The Bombay High Court follows the Madras Full Bench Case (b).

The High Court of Calcutta has held that an order under this rule may be either final or interlocutory. If it is final it falls within s. 47 and is appealable as a decree, but it is not appealable if it is interlocutory. It has accordingly been held that an order determining the value of the property to be sold is merely interlocutory and is not appealable (c). An order in the following term "let sale proclamation be issued, in the meantime I shall hear the objection of the judgment debtor," is also interlocutory (d). But an order adjudicating upon a dispute as to the boundaries of the property sold and determining that certain accreted land should be included in the property to be sold is final and is appealable as a decree (e). It may be observed that it is not safe to follow such decisions under the Code of 1882 as they proceeded on points in which the definition of a decree differed from that in the present Code.

The High Court of Allahabad has also held that an order under this rule determining the value of the property to be sold does not fall within s. 47 and is not appealable. The reason given is that in such a case "the Court judicially decides nothing" (f).

O. 21, r. 66 Specifying the amount.—The amount shewn in the sale proclamation as that for which the sale is ordered may be in excess of that shewn in the execution application, for if the decree directs payment of interest an account is taken up to the date of sale (q)

Specifying every other thing material.—If a third party has preferred a claim to the property and has filed a suit the Court is justified in giving notice in the proclamation that the property is under litigation (r)

Notice to the decree holder.—No notice is necessary in the case of sales in execution of decrees for rent under s 163 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (s)

Proclamation of sale to be settled by Court.—The power to settle the proclamation of sale cannot be delegated to a commissioner. The proclamation must be settled by the Court (t). If it is settled by a commissioner the sale would be invalid

Duty of Court in respect of Court Sales.—In a case in which the terms of the proclamation were not clearly explained by the officer of the Court conducting the sale to a bidder who asked for an explanation and who was thus misled into buying property which was subject to mortgages amounting to more than its value, the Judicial Committee in setting aside the sale observed: "In sales under the direction of the Court it is incumbent on the Court to be scrupulous in the extreme and very careful to see that no taint or touch of fraud or deceit or misrepresentation is found in the conduct of its ministers. It would be disastrous, it would be absolutely shocking, if the Court were to enforce against a purchaser misled by its duly accredited agents a bargain so illusory and so unconscientious as this" (u)

Appeal.—An order under this rule, not being included in the list of appealable orders given in O 43, is not appealable as an order. The question then arises whether an order under this rule is an order in execution proceedings within the meaning of s 47. Now an order in execution proceedings may be a final order, that is, it may conclusively determine the rights of parties or it may be interlocutory. In two earlier cases the High Court of Patna held that an order under this rule determining the value of the property to be sold was merely interlocutory and was not therefore appealable (g). In a recent Patna case a Bench of three Judges held that an order of the Court determining any of the particulars to be stated in the sale proclamation under this rule is not a final order and is not appealable. It was accordingly held in that case that an order refusing to notify a lease in the sale proclamation was not final and was not appealable (h).

Letters Patent appeal.—An order of a single Judge of the High Court sitting on the Original Side refusing to alter the upset price fixed in a proclamation of sale or to direct the sale of the property in lots, or to postpone the date of sale, is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, but merely an interlocutory order and no appeal lies from it under that clause (i).

Death of judgment debtor pending execution.—If the judgment debtor has died before issue of notice to him under this rule, his legal representatives must be brought on the record. If the legal representatives are not brought on the record the sale would be void (j).

Insolvency of the judgment debtor pending execution.—If an insolvency petition by or against the judgment debtor under the Provincial Insolvency Act has been admitted, the Court of execution having notice of the fact is bound to stay the sale (k). If notice is given to the Court of execution and an application is made by the Official Receiver the Court will order the delivery of the attached property to the Official Receiver. See Provincial Insolvency Act s. 52, Presidency towns Insolvency Act s. 41 and Mulla's Law of Insolvency in British India at p. 425.

Non appearance of legal representative and res judicata.—The failure of the legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor to attend pursuant to a notice under sub r. (2) [App. E form no. 28] at the hearing of an application to settle the terms of a sale proclamation does not estop him on the principle of res judicata from contending thereafter that the property attached belongs to him personally and that it does not form part of the estate of the deceased judgment debtor. The notice under sub r. (2) is merely to settle the terms of the proclamation, it is not for determining questions of title to the property (l).

of the Collector, as the case may be, by the officer or other person holding the sale and shall, at the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor, be recoverable from the defaulting purchaser under the provisions relating to the execution of a decree for the payment of money

Application of the rule.—This rule extends to all sales, whether of movable or of immovable property, and also to re sales made under the Code, whether made in consequence of default of payment of deposit under r 84 or of purchase money under rr 85 and 86 (z) But the re sale should only cover the property sold at the prior sale, and any substantial difference of description at the sale and re sale in any of the matters required by r 66 will deprive the decree holder of the right to recover the deficiency of price under this rule Thus where the defaulting purchaser had been induced to bid for the property as unincumbered by reason of the fact that the incumbrances were not mentioned in the proclamation of sale and the re sale was on a proclamation in which the incumbrances were mentioned, it was held that he was not liable for the deficiency on re sale under this rule (a) The same was held where the property was described as that of A at the first sale and as that of B at the second (b) But if the first proclamation was of the judgment debtor's right title and interest, and the second proclamation stated that that interest was a third only, the defaulting purchaser cannot escape liability for he had no right to assume that the judgment debtor was the sole owner (c) The property sold was the same, and it has been said that "the reasonable construction to place on rule 71 is that the re sale should be within a reasonable time after the first sale and the property re sold should be substantially the same and that any difference will not matter if the difference in the condition of the property or the title thereto is one which would occur in the ordinary course of things having regard either to the nature of the property or the transaction in respect thereof having legal force at the date of sale or was brought about by the first purchaser's default (d) Rule 84 requires that the property should be forthwith resold but the defaulting purchaser will be liable for the deficiency if the property is resold as expeditiously as the circumstances permit (e) The deficiency may be recovered though the certificate referred to in this rule has not been issued (f)

It is to be noted that on the happening of any of the events that render a re sale necessary, the decree holder is not bound to have the same property re sold He may proceed against any other property of the judgment debtor, leaving the latter to his remedy against the defaulting purchaser (g)

Who may apply under this rule.—The only person who can apply under this rule is the decree holder who brought the property to sale or the judgment debtor. No other person is entitled to apply (h)

By reason of purchaser's default.—These words cover a default not only in payment of the balance of the price, but in making the deposit of 25 per cent as provided by r 84 below (i)

At a Court sale A bids Rs. 5,000, B bids Rs. 6,000 and C bids Rs. 7,000. C dies before his bid is accepted by the Court. Can B be said in the circumstances to be the highest bidder? No. C's bid was revoked by his death before acceptance by the Court. B's bid lapsed on the making of the higher bid by C, and A's bid lapsed on the making of the higher bid by B. The property should therefore be put up afresh for sale (1).

Certificate.—The certificate as to the deficiency can be executed as a decree and can therefore also be attached as a decree (1)

Interest on deficiency.—A defaulting purchaser is liable for interest on the deficiency from the date on which an order is made against him under this rule, and not from the date of sale (f).

Rateable distribution.—Where a decree holder who has brought the property to sale applies under this rule and attaches the amount of the deposit lying in Court, other decree holders who have applied before the amount was deposited in Court are entitled to a rateable distribution of such amount. The amount in deposit in Court represents the assets realised by the Court within the meaning of sec 73 above (m)

Collector's sale—Court's order necessary.—When the execution of a decree is transferred to the Collector, and the sale is held by the Collector, jurisdiction to order recovery of the deficiency is with the Court. Application for the recovery of the deficiency on re sale must be made to the Court (n).

Where defaulting purchaser merely an agent.—The mere fact that the defaulting purchaser acted as the agent of another is no ground for exempting him from liability under this rule unless he informed the officer conducting the sale that he was merely an agent. The fact that the judgment debtor knew that he was merely an agent does not disentitle the judgment debtor to an order under this rule (c).

Appeal.—An order under this rule allowing or disallowing an application for the recovery of the loss by a re-sale falls within s. 47 and is appealable as a decree (p) See notes to s. 102. "Execution"

72. [S. 294.] (1) No holder of a decree in execution of which property is sold shall, without the express permission of the Court, bid for or purchase the property.

Decree holder not to bid for or buy property without permission

(2) Where a decree-holder purchases with such permission, the purchase-money and the amount due on the decree may, subject to the provisions of section 73, be set off against one another, and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly.

21, r. 72 Setting off decretal amount against purchase money—The Bombay High Court has said that if one of the terms on which permission to bid is granted to the decree holder is that there should be no right of set-off then in such a case no set-off should be allowed (x)

Collector's sale—Court has power to allow a set off—If the execution of the decree is transferred to the Collector and the sale is held by the Collector, the Collector is empowered under the rules framed by the High Court to grant leave to the decree holder to bid, but the Collector has no power to allow a set off. The decree holder must apply under this rule to the Court for leave to set off (y)

Leave to bid—Leave to bid should not be refused except upon good ground (z). A decree holder who has obtained leave to bid at a judicial sale is in the same position as any other purchaser, he is not bound more than any other person to disclose circumstances within his knowledge, and bearing on the sale (a). Similarly a mortgagee purchaser who has obtained leave to bid is in the same position as an independent purchaser (b), that is to say, he does not stand in the position of a trustee for the mortgagor, and he is only bound to give credit to the mortgagor for the actual amount of his bid and not for what may be the actual value of the property (c). The decree holder who is allowed to purchase the property on condition that he would purchase it in full satisfaction of the decree is not entitled to recover from the judgment-debtor any money which he has to pay by way of poundage (d). It may here be noted that if the decree holder himself is the purchaser, and the decree is subsequently reversed, the sale to him will be set aside (e), but the sale cannot be set aside against a bona fide purchaser who is not a party to the suit (f). See notes to sec 65, 1 effect of reversal of decree upon sale.

Where a decree holder applies for leave to bid at the sale and no order is passed on his application, but is allowed to bid throughout the course of the sale, the Court must be deemed to have permitted him to bid (g).

"Amount due on the decree"—When more than one decree holder has applied for execution, the amount due on the decree to the decree holder purchaser is the amount to which he would be entitled on a rateable distribution under sec 73 (A). This is now made clear by the addition of the words "subject to the provisions of sec 73" in sub r (2). The decree holder purchaser must share the proceeds of the sale rateably with the competing decree holders (i). If the full amount has been paid to him the Court ordering rateable distribution may make an order for refund of the proportionate amount to be enforced by summary process in execution (j). But if rateable distribution is being made by a different Court and a Court of higher grade and the Court has already allowed the decree holder to set off for the whole amount that is a proceeding saved by sec 61 (2). The Court making rateable distribution can only call for the balance of the purchase money after the set off (k). The Madras High Court has held that if the sale proceeds are less than the amount of the decree against which a set-off has been allowed, other decree holders have no right of rateable distribution, as the whole amount must be deemed to have been received and realized so instantly the sale is made (l).

- (b) if such produce has been cut or gathered, at or near the threshing floor or place for treading out grain or the like or fodder stack on or in which it is deposited

Provided that the Court may direct the sale to be held at the nearest place of public resort, if it is of opinion that the produce is thereby likely to sell to greater advantage

- (2) Where, on the produce being put up for sale,—

- (a) a fair price, in the estimation of the person holding the sale, is not offered for it, and
(b) the owner of the produce or a person authorized to act in his behalf applies to have the sale postponed till the next day or, if a market is held at the place of sale, the next market-day, the sale shall be postponed accordingly and shall be then completed whatever price may be offered for the produce

Place of sale of movable property.—Except in the case of agricultural produce for which provision has been made by this rule a sale of movables in execution of a decree should ordinarily be held at some place within the jurisdiction of the Court ordering the sale. Good and sufficient reasons ought to be shown for directing otherwise. A mere contention that a higher price is likely to be bid in some other place is not a good and sufficient reason (x)

75. [New] (1) Where the property to be sold is a growing crop and the crop from its nature admits of being stored but has not yet been stored, the day of the sale shall be so fixed as to admit of its being made ready for storing, before the arrival of such day, and the sale shall not be held until the crop has been cut or gathered and is ready for storing

(2) Where the crop from its nature does not admit of being stored, it may be sold before it is cut and gathered, and the purchaser shall be entitled to enter on the land, and to do all that is necessary for the purpose of tending and cutting or gathering it

76. [S 296.] Where the property to be sold is a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation, the Court may, instead of directing the sale to be made by public auction, authorize the sale of such instrument or share through a broker

* May —A sale through a broker is permissive and not obligatory (y)

77. [S. 297.] (1) Where movable property is sold by public auction the price of each lot shall be paid at the time of sale or as soon after as the officer or other person holding the sale directs, and in default of payment the property shall forthwith be re-sold.

(2) On payment of the purchase-money, the officer or other person holding the sale shall grant a receipt for the same, and the sale shall become absolute.

(3) Where the movable property to be sold is a share in goods belonging to the judgment-debtor and a co-owner, and two or more persons, of whom one is such co-owner, respectively bid the same sum for such property or for any lot, the bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding of the co-owner.

Where movable property is sold by public auction—This does not apply to negotiable instruments or shares sold through a broker under r 76 above (z)

Payment of price.—The officer holding the sale has a discretion to allow the price to be paid at a reasonable time after the sale (a)

In default of payment—The provisions of r 71 apply to a re sale under this rule (b)

Sub rule (3)—This sub rule is new. It gives a right of pre-emption to the co-owner. See as to immovable property, r 83 below

78. [S. 298.] No irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of movable property shall vitiate the sale, but any person sustaining any injury by reason of such irregularity at the hand of any other person may institute a suit against him for compensation or (if such other person is the purchaser) for the recovery of the specific property and for compensation in default of such recovery

Irregularity not to vitiate sale but any person injured may sue
Scope of the rule.—This rule provides for the case of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of movable property. Rule 90 deals with irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of immovable property

Irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale.—If the sale proclamation warrants a title which fails the injured party may apply to set aside the sale, for this is not a case of irregularity (c)

At the hand of any other person.—Where movable property not belonging to the judgment-debtor is sold at the instance of the decree holder, the real owner may sue the decree holder for the value of the property (d)

Money-decree.—A money decree is not movable property within the meaning of this rule (e). See O 21, r 53

79. [Ss. 299, 300, 301.] (1) Where the property sold is movable property of which actual seizure has been made, it shall be delivered to the purchaser

Delivery of movable property delta and shares

(2) Where the property sold is movable property in the possession of some person other than the judgment-debtor, the delivery thereof to the purchaser shall be made by giving notice to the person in possession prohibiting him from delivering possession of the property to any person except the purchaser

(3) Where the property sold is a debt not secured by a negotiable instrument or is a share in a corporation, the delivery thereof shall be made by a written order of the Court prohibiting the creditor from receiving the debt or any interest thereon, and the debtor from making payment thereof to any person except the purchaser, or prohibiting the person in whose name the share may be standing from making any transfer of the share to any person except the purchaser, or receiving payment of any dividend or interest thereon, and the manager, secretary or other proper officer of the corporation from permitting any such transfer or making any such payment to any person except the purchaser

Sale of shares — A purchaser of shares of a limited Company at a sale in execution of a decree is not entitled as of right to have his name entered in the register of the Company as a shareholder. He is subject to the same rules as those which apply to a private purchaser (f)

Forms — See App F forms nos 3^a 33 and 34

80. [S. 302] (1) Where the execution of a document or the endorsement of the party in whose name a negotiable instrument or a share in a corporation is standing is required to transfer such negotiable instrument or share, the Judge or such officer as he may appoint in this behalf may execute such document or make such endorsement as may be necessary, and such execution or endorsement shall have the same effect as an execution or endorsement by the party

(2) Such execution or endorsement may be in the following form, namely —

A B by C D, Judge of the Court of (or as the case may be), in a suit by E F against A B

(3) Until the transfer of such negotiable instrument or share, the Court may, by order, appoint some person to receive any interest or dividend due thereon and to sign a receipt for the same; and any receipt so signed shall be as valid and effectual for all purposes as if the same had been signed by the party himself.

Execution of deed of transfer of shares—Where a deed of transfer of shares is executed by a Judge under this rule the company has no option as to registering the shareholder who purchased the shares in execution and if the purchaser cannot obtain the original share certificates from the judgment debtor, the company is bound to grant him new share certificates (g)

81. [S. 303.] In the case of any movable property not hereinbefore provided for, the Court may make an order vesting such property in the purchaser or as he may direct; and such property shall vest accordingly

Vesting order in case of other property

Sale of immovable property

82. [S. 304.] Sales of immovable property in execution of decrees may be ordered by any Court other than a Court of Small Causes

What Courts may order sales

83. [S. 305.] (1) Where an order for the sale of immovable property has been made, if the judgment-debtor can satisfy the Court that there is reason to believe that the amount of the decree may be raised by the mortgage or lease or private sale of such property, or some part thereof, or of any other immovable property of the judgment debtor, the Court may, on his application postpone the sale of the property comprised in the order for sale on such terms and for such period as it thinks proper, to enable him to raise the amount

Postponement of sale to enable judgment debtor to raise amount of decree

(2) In such case the Court shall grant a certificate to the judgment-debtor authorizing him within a period to be mentioned therein, and notwithstanding anything contained in section 64, to make the proposed mortgage, lease or sale

Provided that all monies payable under such mortgage, lease or sale shall be paid, not to the judgment debtor, but, save in so far as a decree-holder is entitled to set off such money under the provisions of rule 72, into Court

O. 21, r. 83 Provided also that no mortgage, lease or sale under this rule shall become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court.

(3) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to apply to a sale of property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for sale in enforcement of a mortgage of, or charge on, such property

Alterations in the rule.—The words, 'save in so far as a decree holder is entitled to set off such money under the provisions of rule 72' in sub r (2) have been added to make it clear that where a decree holder is entitled to a set off under r 72, he should not be required to pay in the monies. A similar saving has been introduced into r 84 sub r 2, and r 85

Postpone the sale for such period as it thinks proper.—The postponement of sale under this rule is discretionary with the Court (h) But the postponement should be for a reasonable period (i)

The amount of the decree can be raised.—No sale should be postponed and no certificate should be granted under sub r (2) unless the whole amount due on the decree can be raised by mortgage lease or sale (j)

Notwithstanding anything contained in section 64.—On compliance with the conditions of this rule, a private alienation, notwithstanding s 64 becomes absolute, not only against the claim of the decree holder, but against all claims enforceable under the attachment (k)

Confirmation of sale by Court.—Where permission to raise the amount of decree by private sale has been granted to the judgment-debtor by two Courts in each of which a decree has been passed against him, it is enough if the sale is confirmed by one Court it is superfluous to apply to the other Court for confirmation of the same sale (l)

Guardian and Wards Act 8 of 1890, s 29.—A private alienation of property, though confirmed by the executing Court under this rule, is not valid if such alienation is made by a guardian and the sale is not confirmed by the Court by which the guardian was appointed (m)

Decree for the enforcement of a mortgage.—This rule does not apply to a sale of property directed to be sold in execution of a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage. The reason is that in the case of a mortgage decree the right of sale does not depend upon the attachment in execution but is confirmed by the decree itself (n)

Rateable distribution.—Money paid into Court under the proviso to sub-r (2) is liable to rateable distribution under s 73, as it is paid under a pending execution application (o)

Revision.—No appeal lies from an order refusing to postpone a sale under this rule. But the party aggrieved may apply to the High Court under s. 115 for a revision of the order and the High Court may in a proper case set aside the order (p)

84. [S. 306.] (1) On every sale of immovable property the person declared to be the purchaser shall pay immediately after such declaration a deposit of twenty-five per cent on the amount of his purchase money to the officer or other person conducting the sale, and in default of such deposit, the property shall forthwith be resold.

Deposit by purchaser and re-sale on default

(2) Where the decree-holder is the purchaser and is entitled to set off the purchase-money under rule 72, the Court may dispense with the requirements of this rule

“Declared to be the purchaser.”—An execution sale is not complete until the bid has been accepted and the deposit under this rule is paid (q)

Material irregularity—It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras that failure to deposit the 25 per cent immediately as required by this rule is no more than a “material irregularity” within the meaning of r. 90, which would render the sale voidable if substantial injury has resulted by reason of such irregularity (r). It was at one time held by the High Court of Allahabad that such failure rendered the sale altogether void (s) but these decisions have now been overruled by a Full Bench the view taken by the Full Bench being the same as that of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts (t). The word forthwith has been construed by the Madras High Court as meaning as expeditiously as circumstances permit (u)

Sub rule (2)—This sub rule is new. When leave to bid and set off is granted the deposit will as a rule be dispensed with and the set off will take effect as soon as the decree holder is declared to be the purchaser (w). See notes to r. 72. Also see notes to r. 83, ‘Alterations in the rule’

Ratable distribution.—See notes to s. 73, “Before the receipt of the assets”

Calcutta High Court original side—rule not applicable.—This rule is not applicable to mortgage decrees on the original side of the Calcutta High Court. The conditions as to sale and deposit are there regulated by rules framed under s. 122 (v)

85. [S. 307.] The full amount of purchase money payable shall be paid by the purchaser into Court before the Court closes on the fifteenth day from the sale of the property.

Time for payment in full of purchase money

On the fifteenth day from the sale.—The purchaser is bound to see that the money reaches the Court in time to satisfy the requirements of this rule. If the purchase money is not received by the Court in time, it will not avail him that he had posted the money in time, for the Post Office is not the agent of the Court (w).

Material irregularity.—The time for payment cannot be extended without the consent of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. If it be extended without their consent, the case is one of material irregularity within the meaning of r 90 below (x).

Where the Court or office is closed on the fifteenth day.—In such a case the payment may be made on the next day on which the Court or Office is open. See General Clauses Act 10 of 1897, s. 10.

Proviso.—The proviso is new. See notes to r. 83 above, "Alterations in the rule".

86. [S. 308.] In default of payment within the period mentioned in the last preceding rule, the deposit may, if the Court thinks fit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, be forfeited to the Government, and the property shall be re-sold, and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold.

Alteration in the rule.—The words "may, if the Court thinks fit," have been substituted for the word "shall." See notes below.

Forfeiture of deposit to Government.—The old section provided that the deposit "shall be forfeited to Government." This provision led to hardship in certain cases (y). To obviate the hardship, the words "may, if the Court thinks fit," have been substituted for the word "shall." It is no longer obligatory upon the Court to forfeit the deposit.

Calcutta High Court—Original side—rule not applicable.—This rule does not apply to sales under a mortgage decree on the original side of the Calcutta High Court for provision has been made for the conduct of such sales by rules framed under s. 122 (z).

87. [S. 309.] Every re-sale of immovable property, in default of payment of the purchase-money within the period allowed for such payment, shall be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation in the manner and for the period hereinbefore prescribed for the sale.

Fresh notification.—A fresh notification is only necessary where the re-sale is in default of payment of the purchase money within the time allowed by r 85. No fresh notification is necessary for a re-sale in default of payment of the 25 per cent deposit required by r 84 (a).

111 of co-sharer to have preference

O. rr. 8

See as to movable property, r 77, sub r (3) above

Co sharer.—A defeasible title to a share is not sufficient to support a claim for pre-emption under this rule (b). The Allahabad High Court has held under the rules framed under s 70 of the Code that where a sale is confirmed by the Collector in favour of one bidder, in default of appearance of the other bidder of the same sum claiming a preferential right as a co-sharer, he is not entitled to maintain a separate suit to set aside the sale by virtue of a right of pre-emption (c).

89. [S. 310A.] (1) Where immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, any person, either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court,—

Application to set aside sale on deposit

(a) for payment to the purchaser, a sum equal to five per cent of the purchase-money, and

(b) for payment to the decree holder, the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder

(2) Where a person applies under rule 90 to set aside the sale of his immovable property, he shall not, unless he withdraws his application, be entitled to make or prosecute an application under this rule

(3) Nothing in this rule shall relieve the judgment-debtor from any liability he may be under in respect of costs and interest not covered by the proclamation of sale

Alterations in the rule —

- 2 The words, "unless he withdraws his application," and the words, "or prosecute," in sub r. (2) are new See notes below under the head "Sub rule (2)"

Scope of the rule.—This rule provides the only means by which a judgment debtor can get rid of a sale which has been duly carried out (d) After the interest of a third party, i.e., the purchaser, intervenes, the decree cannot be adjusted. See notes under O 21, r 2, "Adjustment not certified if third party's interest intervenes".

Immovable property.—This rule applies only to sales of immovable property A simple mortgage bond is movable, and not immovable property The provisions of this rule do not therefore apply to a sale of such a bond in execution of a decree (e)

This rule applies to sales under money and mortgage decrees.—This rule obviously applies to sales in execution of decrees for the payment of money The transfer into this Code (see O 34) of the sections of the Transfer of Property Act relating to decrees in suits on mortgage shows that the provisions of the present rule apply also to sales under mortgage decrees Hence a mortgagor whose immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property passed under O 34, r 5, may apply under this rule to set aside the sale (f) As to the old section it was doubtful whether its provisions applied to mortgage decrees, the High Court of Calcutta holding that they did not (g), while the other Courts holding that they did (h) The Calcutta decisions are no longer law The rule applies also to sales under a mortgage decree on the original side of the Calcutta High Court (i) But the rule though well adapted to Mofussil practice is not in its terms applicable to the practice of the Original side of the High Court where no amount is specified in the proclamation as that for the recovery of which the sale is ordered and therefore it must be applied not strictly but as fairly as possible to cases on that side (j)

Whether the rule applies to other sales.—This rule has been held to apply when the sale is under a decree passed in terms of an award made on an order of reference in a partition suit (k) The High Court of Madras has held that this rule does not apply to a sale by a receiver of partnership property for realising the partnership assets (l) The rule does not apply to a sale of a tenure under the Bengal Tenancy Act so arrears of rent see s 174 of that Act

Who may apply under this rule.—Under the old section, the application to set aside a sale could only be made by "any person whose immovable property has been sold under this Chapter," that is, the Chapter relating to execution Those words, it was held, included—

- (1) the judgment debtor,
- (2) any person, though not a party to the suit or decree (m), whose interests were affected by the sale

A person whose interests were not affected by the sale could not, it was held, apply under that section (n)

Under the present rule, the application to set aside a sale of immovable property held in execution of a decree may be made by—

- (1) any person owning the property, or
- (2) any person holding an interest in such property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale

“Any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale”—Under the old section the application to set aside a sale on deposit could be made by ‘any person whose immovable property has been sold’. Under the present rule the application may be made by ‘any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale’. There is no doubt that a judgment debtor, whose immovable property has been sold may apply under this rule as a ‘person owning such property’. But what if the judgment debtor has transferred his interest in the property? Now a judgment debtor may transfer his interest in the property before the Court sale or he may do so after the Court sale. Is he entitled after a transfer in either case to apply under this rule? Is the transferee from the judgment debtor entitled to apply under this rule? The cases give the following answers to these questions

First, as regards transfers before Court sale—Under the old section there was a conflict of decisions whether, if the judgment debtor had transferred his interest in the property before the Court sale, the transferee could apply under that section to have the same set aside. In Srinivasa v Ayyathoras (o) for instance, it was held that the transferee could apply, while the contrary was held in Ramchandra v Rakhmabas (p). Under the present rule it is clear that a transferee acquiring title before the Court sale is competent to apply to have the sale set aside. Further it was held under the old section that a judgment debtor who had effected a private sale of his property subsequently to the attachment and prior to the Court sale was entitled to apply under that section to set aside the sale (q). This ruling is still good law (r).

Next as regards transfers after Court sale—A obtains a decree against J. In execution of the decree certain immovable property belonging to J is sold to C for Rs 166. After the sale to C but before its confirmation under r 92 J sells the property to P for Rs 500. It is clear that if J could apply under this rule to have the sale set aside on payment of the amount mentioned in the rule, the pecuniary benefit to him would be great, for while the property was sold at the Court sale for Rs 166, it fetched Rs 500 at the private sale. Is J, the judgment debtor, entitled to apply under this rule to have the sale set aside? Is P, the purchaser at the private sale, entitled to apply under this rule? It was at one time held by the Allahabad High Court (s) that neither the judgment debtor nor the subsequent purchaser was entitled to apply under this rule, the reason for the decision being that the present rule gives the judgment debtor a last chance of saving the property for himself and that it was no part of the intention of the Legislature that the property should be saved for persons to whom it might be privately sold after the Court sale had taken place. The Madras High Court held in its earlier decisions that the judgment debtor is not entitled to apply (t), but that the subsequent purchaser is entitled to apply (u). The ground of these decisions was that the judgment debtor having parted with his interest in the property before the application under this

- 2 The words, "unless he withdraws his application," and the words, "prosecute," in sub r. (2) are new. See notes below under the heading "Sub rule (2) "

Scope of the rule.—This rule provides the only means by which a judgment debtor can get rid of a sale which has been duly carried out (d). After the interest of a third party, i.e., the purchaser, intervenes, the decree cannot be adjusted. See note under O 21, r 2, "Adjustment not certified if third party's interest intervenes"

Immovable property.—This rule applies only to sales of immovable property. A simple mortgage bond is movable, and not immovable property. The provisions of this rule do not therefore apply to a sale of such a bond in execution of a decree (e)

This rule applies to sales under money and mortgage decrees.—This rule obviously applies to sales in execution of decrees for the payment of money. The transfer into this Code (see O 34) of the sections of the Transfer of Property Act relating to decrees in suits on mortgage shows that the provisions of the present rule apply also to sales under mortgage decrees. Hence a mortgagor whose immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property passed under O 34, r 5, may apply under this rule to set aside the sale (f). As to the old section it was doubtful whether its provisions applied to mortgage decrees, the High Court of Calcutta holding that they did not (g), while the other Courts holding that they did (h). The Calcutta decisions are no longer law. The rule applies also to sales under a mortgage decree on the original side of the Calcutta High Court (i). But the rule though well adapted to Mofussil practice is not in its terms applicable to the practice of the Original side of the High Court where no amount is specified in the proclamation as that for the recovery of which the sale is ordered and therefore it must be applied not strictly but as fairly as possible to cases on that side (j)

Whether the rule applies to other sales.—This rule has been held to apply when the sale is under a decree passed in terms of an award made on an order of reference in a partition suit (k). The High Court of Madras has held that this rule does not apply to a sale by a receiver of partnership property for realising the partnership assets (l). The rule does not apply to a sale of a tenure under the Bengal Tenancy Act for arrears of rent. See s 174 of that Act.

Who may apply under this rule.—Under the old section, the application to set aside a sale could only be made by "any person whose immovable property has been sold under this Chapter," that is, the Chapter relating to execution. Those words, it was held, included—

- (1) the judgment debtor;
- (2) any person, though not a party to the suit or decree (m), whose interests were affected by the sale.

A person whose interests were not affected by the sale could not, it was held, apply under that section (n).

Under the present rule, the application to set aside a sale of immovable property held in execution of a decree may be made by— O. 21

- (1) any person owning the property, or
- (2) any person holding an interest in such property by virtue of a title acquired before the sale

"Any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale"—Under the old section the application to set aside a sale on deposit could be made by 'any person whose immovable property has been sold'. Under the present rule the application may be made by "any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale". . 21, r. 89 rule and so having no interest in the property at the date of the application, he was not entitled to apply under this rule, unless the sale to the subsequent purchaser was by an unregistered document in which case the judgment debtor would continue to be the owner of the property and could as such owner apply under this rule (v). On the other hand, the High Court of Bombay held that the judgment debtor is entitled to apply under this rule, but that the subsequent purchaser is not so entitled (w). The ground of the Bombay decision is that as the sale to the auction purchaser has not been confirmed the judgment debtor remains the owner of the property, and that he is therefore entitled to apply as a 'person owning the property' within the meaning of this rule. As regards the Allahabad decision, the Bombay Court said that the object of the present rule was not only to preserve the property in the hands of the judgment debtor, but also to save the judgment debtor from monetary loss that might be occasioned to him if the

an interest in the property at the date of the application under this rule, and that it was sufficient if he owned the property or had an interest in it at the date of the Court-sale. The High Court of Patna has followed the Bombay decision (x). In a later case a Full Bench of the Madras High Court overruled its earlier decisions, and agreeing with the Bombay and Patna decisions held that the judgment debtor was entitled to apply, but that the subsequent purchaser was not entitled to apply under this rule (y). The Allahabad High Court also has overruled its earlier decisions and held that the judgment debtor can apply, but not the purchaser (z). The High Court of Calcutta has held that the subsequent purchaser is not entitled to apply under this rule. The reason given is that the interest, if any, which he held in the property was not by virtue of a title acquired by him 'before' the execution sale, and consequently he is excluded by the very terms of the rule (a). Where two applications are made one by the judgment debtor and another by a mortgagee from him after the sale, and each applicant deposits a portion of the aggregate amount required by this rule, the deposits and the applications may be treated as made by the judgment debtor and therefore within this rule (b).

Miscellaneous cases—Under the old section it was held that a Mahomedan co heir was not entitled to apply to set aside the sale (c). This would seem to be the law under the present rule. But it was held that a co sharer was entitled to apply (d). It is doubtful whether a co sharer is a person entitled to apply under this rule. A coparcener in a joint and undivided Hindu family can apply for he has an interest in the whole of the property (e). It has been held under the old section that a durmukardar can apply (f). The purchaser of a portion of a non transferable occupancy is entitled to apply although the landlord is the auction purchaser (g).

A person who has obtained a mortgage of the property before the Court-sale may apply under this rule (h). So also a usufructuary mortgagee in possession (i). But a person who has merely agreed to purchase the property cannot apply under this rule, for a mere agreement for sale of immovable property does not of itself create any interest in the property (j). For the same reason an attaching creditor cannot apply (k), and a person who is out of possession of the property and is litigating to establish his right thereto, is not entitled to apply under this rule (l). A lessee subject to whose interest the property is sold is entitled to apply under this rule (m).

Unsuccessful application to stop sale.—The mere fact that the applicant had already unsuccessfully applied to stop the sale on payment of the decretal amount and had also put in a claim petition under r 58 above, does not preclude him for applying under this rule (n).

Deposit without application.—An application is necessary before the Court can act under this rule. Mere deposit of the required amount is not enough (c) See notes below. "Limitation"

Deposit of five per cent.—The deposit of 5 per cent must be made even though the purchaser may be the decree holder. The 5 per cent is intended as a compensation and costs he may have incurred (q), but in another case another Judge of the same High Court has held that nothing more than the prescribed five per cent. can be claimed by the purchaser (r)

C. 21, r. 89 Court refused to set aside the sale (v) In a Rangoon case the deposit was one day late and a few rupees less than the full amount and the Court said that the small shortage did not vitiate the deposit but that the delay could not be excused (w)

Conditional deposit.—A deposit under this rule must be unconditional (x)

"For payment to the decree holder"—Rateable distribution.—The expression 'decree holder' in sub sec (1) (b) refers only to the decree holder for satisfaction of whose decree the sale has been ordered. It does not include other decree holders who would have a right to claim rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under sec 73. It is therefore enough if the judgment debtor deposits such amount as is sufficient to satisfy the claim of the decree holder at whose instance the property was sold. It is not necessary that the amount deposited by him should be sufficient to satisfy decrees held against him by other decree holders also (y). Again, when a judgment debtor deposits in Court a sum sufficient to satisfy the claim of the person for satisfaction of whose decree the property was ordered to be sold, the other decree holders are not entitled to a rateable distribution thereof under sec 73 (z). The Patna High Court, however, holds that as money paid into Court is paid upon the terms of the Code, whatever they may be, a deposit under this rule is liable to rateable distribution (21)

Deposit under this rule, a voluntary payment.—A deposit under this rule is a voluntary payment and cannot be treated as a payment under coercion. If A by mistake sells the land of B, B may ignore the sale and resist dispossession by the auction purchaser. But if B chooses to set aside the sale by making a deposit under this rule he cannot claim a refund (a)

Sub rule (2).—Where a judgment debtor applies to set aside a sale under this rule and subsequently applies under r 90 also, he is not entitled to prosecute the application made by him under this rule (b). But the Court should in such a case put the judgment debtor to his election whether he would withdraw the application under r 90, and if he refuses to do so, it should dismiss the application made under this rule (c). An application, though purporting to be made under r 90, may not really be one under that rule, but one under sec 47, the provisions of sub r (2) do not apply to such a case (d)

"Court"—The word Court in this rule means the Civil Court, and not, as in the case of decrees transferred to the Collector for execution, the Collector (e). Hence an application under this rule must be made to the Court and not to the Collector. If the judgment debtor applies to the Collector, he cannot stop limitation running against him. It is the duty, however, of the Collector in such a case to return the application to the applicant and tell him that the application should be made to the Court (f). See notes, 'Limitation' below

Sale of property by separate lots.—Where property is sold in separate lots in execution of a decree, it is not open to the judgment debtor to apply under this rule sale of all the lots (g). But in an Allahabad case (h) where the decree was satisfied by the sale of several lots and the last lot sold was a house for Rs. 1,000, the sale of the house was set aside on the judgment-debtor depositing Rs. 1,000 for the decree holder and Rs. 50 for the auction purchaser. This was however explained in a later case as having proceeded on the supposition that the decree holder had received the proceeds of the other sales (i).

Necessary parties.—The auction purchaser as well as the decree holder are necessary parties to an application under this rule (j) See the proviso to r 92, sub r. (2) The Allahabad High Court has said that the rule imposes a duty on the Court to give them notice but that they are not necessary parties (k)

Limitation.—The application under this rule must be made within 30 days from the date of sale [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art 166] The Court has no power to extend the time under sec 148 (l) The words "date of sale" means the date on which the property is put up for sale and knocked down to the highest bidder, and not the date on which the sale is confirmed by the Court [r 92] (m) At the same time it is to be remembered that if for any reason the final bid remains unaccepted for some days by the sale officer, the period of 30 days does not begin to run until such bid is accepted by him (n)

The words "may apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court," etc., show that not only the application, but also the deposit, should be made within 30 days from the date of sale. It is not enough to make the application within 30 days (o). Nor is it enough to make the deposit within 30 days (p). Both the application and the deposit must be made within 30 days from the date of sale.

The law does not impose any period of limitation for the issue to the parties of notice of the deposit (a)

Appeal.—The law as regards appeal from an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale passed on an application under the present rule is quite different from what it was under the Code of 1882. Such an order under the Code of 1882 [s 310A] was not appealable as an order for it was not included in the list of appealable orders given in sec 588 of that Code [now O 43, r 1]. But the order being one made in a proceedings in execution (r), it was appealable as a decree, if the question as to whether the sale should be set aside or not was one between “the parties to the suit or their representatives” within the meaning of sec 244 [now s 47] (s), and in such a case a second appeal also lay from the order passed in first appeal. And it was held that if the question was one between the judgment debtor and the decree holder, in other words, between the parties to the suit, it did not cease to be so merely because the auction purchaser (not a party to the suit) was interested in the result (f). But where the question was one between a party to the suit on the one hand and the auction purchaser on the other, there was a conflict of opinion as to whether an appeal lay from the order (u) In those cases, however, in which it was held that no appeal lay from the order, it was held that the party aggrieved might apply to the High Court for a revison of the order (v) Under the present Code, however, an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale [r 92] passed on an application under this rule [r 89], is appealable as an order, for it is included in the list of appealable orders given in O 43, r 1 [see cl (j)] The result is that under the present Code only one appeal lies from such an order (w) [see s 101 sub s (1) (i) and sub s (2)] An auction purchaser also can now appeal from an order under this rule Only one appeal is allowed in his case also (x)

Dismissal of application for default—Where an application under this rule is dismissed for default of appearance and the Court refuses to restore it to the file, no appeal lies from the order refusing to restore the application (y)

Revision—The High Courts of Patna (z), and Madras (a) have held that the High Court can interfere in revision if an application under this rule has been dismissed on the ground that it was made by a person who was not entitled to apply, the reason given being that the decision in such a case is the very foundation of jurisdiction and that the action of the lower Court in refusing to deal with the application in such a case, amounts to a refusal to exercise jurisdiction within the meaning of sec 115 On the other hand the Allahabad High Court has held that it could not interfere in revision when the question was whether the applicant was a person entitled to apply (b) But it interfered in revision when the question was whether a sale of a single lot could be set aside (c)

No revision lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule on an erroneous view of the law of limitation (d), but the High Court interfered in revision when the lower Court dismissed an application on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to extend time for the payment of poundage (e)

90. [S. 311.] (1) Where any immovable property has been sold in execution of a decree, the decree holder, or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it

Provided that no such sale be set aside on the ground of irregularity or fraud unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud

1. The words, "or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution," have been added to give effect to decisions under the old section. See notes below, "Who may apply under this rule."
2. The words, "any person whose interests are affected by the sale," have been substituted for the words "any person whose immovable property has been sold under this chapter." The expression now substituted is what the Courts held in several cases was the meaning of the expression "any person whose immovable property has been sold." See notes below, "Who may apply under this rule."
3. The words "or fraud" have been added after the word "irregularity." The addition of these words affects the right of appeal as will be seen from the notes below under the head, "Fraud in publishing or conducting sale."
4. The words, "unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied," have been substituted for the words "unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court." This alteration has been made with a view to set at rest the doubts raised under the old section as to the evidence upon which the Court could act. See notes below, "Unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied," etc.

Who may apply under this rule.—The only persons that may apply under this rule are—

- (1) the decree holder,
- (2) any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets under sec 73,
- (3) any person whose interests are affected by the sale—an expression obviously of a wider import than the expression 'a person holding an interest in the property sold' used in r 99 above (f).

The words "any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets" did not occur in the old section, but it was held that the expression "decree holder" included such person (g).

The expression "any person whose interests are affected by the sale," has been substituted for the expression "any person whose immovable property has been sold," which occurred in the old section. The latter expression was construed as meaning "any person whose interests are affected by the sale" in the Full Bench case of Asmunnissa Begum v Ashruff Ali (h), and this interpretation has now been substituted for the original expression. Where an application, therefore, is made by a person other than a decree holder or one entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, such person must be one whose interests are affected by the sale. It cannot be said of a person claiming by title paramount to the judgment debtor that his interests would be affected by the sale, inasmuch as his title to the property cannot be affected by the sale, whether it were regular or irregular. Hence a person who claims to be a purchaser of immovable property from the judgment debtor prior to the attachment cannot apply under this rule, for the sale being prior to the attachment, his interest cannot be legally affected by the sale (i). It has similarly been held that where joint Hindu family property is sold in execution of a decree against a member of the joint family, another member claiming the whole property on the death of the judgment-debtor by survivorship is not entitled to

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the expression 'persons whose interests are affected by the sale' is not limited to persons whose proprietary or possessory title is affected by the sale and that it includes persons whose pecuniary interest is affected by the sale Hence it has been held that a decree holder who has attached the property of the judgment-debtor in execution of his decree has such interest as would entitle him to apply under this rule to set aside a sale of the property held in execution of a decree obtained by another creditor even though he has lost his right to rateable distribution (q) But a plaintiff who has obtained an attachment before judgment is not entitled to apply under this rule (r) In a later decision the Calcutta High Court said that this was too narrow an interpretation of the rule and held that a plaintiff who had obtained, before the sale, an attachment before judgment and then after the sale, a decree, is entitled to apply (r1), the same view is adopted by the High Court of Madras (s)

Auction purchaser—In a case under sec 311 of the Code of 1882, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an auction purchaser was not entitled to apply under that section as he was not a person whose immovable property has been sold within the meaning of that section (t) There is a conflict of opinion whether an auction purchaser is entitled to apply to have the sale set aside under the present rule He is so entitled if he is a person whose interests are affected by the sale within the meaning of this rule The High Court of Madras has held that he is entitled to apply under this rule The Court said If an auction purchaser's interests are affected by an order setting aside the sale, it is difficult to see why his interests are not also affected by the sale (u) The Madras High Court has held that a judgment debtor may apply although he has been adjudged insolvent (u1) The High Court of Patna has dissented from this view, and held that an auction purchaser is not entitled to apply under this rule In the view taken by that Court the expression 'interests affected by the sale' means interests in the property existing before the sale" (c) The Allahabad High Court has declined to follow the Patna decisions, and has held that an auction purchaser is entitled to apply under this rule. The Court said "In the ordinary use of the word ['interests'] in the English language it is a term covering every sort of interest recognized by law, such as, in the case of an auction purchaser, liability to pay the money, liability to complete and take a transfer of the property, and from his own point of view the necessity of finding the necessary funds, and also the necessity of carrying through to fruition the provisional contract into which he has entered. If the expression were 'interests in the property,' it would of course be confined to an interest in the property sold, antecedent to the sale. If the word were merely 'interest' without the plural and without the words 'in the property,' it might be possible to hold that the word 'interest' was confined to interest in the thing itself at the time of the sale. But that is not the expression" (c) In a later decision the Patna High Court has resiled from its former decisions, and agreeing with the Allahabad High Court holds that an auction purchaser is entitled to apply (c1) The High Courts of Rangoon and Lahore and the Sind Court have held that an auction purchaser is not entitled to apply under this rule (z)

Defaulting auction purchaser—A defaulting auction purchaser is under a contingent liability and is entitled to apply to set aside a resale after his default (y)

Persons entitled to rateable distribution—It is expressly provided by this rule that a person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets under sec. 73 is entitled to apply under this rule. An attaching judgment-creditor who has a right of rateable distribution is entitled to apply (z). But a person who is not entitled to a rateable distribution, as where the application for execution is not made until after the receipt of assets by the Court, cannot come in under this rule as a person whose interests are affected by the sale" (a)

Conditions of applicability of the rule—A sale held in execution of a decree can be set aside under this rule only if the following conditions concur—

- 1 There must be a material irregularity or fraud
- 2 The material irregularity or fraud must be in publishing or conducting the sale
- 3 The applicant must have sustained substantial injury
- 4 Such injury must have been caused by reason of the material irregularity or fraud

Material irregularity in publishing or conducting sale.—The following are instances of material irregularity in publishing or conducting a sale in execution—

- 1 Service of notice under O 21, r 22, upon a wrong person as legal representative, see notes to O 21, r 22, Notice to wrong person as legal representative"

O. 21, r. 90

Omission to attach property before sale—The question whether an irregularity in attaching the property, as where the attachment is not properly notified, affects the sale or is merely an irregularity in "conducting the sale" within the meaning of this rule, was left open by the Judicial Committee in the undermentioned case (2). In Mahadeo v Bhola Nath (a) a full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad held that a regularly perfected attachment is an essential preliminary to sales in execution of simple decrees for money, and when there has been no such attachment the sale is not merely voidable but void. In a later case (b), however, the same High Court held that the omission to attach immoveable property prior to sale amounted to a material irregularity in "conducting the sale" within the meaning of this rule. An attachment, it was said, is a step towards the sale of the judgment debtor's property. As to Mahadeo's case the Court said that it could no longer be treated as good law since the decision of the Privy Council in Tassaddul v Ahmed (c) where it was held, with reference to a proclamation of sale issued in violation of the provisions of O 21, r 68, that it was nothing more than a material irregularity and did not ipso facto vitiate the sale. On the other hand, in a case decided under the Code of 1859, the High Court of Calcutta expressed the opinion that an attachment is not an essential preliminary in sales in execution of decrees: it is merely a measure for the protection of the decree holder and the purchaser of the property, and the absence of attachment is not therefore, an objection which the judgment debtor is competent to raise (d). This view was adopted by the same High Court in later cases where it was held that after a sale had been confirmed, the sale was not to be considered a nullity merely by reason of the absence of attachment (e). The same High Court has held that where an objection that the property proclaimed for sale has not been attached is taken before the sale, it is the duty of the Court not to proceed with the sale and to direct an attachment (f). In the more recent case of Panchanan v Kunja (g), decided in 1917, the High Court of Calcutta held that the Court had no jurisdiction to sell property in execution which had not been duly attached and that omission to attach rendered the sale void ipso facto. This decision it is submitted is not good law and it has been dissented from in a Calcutta case decided in 1930 (h). In a Bombay case where the property was sold without previous attachment, the sale was set aside, the case being treated as one under s 47 (i). The High Court of Rangoon has held that though the absence of attachment is an irregularity, it does not render the sale absolutely void but merely voidable and, further, that the objection as to the absence of attachment does not come within this rule, but within s 47 the substantial question involved being one of notice to the judgment debtor (j). The High Court of Patna has taken the same view as was taken in the earlier Calcutta decisions and refused to follow the decision in Panchanan's case. In the Patna case the application to set aside the rule was made before the sale was confirmed while in the Calcutta cases the application was made after the sale was confirmed. As to this the Patna Court said that it did not make any difference, because if the sale was in fact a nullity by reason of the absence of attachment, its subsequent confirmation could not make it valid (k). The High Court of Madras has held that a sale without an attachment is an irregularity within this rule (l).

Fraud in publishing or conducting sale.—The words or fraud are new. The present rule requires that an application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale should be made under this rule. In the absence of these words in the corresponding s 311 of the Code of 1882 it was held that an application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud could only be made under s 214 [now s 47]. Had it not been for the newly added words or fraud in this rule, such applications would have to be made under s 47 of this Code. The result would then have been, as under the Code of 1882, that a second appeal would lie from an order made on such application for an order made under s 47 has the force of a decree (s 2) and every decree is open to second appeal subject of course, to the provisions of ss 100 102(n). The effect of adding the words or fraud into the present rule is to transfer applications setting up fraud in publishing or conducting the sale from s 47 to the present rule. The result is that no second appeal will now lie from an order made on such application whether the order be one setting aside the sale or refusing to set aside the sale for the order is no longer one under s 47, but one under r 92, and only one appeal lies from an order made under r 92(n) [see O 43 r 1, cl (j), and s 104, sub-s (2)]. It will thus be seen that the object of The Legislature in requiring applications to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale to be made under the present rule, instead of under s 47, is to exclude the right of second appeal from orders made on such applications with a view to bring proceedings on such applications to a speedy termination. But though only one appeal is allowed, an appeal now lies in every case from an order made under this rule and r 92, even at the instance of an auction purchaser though he may not be a party to the suit in which the sale was held. See notes to s 47, 'Execution purchaser,' ill (1), p 178.

It may here be observed that in a large majority of reported cases in which applications were made to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale the applicant was the judgment debtor and the fraud alleged was that the decree holder had fraudulently kept him in the dark by omitting to serve him with the writ of attachment (r 54) and that no copy of the proclamation of sale was affixed on the property so as to inform him of the execution proceeding. In all these cases it was also alleged that the fraud first became known to the judgment debtor when the auction purchaser instituted proceedings to recover possession of the property. In some of these cases, again, the auction purchaser was charged with collusion with the decree holder in perpetrating the fraud upon the judgment-debtor (o). The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lalla Bunsedhar v. Koonwar Bindesree (p) have a material bearing on the question now under consideration (q). In that case their Lordships said that where a sale is impeached on the ground of fraud a difference must be made between an innocent purchaser and one tainted by the fraud which has brought about the execution sale. "The question is in the former case, which of two innocent parties shall suffer

O. 21, r. 90 in the latter whether he who has wronged the other party shall be allowed to enjoy the fruits of his wrong-doing. A Court exercising equitable jurisdiction may withhold its sanction in the one case and yet set aside the sale with or without terms in the other.

A charge against a decree holder that he and those who acted in concert with him have acted in such a manner as to prevent the best price from being obtained does not of itself amount to a charge of fraud within the meaning of this rule. A obtains a decree against B and obtains leave to bid at the auction sale. A then enters into an agreement with a third person that if that person would not bid at the sale A would sell the property to him if A should become the purchaser. The property is put up for sale and purchased by A. The agreement does not constitute a fraud within the meaning of this rule though it may have discouraged competition at the auction (v). In a recent case Sir Lawrence Jenkins C.J., said: "The word fraud is very loosely used in this class of cases [that is cases under r. 90] any irregularity is taken to be fraud with the consequences that such a finding involves. But a finding of fraud should be reserved for that which is dishonest and morally wrong and it is not sufficient to come to a roguish general finding of fraud actual fraud must be established (s). The Patna High Court has recently held that where after the publication of the sale proclamation the decree-holder agrees with the judgment-debtor not to hold the sale if payment was made within a specified time and he then proceeds to sell the property in contravention of the agreement it amounts to fraud in the matter of the conduct of the sale within the meaning of this rule (t)."

In a recent case (u) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "Charges of fraud and collusion must no doubt be proved by those who make them—proved by established facts or inferences legitimately drawn from those facts taken together as a whole. Suspicious and surmises and conjecture are not permissible substitutes for those facts or those inferences but that by no means requires that every puzzling artifice or contrivance resorted to by one accused of fraud must necessarily be completely unravelled and cleared up and made plain before a verdict can be properly found against him. If this were not so many a clever and dexterous knave would escape."

Substantial injury—Material irregularity or fraud standing by itself is no ground for setting aside a sale. There must be substantial injury occasioned by the irregularity or fraud. If the Court fails to find both irregularity and injury occasioned thereby, it is bound to dismiss the application. In other words if there be material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale but no substantial loss is occasioned by the irregularity or fraud the applicant is not entitled to have the sale set aside (v). The substantial injury alleged by the applicant must be proved it cannot be assumed from the mere fact that there was a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale. The mere fact that there was a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale will not justify the Court in assuming that substantial injury has thereby been caused. Hence although an applicant under this rule may prove material irregularity such as non specification of Government revenue in the proclamation of sale (w) or inadequate description of the property sold (x) or the holding of the sale before the expiry of the period prescribed by r. 68 above (y), the sale will not be set aside unless it is proved that had it not been for the irregularity the property would have realized a substantially larger price than what it did at the sale. rule applies where the sale is impeached on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting the sale O. 21,

" Unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity or fraud — These words form part of the proviso to the rule. The language of the proviso to this rule differs from the language of the proviso to the corresponding section 311 of the Code of 1882, which was as follows —

" But no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity "

The words " unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied " have been substituted for the words " unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court " The object and effect of these alterations will now be explained

If an applicant under this rule proves " material irregularity " or " fraud " and if he also proves gross inadequacy of price realised at the sale, in other words if he proves " substantial injury ",—is this sufficient to entitle him to succeed under this rule ? The answer is that it is not—he must also prove that the inadequacy of the price has been caused " by reason of " the material irregularity or fraud. Now there are two possible modes in which this may be proved, namely —

- (a) by direct evidence, that is, by evidence connecting the material irregularity or fraud with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect or
- (b) by circumstantial evidence, that is, by evidence of circumstances which will warrant the necessary or at least reasonable inference that the inadequacy of price was the result of the irregularity or fraud complained of

In Tassadul v Ahmad (z) where a sale was sought to be set aside under the corresponding s 311 of the Code of 1882 on the ground that it was held before the expiration of 30 days from the date of the proclamation (r 68), their Lordships of the Privy Council, after referring to that section, said —

" In the application of that section [that is, s 311] it was incumbent on the respondents to have proved that they sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity. They gave no such evidence, and it would be extremely improbable that injury could have happened from the non compliance with the strict letter of s. 290 [now r 68]. Their Lordships cannot accept the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner that loss is to be inferred from the mere fact that a sale was held without full compliance with the provisions of s 290 [now r 68]. The section [that is s 311] clearly contemplates direct evidence on the subject "

Relying on the above passage, the High Court of Allahabad held that to succeed under that section the applicant must prove that the inadequacy in the sale price was the result of a material irregularity, and that the co existence of an irregularity and an inadequacy however gross in the sale price was not sufficient in the absence of direct evidence to establish a casual connection between the one and the other. In other words, the applicant must connect the irregularity with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect by means of direct evidence (a). On the other hand, it was held by the High Courts of Madras (b) and Calcutta (c) that the fact that the inadequacy of price fetched at the sale was the result of the irregularity complained of might be established either by direct

O. 21, r. 90 evidence, or might be inferred when such inference was reasonable having regard to the nature of the irregularity and the extent of the inadequacy. As regards the words "direct evidence" the High Court of Calcutta said that their Lordships meant by that expression that there must be evidence showing that substantial injury was the necessary result of the irregularity complained of (d).

The distinction between the Allahabad decisions on the one hand and the Madras and Calcutta decisions on the other may be explained by an illustration. In execution of a decree obtained by A against B, B's one fourth share in certain property is sold for Rs 200. B seeks to set aside the sale alleging that the property was sold at an adjourned sale that no hour was fixed for the sale as required by r 69 that consequently there were only three bidders at the sale, and that owing to that circumstance the property fetched the grossly inadequate price of Rs 200. It is proved that the hour to which the sale was adjourned was not fixed, in other words, material irregularity is proved. Substantial injury is also proved by evidence of the sale of a share smaller than one fourth of the same property for Rs 4,000. The fact that there were only three bidders is also proved. In such a case the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta would under the old section set aside the sale on the ground that the paucity of bidders could reasonably be ascribed to the non specification of the hour, and the low price could reasonably be inferred from the fact of the paucity of bidders (e). The High Court of Allahabad, however, would not set aside the sale on such an inference. That Court would require direct evidence to show that the paucity of bidders was due to the non specification of the hour and that the inadequacy of price was due to paucity of bidders.

The words "unless upon the facts proved the Court is satisfied" have been substituted in the proviso to give effect to the Madras and Calcutta decisions. What is necessary under the proviso is that the Court should be satisfied that the applicant has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity or fraud complained of, and if the facts proved to do so satisfy the Court, that is sufficient. It is no longer necessary to connect the irregularity or fraud with the inadequacy of price as cause and effect by means of direct evidence. The result is that a sale will be set aside under the present rule if there be either direct evidence connecting the irregularity with the inadequacy of price or evidence of circumstances which will warrant the necessary or at least reasonable inference that the inadequacy was the result of the irregularity complained of and the Allahabad High Court now follows this rule (f). If there be no such evidence the sale must be confirmed (g). If the property has been sold in lots and the irregularities have led to an inadequate price being realized for some lots the sale as to all the lots must be set aside (h).

The mere fact that the property realised at the auction sale only one half of the value entered in the proclamation of sale was held to be no ground for setting aside the sale under this rule (i).

Necessary parties—The decree holder is a necessary party to an application under this rule (j). Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of opinion whether an auction purchaser was a necessary party to an application under the corresponding s 312 (k). Under the present Code the proviso to rule 92 would seem to imply that the auction only imposes a duty on the Court to give him notice (l) Where property is bought at a Court sale by A in the name of B, A the beneficial owner, is not a necessary party to an application under this rule. Hence if an order is made setting aside the sale in a proceeding to which B was a party it will bind A, though A was not joined as a party to the proceeding (m)

Bona fide purchaser for value without notice—If the conditions of this rule are satisfied, the sale will be set aside though the purchaser may be a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale (n)

Waiver and estoppel—If the judgment-debtor knowing of an irregularity or fraud lies by and allows the sale to proceed without objection, he will be estopped from impeaching the sale on the ground of irregularity or fraud though substantial injury has been caused. In Arunachellam v. Arunachellam (o) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: 'It would be very difficult indeed to conduct proceedings in execution of decrees by attachment and sale of property if the judgment-debtor could lie by and afterwards take advantage of any misdescription of the property attached, and about to be sold, which he knows well, but of which the execution creditor or decree holder might be perfectly ignorant—that they should take no notice of that, allow the sale to proceed, and then come forward and say the whole proceedings were vitiated.' In Girdhari Singh v. Hurdeo Narain (p), the notification of sale had stated the Government revenue to be Rs. 3,146 instead of Rs. 8,146 the sale being fixed for the 5th of August 1872. The judgment-debtor applied for a postponement of sale and stated that he wished to raise money to pay off the decree holder, and in his petition he added: 'Under such circumstances it is prayed that a postponement of one month be granted, the attachment and the notification of sale being maintained.' Upon that petition the sale was postponed for one month without the issue of a second notification. The decretal amount not having been paid the property was put up for sale. The judgment debtor applied to set aside the sale on the ground that the Government revenue was not correctly stated and that the property therefore fetched a very low price. Upon these facts their Lordships of the Privy Council held that though the misstatement of the Government revenue amounted to a material irregularity in publishing the sale, the judgment-debtor was not entitled to have the sale set aside, as the petition amounted to an admission on his part that the notification was correct, or that at any rate there was no such mistake or irregularity as would be likely to mislead. But it is different where an application for a postponement of sale does not contain any such admission and, moreover, it is refused. In such a case there is no estoppel (q). The objection as to irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale cannot be taken for the first time in the Court of appeal (r), but it may be so taken if no fresh evidence is necessary (s).

21, r. 90 Where no application is made under this rule.—If no application is made to set aside a sale under the present rule, an order must be made confirming the sale, see r 92 below

Evidence to be taken—If the application raises questions of fact the Court should give the parties proper opportunity to adduce evidence (f)

Questions outside the scope of this rule.—The question whether the decree in execution whereof the property was sold was obtained without service of summons on the judgment debtor (u), or whether the decree was obtained by fraud (v); or whether the Court had jurisdiction to sell the property (u), or whether the sale was brought about by the fraud of the decree holder the auction purchaser and others (x) is outside the scope of this rule See note below "application to set aside sale on other grounds"

Objections not raised in the application.—The Court should not under this rule consider objections not expressly taken in the application (y)

Compromise of proceedings under this rule—It has been held by the Patna High Court that a proceeding to set aside a sale under this rule is not a proceeding in execution within the meaning of O 23, r 4, but that it is a proceeding in the suit itself. A compromise therefore of proceedings under this rule may be recorded under O 23, r 3 (z). But this decision is of doubtful authority.

Whether O 9 applies to applications under this rule—The provisions of O 9 do not apply to proceedings in execution and therefore do not apply to an application under this rule (a). See notes to O 9 r 9, and O 9, r 13 "Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution See also notes below, Appeal"

Suit to set aside sale on ground of material irregularity—Where an application made by a judgment-debtor under this rule to set aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale is disallowed and the sale is confirmed under r 92 (1) he is precluded by virtue of the provisions of r 92 (3) from bringing a suit to set aside the sale on the same grounds (b). But this rule does not apply in the case of revenue sales in Madras (c).

Limitation—An application under this rule must be made within 30 days from the date of sale [Limitation Act 1908, Sch I, art 166]. But where the irregularity affecting the sale has by the fraud of the decree holder or other parties to the sale been kept concealed from the judgment debtor he is entitled to apply under this rule whether the sale has been confirmed or not, and the time for making the application is to be computed from the date when the fraud first became known to him (d).

The point of distinction as regards limitation between the old law and the new law is this, that while under the Code of 1882 the application to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud in publishing or conducting a sale had to be made under s 244 (now s 47) and the period of limitation for the application was 3 years from the date of sale (e), such

A compromise therefore of proceedings under this rule may be recorded under O 23, r 3 (2). But this decision is of doubtful authority.

Whether O 9 applies to applications under this rule—The provisions of O 9 do not apply to proceedings in execution and therefore do not apply to an application under this rule (a). See notes to O 9, r 9 and O 9, r 13, 'Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution' See also notes below, 'Appeal'

Suit to set aside sale on ground of material irregularity—Where an application made by a judgment debtor under this rule to set aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale is disallowed and the sale is confirmed under r 92 (1) he is precluded by virtue of the provisions of r 92 (3) from bringing a suit to set aside the sale on the same grounds (b). But this rule does not apply in the case of revenue sales in Madras (c).

application must now be made under the present rule, and the period of limitation is 30 days from the date of sale. See notes below, 'Application to set aside sale on other grounds.'

Applications to set aside sale on other grounds—When the auction purchaser is the decree holder himself and when an application is made to set aside the sale on a ground other than that covered by the present rule and no application has been made under r 89, the case falls within s 47, and hence there is a second appeal (f). Similarly where a judgment debtor applies to have a sale set aside not only on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale, but also on the ground that no notice of the application for attachment and sale was given as required by O 21, r 22, the case falls within s 47, and hence there is a second appeal (g). Neither this rule nor r 92 applies to such cases. It must, however, be noted that where an application really comes under the present rule, the mere mention of s 47 in the application will not make it an application under s 47 for the purposes either of an appeal or of limitation (h). See note above, "Questions outside the scope of this rule."

Joinder of claim under this rule with claim under sec 47—A claim to set aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity under this rule may be combined with a claim for a declaration that the sale is a nullity as the decree was passed after the death of the judgment debtor (i).

Rule not applicable to cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act—In cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act where a tenure is sold for arrears of rent an application for setting aside a sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud must be made under s 174 of that Act which excludes O 21, r 90. That section allows one appeal and in the case of small tenures the right of appeal is restricted by s 153 of that Act to cases where a question of title is involved. See in this connection the undernoted case (j).

Whether sale can be challenged by way of defence in a suit for possession—See notes to r 92 below under the same head.

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order under this rule and rule 92 setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale [O 43, r 1, cl (j)]. But no second appeal lies from the order of the first appellate Court (l). See s 104, sub sec (2), and notes above, "Fraud in publishing or conducting sale." Nor does an appeal lie under the Letters Patent from the order of the first appellate Court (h). See notes above, "Application to set aside sale on other grounds." The insolvency of the judgment debtor does not incapacitate him from filing or presenting an appeal (i).

It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an appeal lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule for default, the reason given being that the effect of such an order is to confirm the sale under r 92 (m). A fortiori it is so if the order dismissing the application for restoring the original application on the file also confirms the sale (n). These decisions were doubted in a later case (o) which held that

0. 21, 90, 91 an order of dismissal by default is not a confirmation of the sale and does not preclude the party from making a fresh application, while a dismissal on the merits, or when the applicant does not appear and the opposite party does appear is appealable under O 43 r 1(j). The case last cited was dissented from by the same High Court in Ansarali v Bhim Sankar (p), where it was held that an appeal lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule for default, where such dismissal is for the non appearance of the applicant or for non appearance of both the parties and even when no formal order is recorded under r 92 confirming the sale.

91. [S. 313.] The purchaser at any such sale in execution of a decree may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

Application by purchaser to set aside sale on ground of judgment debtor having no saleable interest

Application to set aside sale—This rule enables the auction purchaser to proceed by an application to set aside the sale where the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property. It does not apply where a sale is sought to be set aside by an auction purchaser on the ground that he had been induced by misrepresentation or concealment to buy the property for more than its real value (r). The remedy of the purchaser in such a case is by a regular suit. As to refund of purchase money when a sale is set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor has no saleable interest see r 93 below. In two Madras cases a decree holder brought to sale and purchased property which did not belong to the judgment debtor and notified satisfaction of his decree. On discovering his mistake he filed a fresh execution application, but the Court held that he could not execute again without first setting aside the sale under this rule (s).

No saleable interest—This rule applies only where a judgment debtor has no saleable interest at all. Hence the rule does not apply if the judgment debtor has even a partial interest in the property sold (t) however small that interest may be. In other words a purchaser is not entitled to have a sale set aside under this rule on the ground that the judgment debtor had a saleable interest in a very small portion of the property, and had no saleable interest in the major portion of the property (u). For the purposes of this rule a mortgagor has a saleable interest in the mortgaged property even though a decree has been obtained by the mortgagee for the enforcement of the mortgage (v) and although the amount due under the mortgage exceeds the value of the property (w).

The decision that a sale cannot be set aside under this rule if the judgment debtor has any interest in the property does not apply to a sale under a mortgage decree held under the rules of the Calcutta High Court and the conditions of sale framed thereunder. Therefore a purchaser under such a sale is entitled to have it set aside if the property

Withdrawal of purchase money by auction purchaser from Court—See notes to s. 171, case (bb)

Compensation for loss of part of property bought at a Court sale—A purchaser who is deprived of a part of the property bought at a Court sale is not entitled to compensation as against the judgment debtor for the loss of that part. The principle is that apart from the case provided for by this rule and apart from fraud a purchaser at an auction sale must abide by his bargain. What is sold and bought is the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in the property. The Court which sells the property does not guarantee the title and the maxim Caveat emptor applies. It does not make any difference that the property was sold in execution of a mortgage decree and the mortgagee himself is the purchaser (y). See notes to r. 94 below, "What passes at a Court sale."

92. [Ss. 312, 314.] (1) Where no application is made under rule 89, rule 90 or rule 91, or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute.

(2) Where such application is made and allowed, and where, in the case of an application under rule 89, the deposit required by that rule is made within thirty days from the date of sale, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale :

Provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby.

(3) No suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made.

The case last cited was dissented from by the same High Court in Anwarali v Bhim Sankar (p) where it was held that an appeal lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule for default, where such dismissal is for the non appearance of the applicant or for non appearance of both the parties and even when no formal order is recorded under r 92 confirming the sale.

91. [S. 313.] The purchaser at any such sale in execution of a decree may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

Application by purchaser to set aside sale on ground of judgment-debtor having no saleable interest

Application to set aside sale—This rule enables the auction purchaser to proceed by an application to set aside the sale where the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property. It does not apply where a sale is sought to be set aside by an auction purchaser on the ground that he had been induced by misrepresentation or concealment to buy the property for more than its real value (r). The remedy of the purchaser in such a case is by a regular suit. As to refund of purchase money when a sale is set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor has no saleable interest, see r 93 below. In two Madras cases a decree holder brought to sale and purchased property which did not belong to the judgment debtor and notified satisfaction of his decree. On discovering his mistake he filed a fresh execution application, but the Court held that he could not execute again without first setting aside the sale under this rule (s).

No saleable interest—This rule applies only where a judgment debtor has no saleable interest at all. Hence the rule does not apply if the judgment-debtor has even a partial interest in the property sold (t), however small that interest may be. In other words a purchaser is not entitled to have a sale set aside under this rule on the ground that the judgment debtor had a saleable interest in a very small portion of the property, and had no saleable interest in the major portion of the property (u). For the purposes of this rule, a mortgagor has a saleable interest in the mortgaged property, even though a decree has been obtained by the mortgagee for the enforcement of the mortgage (v) and although the amount due under the mortgage exceeds the value of the property (w).

The decision that a sale cannot be set aside under this rule if the judgment debtor has any interest in the property does not apply to a sale under a mortgage decree held under the rules of the Calcutta High Court and the conditions of sale framed thereunder. Therefore a purchaser under such a sale is entitled to have it set aside if the property

an order of dismissal by default is not a confirmation of the sale and does not preclude the party from making a fresh application, while a dismissal on the merits, or when the applicant does not appear and the opposite party does appear, is appealable under O 43, r 1 (j). The case last cited was dissented from by the same High Court in Ansarali v. Bhim Sankar (p), where it was held that an appeal lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule for default, where such dismissal is for the non appearance of the applicant or for non appearance of both the parties and even when no formal order is recorded under r 92 confirming the sale.

Revision—No revision lies from an order dismissing an application under this rule for default (g). See notes above "Appeal".

Appeal to Privy Council—See notes to r 92 under the same head.

91. [S. 313.] The purchaser at any such sale in execution of a decree may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.

Application by purchaser to set aside sale on ground of judgment-debtor having no saleable interest

Application to set aside sale—This rule enables the auction purchaser to proceed by an application to set aside the sale where the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property. It does not apply where a sale is sought to be set aside by an auction purchaser on the ground that he had been induced by misrepresentation or concealment to buy the property for more than its real value (r). The remedy of the purchaser in such a case is by a regular suit. As to refund of purchase money when a sale is set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor has no saleable interest, see r 93 below. In two Madras cases a decree holder brought to sale and purchased property which did not belong to the judgment debtor and notified satisfaction of his decree. On discovering his mistake he filed a fresh execution application but the Court held that he could not execute again without first setting aside the sale under this rule (s).

No saleable interest—This rule applies only where a judgment debtor has no saleable interest at all. Hence the rule does not apply if the judgment debtor has even a partial interest in the property sold (t), however small that interest may be. In other words a purchaser is not entitled to have a sale set aside under this rule on the ground that the judgment debtor had a saleable interest in a very small portion of the property, and had no saleable interest in the major portion of the property (u). For the purposes of this rule, a mortgagor has a saleable interest in the mortgaged property even though a decree has been obtained by the mortgagee for the enforcement of the mortgage (v) and although the amount due under the mortgage exceeds the value of the property (u).

The decision that a sale cannot be set aside under this rule if the judgment debtor has any interest in the property does not apply to a sale under a mortgage decree held under the rules of the Calcutta High Court and the conditions of sale framed thereunder. Therefore a purchaser under such a sale is entitled to have it set aside if the property

Compensation for loss of part of property bought at a Court sale—A purchaser who is deprived of a part of the property bought at a Court sale is not entitled to compensation as against the judgment debtor for the loss of that part. The principle is that apart from the case provided for by this rule and apart from fraud a purchaser at an auction sale must abide by his bargain. What is sold and bought is the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor in the property. The Court which sells the property does not guarantee the title and the maxim Caveat emptor applies. It does not make any difference that the property was sold in execution of a mortgage decree and the mortgagee himself is the purchaser (y). See notes to r 94 below, "What passes at a Court sale"

92. [Ss. 312, 314.] (1) Where no application is made under rule 89, rule 90 or rule 91, or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute.

(2) Where such application is made and allowed, and where, in the case of an application under rule 89, the deposit required by that rule is made within thirty days from the date of sale, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale:

Provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby.

(3) No suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made.

Court as belonging to the insolvent is entitled to bring a suit to establish his title to the property, though his claim has been disallowed by the Insolvency Court. The present rule is no bar to such a suit (i)

Whether an execution sale can be challenged by way of defence in a suit for possession—Where a judgment-debtor does not question the validity of a sale under r 90 above, and a suit is brought by the auction purchaser against him for possession, it is not competent to him to challenge the sale in that suit. The penalty imposed on a negligent judgment-debtor is set out in r 92, and it is that the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. This amounts to a judicial determination that none of the objections exists on which the validity of the sale could have been questioned (j). The dismissal, however, of an application made by a judgment-debtor under r 90 does not preclude him, in a suit for possession by the auction purchaser, from pleading by way of defence that the property sold in execution of a mortgage decree passed against him and bought by the purchaser was not included in the mortgage suit or decree, but was fraudulently inserted in the sale certificate (k)

Sale by receiver in a partnership action—A sale by a receiver under the directions of the Court given under a preliminary decree in a suit for dissolution of partnership is not a sale in execution of a decree. The provisions of the Code relating to execution sales do not apply to such a sale (l)

debtor had no saleable interest at all if the judgment debtor had some saleable interest in the property however small he could not by suit any more than by application obtain a refund of the purchase money in proportion to the extent to which the judgment debtor had no interest (r). It was further held having regard to the words and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it which occurred in the second paragraph of sec 315 that the cause of action did not arise and the period of limitation for a suit under that section did not commence until the purchaser was deprived of the property sold to him (r). It was also held that the purchaser was entitled to proceed by way of suit even after rateable distribution against those among whom the purchase money was distributed (x). It was further held that a suit would lie even after confirmation of the sale if the purchaser was after confirmation deprived of the property as the result of a suit by the lawful owner (y).

The second and fourth paragraphs of sec 315 of the Code of 1882 have now been omitted. The words may be enforced which occurred in sec 315 are not reproduced in the present rule. The present rule says that if an application is made by the auction purchaser under r 91 to set aside the sale—and such application must be made within 30 days from the date of sale—and the sale is set aside under r 92 the purchaser is entitled to an order for a return of the purchase money. The result therefore under the present Code is that if the purchaser does not apply under r 91 to set aside the sale, or if an application is made but it is disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale under r 92 (1). If an order is made confirming the sale, the purchaser is precluded by r 92 (3) from bringing a suit to set aside the order confirming the sale. And it has been held by all the High Courts (z) except the Oudh Court that under the present Code an auction purchaser is not entitled as he was under the Code of 1882 to bring a regular suit for a return of the purchase money in cases where the judgment debtor has no saleable interest in the property unless he can bring himself within the equitable principles which justify a suit for money had and received to his use (a). The result of these decisions is that if in ignorance of the true facts the purchaser fails to make the application to set aside the sale under r 91 within the period of limitation, he can get no relief and the judgment debtor is entitled to take credit for the price of property not belonging to him. This may at first sight seem inequitable but the explanation is that while in a private sale there is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor, there is no such covenant either by the decree holder or by the Court in the case of a sale in execution of a decree, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to Court sales. The right now given to the purchaser being a creation of the or when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which was purported to be sold, and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase money (with or without interest as the Court may direct) from any person to whom the purchase money has been paid

The repayment of the said purchase money and of the interest (if any) allowed by the Court may be enforced against such person under the rules provided by this Code for the execution of a decree for money "

The second and fourth paragraphs of sec 315 have been omitted in the present section Further the words, "shall be entitled to an order for repayment," have been substituted for the words, "shall be entitled to receive back," which occurred in the third paragraph

No saleable interest—An auction purchaser may under r 91 apply to set aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold If the sale is set aside, he may apply under this rule for an order for repayment of his purchase money But no sale can be set aside under r 91 nor can any repayment be ordered under this rule if it is found that the judgment debtor had some saleable interest in the property (q) The reason is that in the case of a sale under a decree of the Court there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or by the Court as there is in the case of private sales T all risks and all defects in the is not entitled to any refund, all Rules 91 and 93, however, confer upon him a statutory right to a return of the purchase money in such cases (r)

Suit for return of purchase money where no saleable interest—The Code of 1859 did not contain any express provision for a return of the purchase money to the auction purchaser if it turned out that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property at all Hence it was held that the auction purchaser was not entitled to a return of the purchase money even if the judgment debtor had no saleable interest (s) The right to a return of the purchase money was first given by sec 315 of the Code of 1877. That section was in terms similar to sec 315 of the Code of 1882 Under the Code of 1882 it was held by all the High Courts (t), following a Full Bench ruling of the Allahabad High Court (u) that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree could maintain a suit against a decree holder for recovery of the purchase money, if it turned out that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, and that he was not limited to the special procedure in the execution department mentioned in that section This view was based principally upon the words "may be enforced" which occurred in the last paragraph of sec 315 It was also held under that section that whether the purchaser proceeded by an application for execution under that section or by a regular suit, he was not entitled to receive back his purchase money unless the judgment debtor had no saleable interest at all, if the judgment debtor had some saleable interest in the property, however small, he could not by suit, any more than by application, obtain a refund of the purchase money in proportion to the extent to which the judgment debtor had no interest (r). It was further held, having regard to the words, 'and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it,' which occurred in the second paragraph of sec 315, that the cause of action did not arise and the period of limitation for a suit under that section did not commence until the purchaser was deprived of the property sold to him (r). It was also held that the purchaser was entitled to proceed by way of suit even after rateable distribution against those among whom the purchase money was distributed (r). It was further held that a suit would lie even after confirmation of the sale if the purchaser was after confirmation deprived of the property as the result of a suit by the lawful owner (y).

The second and fourth paragraphs of sec 315 of the Code of 1882 have now been omitted. The words "may be enforced" which occurred in sec 315 are not reproduced in the present rule. The present rule says that if an application is made by the auction purchaser under r 91 to set aside the sale—and such application must be made within 30 days from the date of sale—and the sale is set aside under r 92, the purchaser is entitled to an order for a return of the purchase money. The result, therefore, under the present Code is that if the purchaser does not apply under r 91 to set aside the sale, or if an application is made but it is disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale under r 92 (1). If an order is made confirming the sale, the purchaser is precluded by r 92 (3) from bringing a suit to set aside the order confirming the sale. And it has been held by all the High Courts (z) except the Oudh Court that under the present Code an auction purchaser is not entitled as he was under the Code of 1882 to bring a regular suit for a return of the purchase money in cases where the judgment debtor has no saleable interest in the property unless he can bring himself within the equitable principles which justify a suit for money had and received to his use (a). The result of these decisions is that if in ignorance of the true facts the purchaser fails to make the application to set aside the sale under r 91 within the period of limitation, he can get no relief and the judgment debtor is entitled to take credit for the price of property not belonging to him. This may at first sight seem inequitable but the explanation is that while in a private sale there is, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor, there is no such covenant either by the decree holder or by the Court in the case of a sale in execution of a decree, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to Court sales. 21, r. 93 statute, the remedy to enforce that right must be confined to that prescribed by the statute. That remedy is to apply under r 91 to set aside the sale, and if the sale is set aside, to apply for a return of the purchase money under r 93. If the Court passes an order refusing to set aside the sale, he may appeal from the order under O 43, r 1 (j), the order being one made under r 92. The judgment of the appellate Court is final, there being only one appeal from such order. He cannot, as stated above, bring a regular suit to set aside the sale and for a refund of the purchase money as he could under the Code of 1882 (b).

As said above the Oudh Chief Court gives a different exposition of the law on this point. According to that Court, although there is no warranty of title in Court sales yet an auction-purchaser who finds that the judgment debtor has no saleable interest has a right of suit against the decree holder because the attachment was made at the decree holder's risk. This right of suit is not a statutory right created by s 315 of the Code of 1882, but was recognized by that section. The amendment of that section by r 93 did not abolish that right. On the contrary the words "shall be entitled to an order of repayment" make it clear that the rule is limited to execution proceedings and to cases where the sale has been set aside and does not affect the substantive right of suit which is not a matter of procedure and therefore outside the scope of the Code. In the Oudh case the fact that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest was not discovered till three years after the sale, i.e., long after an application under r 93 was time barred, and yet the purchaser was allowed a refund of the purchase money (c).

But it is otherwise where the auction purchaser has bought the property in execution of a mortgage decree, and the decree as well as the sale is set aside in a separate suit brought by parties interested in the mortgaged property. In such a case, it has been held, that the auction purchaser is entitled to a return of the purchase money, his remedy being by an application under s. 47 above (d).

Where a sale took place and was confirmed by the Court before the present Code came into force, it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the right of the purchaser must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Code of 1882, and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to maintain a regular suit for a return of the purchase-money if the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property (e)

Suit for return of purchase money where sale set aside on ground of material irregularity—Where a sale is set aside on the ground of material irregularity under rr 90 and 92, the auction purchaser may bring a suit for a refund of the purchase money. Such right exists independently of the Code. The mere use of the expression 'order' in this rule has not the effect of taking away that right. (f)

Interest—The Court has power by the express terms of this rule to award interest on the purchase money (g)

Limitation—The period of limitation for an application under this rule is 3 years from the accrual of the right under art 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (A). The period of limitation for a regular suit in cases governed by the Code of 1882, to recover back the purchase money is 6 years from the accrual of the right under art 120 of that Act (A).

"Be entitled to an order."—When an order is made for the execution of a decree, it may be executed in the manner prescribed for the execution of a decree.

94. [S. 316.] Where a sale of immovable property becomes absolute, the Court may grant a certificate specifying the property sold and the name of the person who at the time of the sale declared to be the purchaser. Such certificate shall be valid from the day on which the sale became absolute.

Certificate to purchaser

Old section—This rule corresponds with the first part of s. 316 of the Code of 1882. The second part of that section, relating to the vesting of title, has been replaced by s. 65 of this Code with an important alteration as regards the time when the title vests in the purchaser.

Purchaser's title.—See s. 65 and notes thereto.

The Court shall grant a certificate—The provision of this section is mandatory (j).

Certificate of sale—A sale certificate does not transfer the title. It is only a certificate of the transfer (l).

Certificate to legal representative—Where the purchaser is dead, the certificate may be granted to his legal representative (l). See s. 146 above.

What passes at a Court sale—As regards private sales, there is an implied warranty of a contract to the contrary, an implied covenant for title by the vendor as provided by the Transfer of Property Act 1882, s. 55 sub-s. (2). But as regards sales under a decree of the Court there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or by the Court. Rule 13 of this Order shows that the decree holder, when applying for execution, has only to specify the judgment debtor's share or interest in the property "to the best of his belief," and "so far as he has been able to ascertain the same." Rule 12 shows that the proclamation only professes to specify the particulars prescribed by that rule including the property to be sold and the judgment debtor's interest therein "as fairly and accurately as possible." Hence what passes to a purchaser at a Court sale is the "right, title and interest" of the judgment debtor, whatever that interest may be. In other words, a purchaser at a Court sale buys the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment debtor's title except where it is found that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest at all (m). In the latter case, the purchaser may apply to have the sale set aside under r. 91 of this Order and he may then apply under r. 93 for a return of the purchase money. If the purchase money has been distributed amongst the creditors of the judgment debtor under s. 73, he may follow the money in their hands (n). But,—and this is an important consequence of the purchaser buying only the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor,—the sale will not be set aside, if the judgment debtor has even a partial interest in the property, nor will the purchaser be entitled to a refund of the purchase money to the extent to which the judgment debtor had no

Where a sale took place and was confirmed by the Court before the present Code came into force it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that the right of the purchaser must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Code of 1882, and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to maintain a regular suit for a return of the purchase-money if the judgment debtor had no saleable interest in the property (e).

Suit for return of purchase money where sale set aside on ground of material irregularity—Where a sale is set aside on the ground of material irregularity under rr 90 and 92, the auction purchaser may bring a suit for a refund of the purchase money. Such right exists independently of the Code. The mere use of the expression "order" in this rule has not the effect of taking away that right (f).

Interest—The Court has power by the express terms of this rule to award interest on the purchase money (g).

Limitation—The period of limitation for an application under this rule is 3 years from the accrual of the right under art 181 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (h). The period of limitation for a regular suit in cases governed by the Code of 1882, to recover back the purchase money is 6 years from the accrual of the right under art 120 of that Act (i).

* Be entitled to an order"—When an order is made under this rule it may be executed in the manner prescribed for the execution of decrees. See s 36 above

94. [S. 316.] Where a sale of immovable property has become absolute, the Court shall grant a certificate specifying the property sold and the name of the person who at the time of sale is declared to be the purchaser. Such certificate shall bear date the day on which the sale became absolute.

Certificate to purchaser

Old section—This rule corresponds with the first part of s 316 of the Code of 1882. The second part of that section, relating to the vesting of title, has been reproduced in s 65 of this Code with an important alteration as regards the time when the property vests in the purchaser.

Purchaser's title—See s 65 and notes thereto

The Court shall grant a certificate—The provisions of this rule are mandatory (j)

Certificate of sale—A sale certificate does not transfer the title. It is evidence of the transfer (k)

Certificate to legal representative—Where the purchaser is dead, the certificate may be granted to his legal representative (l). See s 146 above

What passes at a Court sale—As regards private sales there is in the absence of a contract to the contrary an implied covenant for title by the vendor as provided by the Transfer of Property Act 1882 s 53 sub s (2). But as regards sale under a decree of the Court there is no warranty of title either by the decree holder or by the Court. Rule 13 of this Order shows that the decree holder, when applying for execution, has only to specify the judgment debtor's share or interest in the property "to the best of his belief, and so far as he has been able to ascertain the same." Rule 66 shows that the proclamation only professes to specify the particulars prescribed by that rule including the property to be sold and the judgment debtor's interest therein "as fairly and accurately as possible." Hence what passes to a purchaser at a Court sale is the right title and interest of the judgment debtor, whatever that interest may be. In other words, a purchaser at a Court sale buys the property with all risks and all defects in the judgment debtor's title except where it is found that the judgment debtor had no saleable interest at all (m). In the latter case, the purchaser may apply to have the sale set aside under r 91 of this Order and he may then apply under r 93 for a return of the purchase money. If the purchase money has been distributed amongst the creditors of the judgment debtor under s 73, he may follow the money in their hands (n). But—and this is an important consequence of the purchaser buying only the right, title and interest of the judgment debtor,—the sale will not be set aside, if the judgment-debtor has even a partial interest in the property, nor will the purchaser be entitled to a refund of the purchase money to the extent to which the judgment-debtor had no

1, r. 94 interest, unless the case be one of fraud (o) On the same principle a purchaser in execution of a money decree is bound by the estoppel which binds the judgment debtor whose interest he has purchased (p) The Madras High Court has held that he is not bound in all cases (q).

It has been stated above that what passes to a purchaser at a Court sale in execution of a money decree is the "right, title and interest" of the judgment debtor in the property sold To determine the nature and extent of the judgment debtor's right title and interest in the property sold, the test is as stated by Lord Watson in the course of the argument in Pettachi Chettiar v Chinnathambiar (r), what did the Court intend to sell, and what did the purchaser understand that he bought? These are questions of fact or rather of mixed law and fact, and must be determined according to the evidence in the particular case (s) This test was applied in Baltant v Hirachand (t), cited in the next following paragraph, and in Abdul Aziz v Appayyasami (u) cited in the notes below

Where a purchaser at a Court sale in execution of a decree against a member of a joint Hindu family buys 4 specific properties A, B, C and D, alleged to belong to him, and subsequently there is a partition decree by which properties A, B, X and Y are allotted to that member, the purchaser is entitled only to such of the properties as are common to the sale certificate and the share of that member under the decree, namely, properties A and B He is not entitled to have the equivalent of properties C and D out of properties X and Y (v)

A is entitled to 10 annas share in a village Out of this share he mortgages 6 annas to B In execution of a simple money decree obtained by C against A, a 4 annas share is attached and sold The presumption is, in the absence of specific indications to the contrary, that the share sold was the share which was not mortgaged (w)

Sale on the original side—In the case of a sale held by the Registrar on the original side of the Calcutta High Court the purchaser has a right of compensation for an error or misdescription of the property in the conditions of sale (x)

Sale in execution of a mortgage decree—Where mortgaged property is sold in execution of a mortgage decree obtained by the mortgagee against the mortgagor, the interest both of the mortgagor and mortgagee, passes to the purchaser (y)

Variance between proclamation of sale and sale certificate—O 21, r 66, requires that where property is ordered to be sold in execution of a decree, the proclamation of sale should "specify as fairly and accurately as possible the property to be sold" By the present rule it is provided that where property is sold, and the sale becomes absolute, the Court shall grant a certificate "specifying the property sold" It sometimes happens that the property as described in the certificate of sale is different from that described in the proclamation of sale In such a case the description of the property in the proclamation of sale is conclusive as to what was the subject matter of the sale. As stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Darmha v Jiban Ram (2), 'that which is sold in a judicial sale of this kind can be nothing but the property attached, and that property is conclusively described in and by the schedule to which the attachment refers,' that is, the schedule of the attached property in the proclamation of sale. Thus where a judgment debtor owned a mahal of which a 10 annas share was mortgaged and the proclamation of sale stated that what was to be sold was a 6 annas share in the mahal included in the mortgage but the purchaser obtained a certificate of sale in which the property described was a 6 annas share in the mahal not included in the mortgage, it was held that the sale certificate should be set aside. The Court has no power to grant a certificate in which the property described is different from that specified in the proclamation of sale (a). Similarly where the proclamation of sale stated that the whole interest of five brothers in a mortgaged property was to be sold, and by a mistake on the part of the officer in charge of the sale, the certificate of sale omitted to mention the names of four of them, it was held that what was sold to the purchaser was the property as described in the proclamation of sale, and not the property as erroneously described in the sale certificate (b). "The real question in such case, under the present Code of Civil Procedure, seems therefore to be what was the sale, i.e., what was bargained and paid for, and that must depend not on erroneous statements of what was offered for sale, but on what was actually offered for sale and bid for. What [is actually] offered for sale [is] determined by the order of the Court and the proclamation" (c).

Effect of new interpretation of law on sale—I purchased at a Court sale the 'right, title and interest' of B in an impartible zamindari. By the law as then interpreted, the holder of such a zamindari was only entitled to a life interest in the zamindari. [I must therefore be deemed to have purchased only the life interest of B.] Subsequently this interpretation of the law was reversed by the Judicial Committee which decided that the holder of an impartible zamindari is entitled to an absolute interest in it and that such interest is alienable. The new interpretation does not entitle A to claim that what he purchased at the sale was the absolute interest of B (d).

Amendment of certificate of sale—A purchaser at a Court sale may apply to the Court for amendment of the sale certificate where the description of the property in the certificate differs from that in the proclamation. The Court may allow or refuse the amendment, but no appeal lies from the order in either case. Such an order is not appealable under s 104. Nor is it appealable as a decree under s 47 for the question cannot be regarded as one relating to the 'execution, discharge or satisfaction' of the decree, the decree being fully executed. The only question in such a case is whether the certificate given to the auction purchaser gives a right description of the property sold (e).

Limitation—The provisions of the Limitation Act do not apply to an application for a sale certificate. The reason is that it is the duty of the Court on the sale becoming absolute to issue a sale-certificate and there is no duty imposed on the purchaser to apply for such a certificate. The action of the Court in granting the certificate is ministerial and not judicial. The Limitation Act does not apply to applications to the Court to do what it has no discretion to refuse, nor to applications for exercise of functions of a

It may be objected that a purchaser at a Court sale is not bound to apply for possession under this rule. He may at his option bring a regular suit for possession, the period of limitation for the suit being 12 years as stated above. When rule applies—The purchaser first makes an application to the Court by way of execution under rule 95 or 96. That application should not mention that any particular person is likely to resist. If the process of execution under these rules is resisted, it is then that an application under this rule should be made (n). O. 21, r. 97, 98 Regular suit—The decree holder may either resort to the summary remedy provided by this rule or he may bring a regular suit. Failure on the part of the decree holder to avail himself of the remedy under this rule does not deprive him of his right to bring a regular suit against the party obstructing execution of the decree (p). But if he applies under this rule and fails, the order against him is conclusive unless he brings a suit to establish his right to possession as provided by r 103 below. Such a suit must be brought within one year from the date of the order (q). See Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 11 A

Limitation—The period of limitation for an application complaining of resistance or obstruction to delivery of possession of immovable property decreed or sold in execution of a decree is 30 days from the date of the resistance or obstruction (Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 167)

Fresh application for delivery of possession—Under the present Code a holder of a decree for possession of immovable property applies for possession under O 21, r 35, while an auction purchaser applies for possession, under O 21, r 95. The present rule deals with obstruction or resistance in obtaining possession. An important question that arises in this connection is whether if a decree holder or auction purchaser who is obstructed or resisted in obtaining possession omits to apply under this rule within 30 days from the date of obstruction or resistance, the only other remedy open to him is to proceed by a regular suit or whether he is entitled to a fresh writ of possession. It has been held by the High Courts of Madras (r) and Patna (s), that he is entitled to make a fresh application for delivery of possession and to a fresh warrant for possession. On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad (t), that he is not so entitled and that his only remedy is by a regular suit. The Bombay High Court holds that he is entitled to a fresh warrant for delivery of possession but that if the resistance is shewn to be by the same person and in the same character the application will be barred by Art 167 of the Limitation Act (u).

Whether O 9 applies to proceedings under this rule—The provisions of O 9 do not apply to proceedings under this rule. See notes to O 9, r 9, "Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution."

98. [Ss. 329, 330.] Where the Court is satisfied that the resistance or obstruction was occasioned without any just cause by the judgment-debtor or by some other person at his instigation, it shall direct that the applicant be put into possession of the property, and where the applicant is still resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession, the Court may also, at the instance of the applicant, order the judgment-debtor, or any person acting at his instigation, to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days.

When this rule applies—This rule deals with two cases, namely, where the obstruction is occasioned without just cause (1) by the judgment debtor, or (2) by some other person at his instigation. No order can be made under this rule if the obstruction is caused by a person other than the judgment-debtor, unless the Court is satisfied that the person was acting at the instigation of the judgment debtor (r)

Purchaser from a judgment-debtor pending attachment.—The High Court of Madras has held that proceedings can be instituted under this rule against a purchaser from a judgment-debtor pending attachment, though such a purchaser is not expressly mentioned in the rule. The reasons given are (1) that this rule is to be read with r 95 which expressly provides for the institution of proceedings against such a purchaser under that rule, and (2) that such a purchaser is a "representative" of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of s. 146, so that proceedings which can be instituted against a judgment-debtor can also be instituted against him (w).

Presidency Small Cause Court.—This rule applies to proceedings under Chapter 7 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, relating to recovery of possession of immovable property, by virtue of s. 48 of that Act (x)

Appeal.—See notes to s. 47, "Questions between the auction purchaser on the one hand, etc." See also notes to r 101 below under the head "Appeal." Section 107 excludes an appeal from an order under this rule (y)

99. [Cf. Ss. 331, 335.] Where the Court is satisfied that the resistance or obstruction was occasioned by any person (other than the judgment-debtor) claiming in good faith to be in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, the Court shall make an order dismissing the application.

Resistance or obstruction
by bona fide claimant

When this rule applies.—The present rule deals with two cases of claimants in good faith, namely, (1) persons claiming on their own account, and (2) persons claiming on account of some person other than the judgment debtor.

Person other than judgment debtor claiming to be in possession on his own account.—If the resistance is by a person claiming bona fide to be in possession on his own account the question is not within the purview of s. 47 and this rule applies (z). The word "possession" as used in this rule is not limited to actual physical possession. It includes also constructive possession, such as possession through tenants or servants. Hence a landlord who is in possession of a property through his tenant is a "person in possession of the property on his own account" within the meaning of this rule (a)

Where in a suit brought by a plaintiff against two defendants, a decree is passed by consent against one of them only, the other defendant is not a judgment debtor. He is a "person other than the judgment debtor" within the meaning of this rule (b)

Subtenants.—A lets his house to B. B sublets the house to C. A files a suit against B for possession and obtains a decree against B. C is not joined as a party to the suit. C obstructs A in obtaining possession of the property. Can C be said to be in possession on "his own account" within the meaning of this rule? The High Court of Bombay has held that C is not a person claiming to be in possession on his own account as his title is derived from the judgment-debtor (c) The Calcutta High Court also holds that C is not entitled to resist possession as he is bound by the decree and that there is no occasion for the landlord A to make an application under r 97 as he can evict C under r 35 (d) See note 'Bound by the decree' under r 35 above

The Bombay High Court has also held that C is not entitled to claim the benefit of the Bombay Rent Act against A, there being no privity of contract between him and A (e)

(2) The Court shall fix a day for investigating the matter and shall summon the party against whom the application is made to appear and answer the same.

Rules 100 and 101—These rules are to be read together

When this rule applies.—This rule refers to a person who has been dispossessed by an auction purchaser who has taken possession of the property through the Court. He complains to the Court of such dispossession, and the Court makes a summary investigation, and if it holds that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account and not on account of the judgment debtor, it directs under r 101 that possession be given back to the applicant. The party against whom the order is made may then institute a suit under r 103 to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property (f)

Claim may be barred by res judicata.—If the person who is dispossessed has before the sale unsuccessfully objected to the attachment under r 58 his only remedy is by suit and he cannot make an application under this rule (g) Similarly when a mortgagee obtained a decree for sale against three brothers who had mortgaged the property to him and impleaded the mother as lessee, the mother could not resist dispossession on the ground that she had inherited a share of another brother for this ground of defence should have been taken in the suit (A)

High Court has held that a purchaser from a judgment-debtor of a non transferable holding is also a representative and is not entitled to apply (j). But the Calcutta High Court has come to the opposite conclusion and says that so far as the decree holder is concerned he is a trespasser and is entitled to apply under this rule (k). Indeed Rankin, C.J., deprecates the use of the word 'representative' in this connection and treats the purchaser as entitled to apply as being a person in possession on his own account (l).

"Is dispossessed."—Where mere symbolical possession is delivered to the decree holder or purchaser under r 96, the person in possession cannot be said to be "dispossessed" within the meaning of this rule so as to entitle him to apply under this rule (m). It is only the delivery of actual possession (r 95) that can constitute dispossession within the meaning of this rule. A person who is in possession through his tenant will be said to be 'dispossessed' within the meaning of this rule, if the tenant is ousted from the property by the delivery of actual possession to the decree holder or purchaser (n).

Dispossession under order of Collector.—When a person has been dispossessed under an order made by the Collector to whom execution proceedings are transferred, he should apply to the Collector, and not to the Court, complaining of such dispossession. This rule has no application when execution has been transferred to the Collector (o).

Limitation.—The application under this rule must be made within 30 days from the date of the dispossession. Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 165. If the auction-purchaser has sold the property to a sub purchaser, the period of limitation is the same and does not run from the time when the party dispossessed had notice of the sub purchase (p).

Dismissal of application for default.—It was held by the Patna High Court in the undermentioned case (q) that where an application made under this rule by a person not bound by the decree is dismissed for default, the order may be set aside under O 9 r 9 and the application may then be reheard. But this decision was disapproved by a Special Bench of the same Court in a later case (r). See notes to O 9, r 9, "Whether this rule applies to proceedings in execution."

101. [Ss. 332, 335.] Where the Court is satisfied that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, it shall direct that the applicant be put into possession of the property.

"Was in possession on his own account."—The Bombay High Court has held that the rule does not apply to a member of a joint Hindu family as he is not in possession on his own account (s). On the other hand it has been held that the rule is comprehensive enough to include a claim by a member of a joint Hindu family and that the effect of the order is to restore him to joint possession (t).

O. 21, rr. 101-103 Ex parte order for delivery of possession—Where an order even though ex parte is made under rule 101, the remedy of the other party is by way of suit under rule 103 and not by proceedings under O 9 r 13. O 9 r 13 does not apply to execution proceedings in any event not to proceedings under rules 100 and 101 of the present Order (u). See notes to O 9 r 13. Whether this rule applies to execution proceedings.

Appeal—The Chief Court of the Punjab has held that no appeal lies from an order made under this rule (t). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Madras that where an application under r 100 is contested between persons who were parties to the suit or representatives of parties the case falls within sec 47 and an appeal lies from the order (u). The Madras decision assumes that questions as to possession under r 100 are questions relating to the execution discharge and satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of sec 47. Upon this point there is a conflict of decision. The matter is discussed fully in the notes to sec 47. Questions between the auction purchaser on the one hand and etc. It is submitted that r 103 excludes an appeal from the order.

102. [S. 333.] Nothing in rules 99 and 101 shall apply to resistance or obstruction in execution of a decree for the possession of immovable property by a person to whom the judgment-debtor has transferred the property after the institution of the suit in which the decree was passed or to the dispossession of any such person.

R is not applicable to transfer in pendente lite

If an order is made under r 99 or r 101 it is conclusive against the party against whom it is made unless he brings a suit to establish his right as provided by r 103 below. This rule provides that nothing in rr 99 and 101 applies to resistance by a transferee pendente lite from the judgment debtor. If an order is made in execution proceedings in such a case r 103 does not apply. The Oudh Court has held that where a transferee pendente lite pays off a prior usufructuary mortgage and enters into possession of the property and resists the decree holder in obtaining possession he must be treated in relation to his position as a purchaser from the possessory mortgagee and that the case falls within r 99 above and is not affected by the rule of pendente lite (z).

103. [S. 332, fourth para.; S. 335, second para.] Any party not being a judgment debtor against whom an order is made under rule 98, rule 99 or rule 101 may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, but, subject to the result of such suit (if any), the order shall be conclusive.

see 14 of the Limitation Act (y) If no suit is brought within the aforesaid period, the order will be conclusive (z)

This rule does not apply unless an order has been made under r 98, r 99 or r 101 Therefore where an application is made under r 97 or r 100, but the Court declines to pass any order upon the application thinking it best that the applicant should be referred to a separate suit, the present rule does not apply, and any suit which the applicant may subsequently institute for possession is not a suit under this rule, and it is not therefore governed by art 11A of the Limitation Act (a) Not only is it necessary that an actual order should have been made but the order must have been one made after investigation as contemplated by r 97, sub r (2) and r 100, sub r (2) An order dismissing an application for default of prosecution is not an order made after investigation The present rule, therefore, does not apply to such an order (b)

Scope of suit under this rule.—It must not be supposed that a suit under this rule is concerned only with actual possession at the date of the order The suit is to establish the right which the plaintiff claims to the present possession of the property, and this right may be established without showing that the plaintiff was in actual possession at the date of the order against him (c)

Suit by auction purchaser for possession under a different right.—An auction purchaser against whom an order is made under r 99 or r 101 may bring a suit under this rule to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property Where a suit is brought by him under this rule, the suit is one for possession under his auction purchase, and the cause of action in the suit is the adverse decision under r 99 or r 100 A suit under the present rule is quite irrespective of any other cause of action which such person apart from his character as auction purchaser may have against the opposite party It is, therefore, competent to the auction purchaser to abandon all his right in the auction sale including the right to bring a suit under this rule as auction purchaser and to bring a suit against the opposite party for possession upon a different title altogether To such a suit the provisions of the present rule do not apply, and the suit need not be brought within one year from the date of the order as required by art 11A of the Limitation Act (d)

Order dismissing application under rule 101.—A makes an application under r 100 The application is dismissed under r 101 A is a "party against whom an order is made under r 101," within the meaning of the present rule, though there is no express provision for dismissal of an application under r 101 (e)

Order dismissing an application under r 95.—An order dismissing an application under r 95 cannot be treated as an order under r 99 so as to attract the application of the present rule (f)

ORDER XXII

Death, Marriage and Insolvency of Parties.

1. [S. 361.] The death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate if the right to sue survives.

O. 22, r. 1 Application of order to appeals—The provisions of this order apply to appeals See sec 107, sub s (2) and r 11 below

Application of order to execution proceedings—The provisions of this order apply to execution proceedings except rr 3, 4 and 8 See r 12 below

' Right to sue —The right to sue means the right to bring a suit asserting a right to the same relief which the deceased plaintiff asserted at the time of his death (g)

In what cases the right to sue survives and in what cases it does not.—To answer this question, we may turn to the provisions of—

I the Indian Contract Act 9 of 1872 sec 37, and

II the Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925 sec 306

I Contract Act sec 37—Section 37 of the Contract Act runs as follows ' Promises bind the representatives of the promisors in case of the death of such promisors before performance, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract The words in italics refer to contracts involving the exercise of special skill or involving special personal confidence for these are not binding on the representatives of the promisors A promises to paint a picture for B by a certain day, at a certain price A dies before the day The contract cannot be enforced either by A's representatives against B or by B against A's representatives The reason is that the right to sue does not survive to or against the representatives of A

II Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925 sec 306—Section 306 of the Succession Act is as follows All demands whatsoever and all rights to prosecute or defend any action or special proceedings existing in favor of or against a person at the time of his decease survive to and against his executors or administrators, except causes of action for defamation assault as defined in the Indian Penal Code or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party, and except also cases where after the death of the party the relief sought could not be enjoyed or granting it would be nugatory

The effect of this section is that the right to sue does not survive in the following cases —

(i) Suits for defamation assault or other personal injuries not causing the death of the party [When death is caused by a personal injury, the legal representative of the deceased may sue the wrong doer for damages, see Act 13 of 1855]

(ii) Cases where after the death of the party, the relief sought could not be enjoyed or granting it would be nugatory

1 A sues B to recover possession of his minor daughter illegally detained by B B dies before decree The cause of action does not survive against B's representative and the suit abates Sharifa v Munekhan (1901) 20 Bom 574

2 A applies to be appointed guardian of the person of X The application is opposed by B who claims that he has been appointed guardian by the will of X's father B dies B's representative is not entitled to continue the proceedings A claim based on a personal trust does not survive to the claimant's representative Gangabai v Akashbhai (1899) 23 Bom 719 It is different, however where the claim is not based on a personal trust In such a case the legal representative of the deceased is entitled to continue the proceeding and to contend that the applicant is not a proper person to be appointed guardian Palamandi v Adailalam (1924) 17 Mad 459, 84 I C 613, (24) A M 484

4 The right of an unmarried Hindu daughter to claim the property left by her father to the exclusion of her married sister is not a personal right. If a suit is brought to establish such a right and the plaintiff dies pending the suit, the suit does not abate. Jadubansi v Mahpal Singh (1915) 38 All 111, 32 I C 101, dissenting from Balak Puri v Durga (1908) 30 All 49.

5 A suit by an idol is conducted by the shebait as representing the idol and does not abate on the death of the shebait. Keshab Pasi v Jyoti Prasad (1932) 36 C W N 810 139 I C 123 (72) A C 783.

6 A sues B for an injunction to restrain him from preventing A from enjoying the honour of standing at a particular place in temple. B dies pending the suit. The suit abates. Josiam v Swami (1910) 31 Mad 76 5 I C 937.

7 A a Sunni Mahomedan sues B for pre-emption. A dies pending the suit. It is not settled whether the right to sue is extinguished, or whether it survives to his heirs or legal representatives. Muhammad v Aiamat un Nissa (1897) 20 All 88, Sayyad Jiaul v Sitaram (1912) 36 Bom 144, 12 I C 720.

8 An action to recover damages for breach of contract of marriage abates on the death of the plaintiff. Balubhai v Nanalal (1920) 44 Bom 416, 55 I C 624.

9 A sues B for damages for malicious prosecution. A dies pending the suit. Does the right to sue survive? The Calcutta High Court has held that it does and that A's legal representative is entitled to continue the suit (h). On the other hand it has been held by the High Courts of Bombay (i), Patna (j), Madras (k), and Allahabad (l) that the right to sue does not survive and that the suit abates on A's death.

10 The right to sue for damages for breach of contract, the right to sue on a promissory note, the right to sue for a debt, the right to sue on a mortgage, the right to sue for wrong done to property, are all instances of rights that are not extinguished on the death of the plaintiff or defendant. In all these cases the suit does not abate on the death of the plaintiff or defendant. An agreement referring matters in dispute to arbitration is not in this country revoked by the death of any of the parties thereto before the award is made. Hence the question whether the legal representative of a deceased party is or is not entitled to enforce the contract to refer is a question which would depend upon whether the right dealt with in the reference is of a purely personal nature or is one which survives to the legal representative (m).

Partial abatement—A suit may abate as to one of the reliefs claimed and not as to another. Plaintiff sued under sec 92 for the removal of a trustee, and for the settlement of a scheme. On the death of the trustee the suit as for his removal abates, but not so far as it prayed for the settlement of a scheme (n). See notes to sec 92, Death of defendant trustee pending suit, on page 313 above.

O. 22, r. 1 Suit under O. 1, r. 8.—If a suit is filed by a plaintiff under O. 1, r. 8, on behalf of himself and numerous other persons in the same interest the right of suit is not personal to the plaintiff for any person interested has the right to intervene at any time under O. 1, r. 8(2). If a person interested who is not a party dies the suit does not abate. If the plaintiff or one of the plaintiffs appointed to conduct the suit dies, any other person interested may apply to carry on the suit. See note 'Abatement of suit' under O. 1, r. 8, at p. 467.

Suit by reversioner.—The right of intervention by a person interested as referred to in the preceding paragraph has been extended to the case of a suit by a presumptive reversioner to set aside an adoption by a Hindu widow. The Privy Council have held that such a suit is a representative suit for the object of the suit is to remove an apprehended injury to the interest of all reversioners presumptive and contingent. A contingent reversioner can apply at any time to be made a party. So on the death of the plaintiff the suit does not abate but may be carried on by the next reversioner (o). But the heir of the presumptive reversioner would not be entitled to continue the suit if the property would not be ancestral in his hands (p).

Application for probate.—The right of intervention by a person interested also applies to the case of an executor applying for probate of a will. The executor acts in a representative capacity on behalf of the whole class of persons, including himself, interested in having the will established. Therefore the Madras High Court have held that on the death of the executor, any person interested may carry on the proceedings with this difference that the prayer will be for letters of administration with the will annexed (q). The same view was taken in a Calcutta case (r). But in two earlier Calcutta cases (s) the right of the executor was treated as a personal right and the rule as to abatement was applied (s).

Death of either party pending appeal.—Where a decree has been passed for the plaintiff in a suit in which the right to sue would not have survived had the defendant died, and the defendant appeals and dies pending the appeal the appeal does not abate for his legal representative may carry on the appeal to get rid of the decree which would otherwise have to be paid out of the estate of the deceased (t). Again if damages have been awarded against a defendant and the plaintiff dies pending the appeal, the plaintiff's legal representative may carry on the appeal. But if after damages are awarded the defendant dies pending the appeal, the appeal abates for the plaintiff's claim in the appeal is to enforce the original right to sue (u). It follows that if the plaintiff's suit is dismissed and the plaintiff has appealed from the decree and either party dies pending the appeal, the appeal will abate (u).

The appeal does not abate and B may continue the appeal against A's representatives. If B dies pending the appeal B's representative may continue the appeal against A. In each case the appeal is to get rid of the decree.

1A. A sues B for damages for personal injury and obtains a decree for Rs. 2,000. B appeals from the decree on the ground that he is not liable. A files cross objections claiming enhanced damages. Pending the appeal B dies. B's legal representative may carry on the appeal to get rid of the decree. But A's cross objections claiming more damages on the original right of suit abates. Bhim Sain v. Mohammad Ali (1910) 11 Lah. 1120 I.C. 9 (2) A.L. 807.

2. A sues B for damages for defamation, but the suit is dismissed. A appeals from the decree. Pending the appeal A dies. A's representative is not entitled to prosecute the appeal. The reason is that the decree in the original suit being against A what is sought to be enforced in appeal is A's right to sue. But the right to sue in a suit for defamation does not survive to the legal representative, hence the appeal abates. Similarly if B dies pending the appeal A is not entitled to continue the appeal against B's representative not even if A's suit was dismissed with costs (x).

2. [S. 362.] Where there are more plaintiffs or defendants than one, and any of them dies, and where the right to sue survives to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or against the surviving defendant or defendants

Procedure where one of several plaintiffs or defendants dies and right to sue survives

Where the right to sue survives to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or against the surviving defendant or defendants, the Court shall cause an entry to that effect to be made on the record, and the suit shall proceed at the instance of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants.

Executors and trustees—Where a suit is brought by executors or trustees the right to sue on the death of any one of them survives to the surviving plaintiffs alone. Where a suit is brought against executors or trustees the right to sue survives against the surviving defendants alone. If one of four uralans or trustees representing a Malabar Devasom sues to redeem a kanom, the suit may continue in spite of the death of one of the other three uralans who are pro forma defendants for the devasom is sufficiently represented by the surviving uralans (y).

(2) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned, and, on the application of the defendant, the Court may award to him the costs which he may have incurred in defending the suit, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff.

Alterations in the rule.—

- 1 The words "so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned" in sub rule (2) are new. See notes below, "The suit shall abate so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned"
- 2 The words "the suit shall abate" in sub rule (2) have been substituted for the words "the Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate" which occurred in sec 366 of the Code of 1882. The latter words gave rise to a conflict of opinion as to whether an order that a suit shall abate was appealable. The High Courts of Bombay (a) and Madras (a) held that such an order was a decree and was therefore appealable. The Allahabad High Court (b) held that the order was not appealable. No such question can arise under the present rule, for it is no longer necessary to make an order that the suit shall abate. The suit abates ipso facto if no application is made under sub rule (1) within the time limited by law. It has been so held by the High Court of Lahore (c), and a Full Bench of the High Court of Allahabad (d).

Limitation—The application under this rule must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased plaintiff or appellant, Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art 176

"The suit shall abate"—See notes above, "Alterations in the rule," No 2

The suit shall abate "so far as the deceased plaintiff is concerned"—Where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue survives to the surviving plaintiffs or plaintiff alone, the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs may proceed with the suit. This is the case dealt with in r 2 above. The present rule provides inter alia that where one of two or more plaintiffs dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving plaintiffs alone, the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff ought to be made a party to the suit. For this purpose an application should be made to the Court, and it must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased plaintiff. plaintiff, it will abate so far only as the deceased plaintiff is concerned. A suit by the partners of a firm to recover a partnership debt is a suit of this nature so that if one of the partners dies pending the suit and his legal representative is not brought on the record, the suit will abate only so far as the deceased partner is concerned (e). But if it is of such a character that it cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representative, it will abate as a whole. A suit by some of the partners of a firm against the other partners for dissolution and for accounts is a suit of this character, so that if one of the plaintiffs (or defendants) dies and his legal representative is not brought on the record, the suit will abate as a whole (f). See notes above, "Alterations in the rule," No 1.

This rule applies to appeals.—The provisions of this rule apply not only to the case of a deceased plaintiff but to the case of a deceased appellant (see sec 107 and r 11 below). Therefore where one of two or more appellants dies and the right to appeal does not survive to the surviving appellant alone, the legal representative of the deceased appellant ought to be brought on the record. If this is not done, the appeal will abate so far as the deceased appellant is concerned. But the appeal will abate as a whole, if the case is of such a nature that the appeal cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representative of the deceased appellant.

There is one class of cases in which the appeal cannot abate as a whole, but abates only so far as the deceased appellant is concerned, and these are cases which come within O 41, r 4, corresponding with sec 544 of the Code of 1882. O 41, r 4, provides that where there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or all the defendants, as the case may be. Where several plaintiffs or defendants jointly appeal from a decree in a case to which O 41, r 4, applies, and one of the appellants dies pending the appeal, but his legal representative is not brought on the record within the period of limitation, the appeal abates so far only as the deceased appellant is concerned and not as a whole. A and B sue C, D and E for possession of certain property, alleging that it had been unlawfully dispossessed by the defendants. The defence is that the land belongs to C, D and E. The Court finds that the property belongs to the plaintiffs, and a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiffs. C, D and E appeal from the decree. E dies pending the appeal, but his legal representative is not brought on the record within the period of limitation. A and B (respondents) contend that the appeal has abated as a whole and it could not therefore be proceeded with. Does the appeal abate as a whole? No: it abates only so far as the deceased appellant is concerned, and the appeal should therefore be proceeded with. The reason is that the ground of appeal being common to all the appellants, viz., that they were the lawful owners of the land, any one of them might have appealed from the whole decree under O 41, r 4, and so the death of one of the appellants cannot affect the right of the other appellants to proceed with the appeal. The same principle applies to suits for partition, redemption and for a declaration of title to the property in suit (g). The High Court of Calcutta holds that O 41, r 4, does not apply on the grounds that a decree cannot be varied or reversed in favour of a person who is dead, and that the appeal having abated the rights

O. 22, r. 3 between the deceased appellant and the respondents must be deemed to have been determined by the decree of the lower Court (h) In one Calcutta case A, B and C sued D, E and F for ejectment, but the suit was dismissed A, B and C appealed from the decree, A died pending the appeal, but no steps were taken to bring his legal representative on the record within the period of limitation. It was held that the appeal abated as a whole. It was also held that if at the hearing of the appeal B and C instead of asking for ejectment asked only for joint possession with D, E and F the Appellate Court could grant leave to them to amend the plaint by asking for joint possession though on terms that they should pay all costs incurred up to that date (i) See notes to r. 4 below, "Suit or appeal shall abate as against the deceased defendant or respondent"

But O. 41, r. 4, will not enable a pro forma defendant who has not appealed to come forward and carry on an appeal that has abated. Thus A, B and C who are jointly interested file a suit which is dismissed. A alone files an appeal and joins B and C as pro forma respondents. A dies his legal representatives are not joined and the appeal abates. Neither B nor C can carry on the appeal saying that it has not abated as they should be treated as if they were appellants (j)

Suit for pre-emption—A decree in a suit for pre-emption passed against the defendants respondents in ignorance of the death of one of them and without bringing his legal representative on the record is a nullity as the right to sue in such a case does not survive against the surviving defendants alone (k) On the other hand when three plaintiffs appeal from a decree dismissing their suit for pre-emption and one of them dies pending the appeal and his legal representatives are not impleaded the appeal abates as regards the deceased alone, for each pre-emptor has an independent right to pre-empt (l) Where the plaintiffs obtain a joint decree for pre-emption against the vendor and the purchaser, without any adjudication under O. 20, r. 14 (2) of their respective rights they each have the right to pre-empt the whole property. If one of the plaintiffs respondents dies pending an appeal from the decree and the appeal is allowed without his representatives being joined the appeal abates as to that plaintiff only and the representative is entitled to possession if the pre-emption money is paid over to the purchaser defendant with the consent of the surviving plaintiffs respondents. A stranger purchaser cannot be required to submit to a partial pre-emption nor is he entitled to demand it (m)

'Legal representative' of deceased plaintiff—The expression 'legal representative' is defined in sec. 2 (11). On the death of a Hindu widow pending a suit to recover property belonging to her deceased husband, the reversionary heirs of the husband are her legal representatives within the meaning of this rule (n) On the death of a Hindu female to recover her father's property from strangers the next heirs of the father are her legal representatives within the meaning of this rule (o)

It has been held by the High Court of Madras that where a suit is brought by a minor Hindu for partition, and the minor dies pending the suit his legal representatives are not entitled to continue the suit, the reason given being that the rule that the mere institution of a suit for partition effects a severance of the joint estate is not applicable to a suit by a minor, as it is for the Court to determine in such a suit whether a decree for partition will be beneficial to the minor (p)

The real owner is not the representative of a benamidar and if he chooses to allow a benamidar to sue in his own name, he cannot after his death come in under this rule (q)

A suit brought by the head of a mutt on behalf of the mutt may be continued on his removal by his successor in office. The successor is not a legal representative, but a person on whom the interest in the trust property "devolves" within the meaning of r 10 below. Hence r 10, and not the present rule, applies to such a case (r)

Two or more legal representatives.—We next proceed to consider the question whether, if there are two or more legal representatives, they should all be made parties. A Mahomedan plaintiff dies pending a suit brought by him, leaving three sons, A, B and C. A alone applies to be brought on the record in place of the deceased, and he is brought on the record as plaintiff. No application is made to bring B and C on the record within the period of limitation. Does the suit abate? It does according to the Allahabad High Court (s). According to that Court, the expression "legal representative" must, when there are two or more legal representatives, be read in the plural. It has accordingly been held by that Court that all the legal representatives must be brought on the record as plaintiffs and if any one of them refuses to be joined as a plaintiff, he should be joined as a defendant. The High Courts of Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and Lahore agree with the Allahabad High Court in holding that the expression "legal representative" must be read in the plural, but hold that if some of the representatives are unwilling to join in the application or if one or more of the legal representatives are unknown, a bona fide application by those who are willing to join in making the application is a sufficient compliance with this rule. If there is a bona fide dispute as to the representative character of those who have not been joined, the Calcutta High Court has held that the Court may proceed with the suit striking out such prayers as are not maintainable in the absence of the persons omitted (t). The same principles apply to appeals. See notes to r 4 below under the same head (u)

Wrong person as legal representative.—See notes to r 4 below under the same head

Joint Hindu family and legal representative.—The High Court of Patna has held that this rule is to be applied even if the plaintiffs are members of a joint Hindu family, and that r 4 is to be applied even if the defendants are members of a joint family. According to that Court, the legal representatives of a deceased coparcener within the meaning of sec 2 (11) are the surviving coparceners, and the latter must be brought on the record in their representative character though they may be already on the record in their own capacity (v). On the other hand, it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the case of members of a joint Hindu family is governed by r 2 above, that is, the right to sue survives to or against the surviving coparceners alone, and if they are already on the record, it is not necessary to bring them on the record in their representative capacity also (w). In a later decision, when one of two co widows who jointly represented the estate of their deceased husband, died, the Patna High Court

Appeal—The decisions on the question of appeal are not uniform. In some cases to be presently considered the alteration introduced in the present rule namely, the substitution of the words "the suit shall abate" for the words "the Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate," which occurred in the corresponding sec 36b of the Code of 1882, has not been noticed, see notes above, "Alterations in the rule", No 2. We proceed to consider the decisions of each High Court separately.

Madras—The Madras High Court has held that where on the death of a plaintiff two rival claimants apply to the Court to be brought upon the record as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, and the Court decides in favour of one of them and against the other, the party against whom the decision is given is not entitled to appeal, the reason given being that there is no abatement of the suit in such a case as the suit can be proceeded with by the other claimant (r). A Full Bench of the Madras High Court has also held that even if a sole plaintiff dies and only one person claims to be his legal representative, an order refusing his application to be brought on the record is not one from which an appeal lies (s). But the Court declined to express an opinion as to what the consequence would be if the petitioner appeals against the actual order for abatement or dismissal. Presumably section 146 would enable him to do so as a person claiming under the deceased plaintiff.

Allahabad—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that no appeal lies from an adjudication that a suit (t) or an appeal (u) has abated whether the abatement is due to the fact that no application was made to bring the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff on the record (v), or the abatement follows on the dismissal of the application made by a person to be brought upon the record as the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff (w) the reason given being that such an adjudication does not amount to a decree. In a recent case where A had obtained an ex parte decree against B and B had applied to set aside the decree, and thereafter B died, and on B's death his son applied to continue the application and the application was granted notwithstanding opposition on A's part, it was held that the case did not fall either under r 3 or r 4 of this order and that no appeal lay from the order (z). See sec 146 above.

Lahore—In a case where a person applied to be brought on the record as the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, and the Court refused the application on the ground that he was not the legal representative, and also made a separate order recording that the suit had abated inasmuch as no application by any legal representative had been made, it was held by the High Court of Lahore that the order dismissing the application was not appealable under the Code as it was really a matter collateral to the suit. As to the order recording the abatement the Court said it would amount to a decree and be appealable as such if the applicant was already a party to the suit in another character (y). In another case (z) where an appeal was declared to have abated as a whole, it was held, following a Full Bench ruling of the same High Court (a) that whether the final decision was called an abatement or a dismissal, it came within the definition of "decree" and was appealable as such, the applicants having been parties to the suit

Oudh—The Oudh Court has held that a decision that a suit has abated coupled with a refusal to bring the legal representative on the record on the ground that the cause of action did not survive, operates as a decree and is appealable (b).

4. [S. 368.] (1) Where one of two or more defendants dies and the right to sue does not survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, or a sole defendant or sole surviving defendant dies and the right to sue survives, the Court, on an application made in that behalf, shall cause the legal representative of the deceased defendant to be made a party and shall proceed with the suit.

(2) Any person so made a party may make any defence appropriate to his character as legal representative of the deceased defendant.

(3) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-rule (1), the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant

Alterations in the rule —

- 1 The words used in sec 368 of the Code of 1882 were "any person whom he alleges to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant" The words used in the present rule are "the legal representative of the deceased defendant" See notes below "Effect of decree against legal representative of deceased defendant"
- 2 Sub rule (2) is new.
- 3 The words "as against the deceased defendant" in sub rule (3) are new See notes below, 'The suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant'

Suit.—The word "suit" in this rule includes an appeal, and the word "defendant" a respondent. see r 11 below

Limitation.—The application under this rule must be made within 90 days from "the date of the death of the deceased defendant or respondent" Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 177 The alteration in the language of art 177 as it stood in the Limitation Act, 1877, art 175 C, clearly shows that the word "respondent" in the present article is not confined to a respondent only in first appeal as was held by the High Court of Madras under the old article (c), but that it includes a respondent also in second appeal as was held by the High Courts of Calcutta and Allahabad (d) See also r 11 below.

22, r. 4 Where no application made within the period of limitation—The application to bring the legal representative of the deceased defendant on the record should, as stated above, be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased defendant. If no such application is made within the aforesaid period, the suit abates as against the deceased defendant [sub rule (3)], though the plaintiff was ignorant of the death of the deceased (e). After abatement, the only course open to the plaintiff is to make an application under r 9 sub r (2), to have the abatement set aside. Such an application should be made within 60 days from the date of the abatement [Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 171] but the Court may entertain the application even after 60 days if sufficient cause is shown (f) [see r 9, sub r 3, and Limitation Act, 1908, s 5]. As to the inherent power of the Court to bring the legal representative of a deceased defendant on the record after abatement see notes below. It may be stated that where a defendant dies pending a suit, it is open to its legal representative to apply to be brought on the record notwithstanding the plaintiff's omission to implead him (g).

The suit or appeal shall abate as against the deceased defendant or respondent—Where one of two or more defendants dies, and the right to sue survives against the surviving defendant or defendants alone the suit should be proceeded with as against the surviving defendant or defendants. This case has been dealt with in r 2 above. The present rule provides inter alia that where one of two or more defendants dies, and the right to sue does not survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, the legal representative of the deceased defendant ought to be made a party to the suit. For this purpose an application should be made to the Court, and such application must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased defendant. Sub rule (3) provides that where no such application is made the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant. The words "as against the deceased defendant" are new. In the absence of these words in the corresponding section 368 of the Code of 1882, it was contended in a large number of cases that where no application was made to bring the legal representative of a deceased defendant or respondent on the record within the period of limitation, the suit or appeal, abated not only as against the deceased defendant or respondent, but as a whole. But this contention was overruled, and it was held that a distinction ought to be made between cases in which a suit or appeal could proceed in the absence of the legal representatives and those in which it could not. In the former case it was held that the suit or appeal abated only as against the deceased defendant or respondent in the latter case, that it abated as a whole. Sub r (3) of the present rule makes it clear that where no application is made to bring the legal representative on the record within the time limited by law, the suit or appeal abates primarily as against the deceased defendant or respondent only, and that it does not abate necessarily as a whole. This sub rule gives legislative recognition to the rulings under the Code of 1882. The result is that as under the Code of 1882, so under the present Code, if a case is of such a nature that the suit or appeal can proceed without bringing on the record the legal representative of the deceased defendant or respondent the suit or appeal abates as against the deceased defendant or respondent only (h) A suit on a joint and several promissory note against the promisers, is a suit of this nature. But if the suit or appeal cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representative, the suit or appeal will abate as a whole (i) A suit by a partner against his co-partners for dissolution of partnership and for accounts is a suit of this nature [see ill (2) under the head "II. Cases in which suit or appeal held to abate as a whole"]

The test often adopted in such cases is whether in the event of the appeal being allowed as against the remaining respondents there would or would not be two contradictory decrees in the same litigation with respect to the same subject matter. It is clear that a Court should not be called upon to make two inconsistent decrees about the same property and in order to avoid conflicting decrees the Court has no alternative but to dismiss the appeal as a whole. If on the other hand the success of the appeal would not lead to such a result there is no valid reason why the Court should not hear the appeal and adjudicate upon the dispute between the parties who are before it (j)

The High Court of Calcutta has held that where the plaintiffs are joint owners, and a decree is passed for them for possession and the defendant appeals from the decree making the plaintiffs respondents, and one of the plaintiffs respondents dies pending the appeal the appeal abates as a whole, the reason given being that the Court should not be called upon to make two contradictory decrees in the same litigation, which would

A and B sue C, D and E for declaration of title and for possession and a decree is passed for them C, D and E appeal from the decree Pending the appeal C dies No steps are taken to bring his legal representative on the record within the period of limitation According to the Calcutta decision the appeal abates as a whole The reason given is that if the defendants succeed in the appeal then there would be two decrees, one against the surviving plaintiffs respondents and another decree of the lower Court in favour of the deceased plaintiff to the effect that the property in suit belongs to the plaintiffs of which he was a proprietor Further, as to O 41, r. 4, the Calcutta High Court has said that the rule is limited to the case of appellants and does not apply to the case of respondents (l) On the other hand, the High Court of Bombay has held that the appeal abates only as against deceased, and it should be heard on the merits against the other joint owners After the appeal is heard on the merits, the Court may pass such decree as the case may require (m) It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that where a joint decree is passed in a suit for redemption of a mortgage brought by two or more plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal from the decree, and one of the plaintiffs respondents dies pending the appeal but his legal representatives are not impleaded within the period of limitation the appeal abates only so far as the deceased respondent is concerned, but not as a whole (n) See notes to r. 3 above, This rule applies to appeals

Pending the appeal one of the respondents heirs dies, and his legal representatives are not brought on the record. The appeal abates as against the deceased respondent only. Mst Haleyatunnissa v Mst Chalakhi (1931) 10 Pat 341, 132 IC 100, (31) A P 164. The Court can deal with the appeal so far as regards the interests of the parties before it and if necessary make a decree for sale for a proportionate amount. See note under O 31, r 1 'Consequences of non joinder, at p 981.

II. Cases in which suit or appeal held to abate as a whole.—(1) A, B and C are joint owners of certain property. The property is sold for arrears of Government revenue and purchased by D. A, B and C sued D to set aside the sale on the ground of fraud and irregularities and a decree is passed in their favour. D files an appeal from the decree against A, B and C. C dies pending the appeal but D makes no application to bring C's legal representative on the record within the period of limitation. The appeal abates not only as against C but as a whole. In this case it is clear that A, B and C being joint owners the suit would have been bad if C were not joined as a party to the suit. Again if the appellate Court heard the appeal in the absence of C's legal representative and came to the conclusion that the decree of the lower Court should be reversed, the decree could then be reversed only as to A and B, but not as to C, for C's representative is not on the record. But this would be a reductio ad absurdum for the whole appeal could not be reversed as to the unascertained shares of some joint holders [that is, A and B] and confirmed as to the unascertained share of other joint holders [that is in this case C]. The case therefore is one in which the appeal could not proceed in the absence of C's legal representative. The appeal therefore must abate as a whole. Dharanjit v Chandeshwar (1907) 11 CWN 504, Kali Dayal v Nagendra Nath (1919) 24 CWN 44, 54 IC 822, Bejoy Gopal v Umesh Chandra (1901) 6 CWN 196, Manindra v Bhagubatti (1926) 30 CWN 45, 90 IC 990, (26) AC 335, Madnapore Zamindary Co v Amulya Nath (1928) 53 Cal 752, 95 IC 649, (26) AC 893, Hadu v Lala (1915) Punj Rec no 41, p 197, 21 IC 951, Jamna v Sarjit (1919) Punj Rec no 67, p 166, 52 IC 510, Wali Mohammad v Mahlu (1924) 5 Lah 429, 86 IC 592, (25) AL 124, Muhammad v Abdulla (28) AL 869. No application is made by the appellants in either appeal to bring on the record the legal representative of D within the period of limitation. The appeal abates as a whole for as the sum is a partnership account, it is not one in which the appeals could proceed in the absence of the legal representative of D. *Fry Chauder v. A case B and C for partition of joint family property. A preliminary decree is passed and a commissioner is appointed to make a partition according to the rights declared in the decree. B then dies but no application is made to bring on his legal representative on the record within the period of limitation. Though the suit abates as regards B the Court may add B's representative as a defendant (q). But no such order can be made if no preliminary decree has been passed (r).

Effect of decree against legal representative of deceased defendant.—The words used in s. 36b were "any person whom he assigns to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant." The words used in the present rule are "the legal representative of the deceased defendant." It was accordingly held under the Code of 1859 that where a person alleged by the plaintiff to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant was brought on the record without any objection by him and a decree was passed in the sum the estate of the deceased was bound by the decree in the absence of fraud or collusion (s). But in view of the altered wording of the present rule it is not sufficient for the plaintiff to allege that a particular person is the legal representative of a deceased defendant and for each person to be brought on the record as representing the estate of the deceased. Thus if the sole defendant dies pending a sum against him for the recovery of money leaving sons and daughters but in ignorance of the existence of these heirs his brother is brought on the record as his representative and a decree is passed against the estate of the deceased, the decree is not binding on the estate and on the persons rightfully entitled to that estate (t).

Two or more legal representatives.—If there are several legal representatives it seems to suffice if at least one of them is impleaded whether in the suit (u) or in the appeal (t). The Lahore High Court in one case (w) held that r 4 is sufficiently complied with if all the legal representatives known after diligent inquiry are joined. But in another case (x) where only two out of three heirs of a deceased respondent were brought on the record the same Court held that the appeal abated as the whole estate was not represented. See notes to r 3 above under the same head.

Indian Succession Act and legal representative.—In the case of a person subject to the Indian Succession Act, his legal representatives within the meaning of s 2(11) of the Code are his executors or administrators, and not his heirs (y).

Joint Hindu family and legal representative.—See notes to r 3 above under the same head.

Legal representative already on record in another character.—See note under the same head to r 3 above.

Death of insolvent respondent.—An appeal preferred by the creditors of an insolvent against an order of adjudication abates on his death, as the right to sue does not survive within the meaning of this rule (z). So also does an appeal against an order refusing an adjudication (a).

Wrong person as legal representative.—An application to bring on the record as legal representative of a deceased defendant a person who is not in fact such representative will be of no avail to save the running of limitation in the case of a subsequent application to implead the person who really is the legal representative (b). As already stated, if the wrong person is impleaded as legal representative, the decree will not bind the true heir (c).

What pleas may be taken by a legal representative.—See sub r (2) and notes under the same head to r 3 above.

Rehearing of suit or appeal.—A plaintiff whose suit is heard and dismissed is not entitled to a rehearing of the suit on the ground that one of the defendants had died previous to the hearing of the suit and that the suit was heard without bringing the legal representative of the deceased defendant on the record. The right to have the suit reheard is the right of the legal representative [which he would not care to exercise as the suit was dismissed] and not the right of the unsuccessful plaintiff. The same rule applies to appeals (d).

Pro forma defendant.—Omission to bring on record the legal representative of the defendant against whom no relief is claimed does not cause the suit to abate (e).

Cross appeals.—If the plaintiff and the defendant both appeal from a decree and the defendant dies the fact that the plaintiff has joined the legal representatives

O. 22, r. 4 of the defendant in his appeal will not prevent the defendant's appeal from abating if the legal representatives are not joined in that appeal (j)

Death of defendant after preliminary and before final decree.—It has been held in several cases that this rule applies where a defendant dies after the preliminary and before the final decree and that his legal representatives must be brought on the record, otherwise the suit abates so far as concerns the deceased defendant (g). But it is difficult to reconcile these cases with the decision of Privy Council in Luchin Varain v Bal Mukund (h). The Allahabad High Court and the Oudh Court have held that this rule does not apply when a defendant dies after the passing of a preliminary decree (i), and the Allahabad High Court has amended r. 12 so as to supersede a decision to the contrary (j). There is, however, an observation of Rankin, C.J., in the undernoted case (k) which implies that a partition suit may abate after the preliminary decree. The Rangoon High Court has also held that O. 22, r. 4, does not apply on the death of a defendant after a preliminary decree has been passed (l). See notes to r. 3 above, Death of plaintiff after preliminary and before final decree.

Decree for or against a dead person.—A decree against a person who was dead at the date of the institution of the suit is a nullity (l). Similarly a decree passed against a defendant who died pending the suit without bringing his legal representative on the record is a nullity and it cannot be executed against the legal representative (m). A decree passed against a respondent in ignorance of the fact of his death is also nullity (n). If one of several defendants is discovered to have been dead at the institution of the suit, there is no question of abatement, nor should the suit be dismissed as against him. The Court should remove the name of the deceased from the record and proceed under O. 1, r. 10 (o). A decree in a suit for rent against several joint tenants of whom some are dead at the institution of the suit is a nullity as against those who are dead, but is valid as a money decree as against those who are living for under s. 43 of the Contract Act, the liability of a joint promisee is joint and several (p). But by reason of a statute of 1833 (3 and 4 William 4, c. 41, s. 23) a decree passed by the Privy Council against the respondents in ignorance of the death of one of them is not a nullity, though the legal representative of the deceased was not brought on the record, the decree being an order of the Sovereign (q).

O. 41 r. 20, and abatement.—O. 41 r. 20 does not override the provisions of O. 22 of the Code and after the appeal has abated the Court cannot direct the representative to be made a party (r).

Execution proceedings.—This rule does not apply the penalty of abatement to execution proceedings. See note under the same heading under r. 12. If the judgment debtor dies during the pendency of execution proceedings the decree holder is under s. 50 entitled to continue the execution proceedings against the legal representative of the judgment debtor (s). He may do this at any time even after the period of 12 years fixed by s. 48, provided the execution is still pending (t).

Appeal.—It has been held by the High Court of Lahore that an adjudication that an appeal has abated as a whole amounts to a decree and is appealable as such (u). See notes to r. 3 above, "Appeal"

5. [S. 367.] Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or a deceased defendant, such question shall be determined by the Court.

Determination of question as a legal representative

Alterations in the rule :—

- 1 The words "where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative," have been substituted for the words "if any dispute arises as to who is the legal representative". The object is to make it clear that this rule applies not only where two or more persons claim to be the legal representative of a deceased party but where there is only one claimant and his representative character is denied. This is in accordance with the interpretation put upon the words of the old section in the undermentioned cases (v).
- 2 Under the old section where a question arose as to whether any person was or was not the legal representative of a deceased party the Court had the power either to stay the suit until the question was determined in another suit, or to determine the question itself. Under the present rule the Court is bound to determine the question itself (w).
- 3 It is provided by rr. 3 and 4 of this Order that once the Court determines who the legal representative is, and the legal representative is brought on the record under those rules, "the Court shall proceed with the suit". No objection therefore as to the representative character of such person can be entertained after he is brought on the record, though the hearing of the suit has not commenced. Under the old section the objection could be taken "at or before the first hearing of the suit". But the words "at or before the first hearing" have been omitted in the present rule, the object being that the objections as to whether any person is or is not the legal representative of a deceased party should be taken before such person is made

Objection as to representative character when to be taken—If the defendants have not objected in the suit that a deceased co-defendant is not properly represented they will not be entitled to raise this objection in the appeal and contend that the suit has abated (a) See notes above Alteration in the rule No 3

Effect of order under this rule—The Allahabad High Court at one time seemed to decide that this rule provides a summary procedure for appointing a person to be the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff for the purpose of prosecuting the suit and that an order appointing a legal representative does not operate as a final determination of the representative character of the person appointed in other words it does not operate as res judicata (b) But in a later case the same High Court disapproved of this decision and held that an order under this rule does operate as res judicata (c)

Power of Court to correct its order—The Court has power to correct an ex parte order made under this rule (d)

In a mortgage suit the "judgment" referred to in this rule is the judgment supporting the final decree and not the judgment supporting the preliminary decree, and the "hearing" referred to in the rule is the hearing of issues upon which judgment is to be delivered determining the plaintiff's right to a final decree. Therefore this rule does not apply where a party to a mortgage suit dies before the application for a final decree is made and heard (1). See notes to r 3 above, "Death of plaintiff after preliminary and before final decree," and notes to r 4 above, "Death of defendant after preliminary and before final decree."

7. [S. 369.] (1) The marriage of a female plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate, but the suit may notwithstanding be proceeded with to judgment, and, where the decree is against a female defendant, it may be executed against her alone.

Suit not abated by marriage of female party

(2) Where the husband is by law liable for the debts of his wife, the decree may, with the permission of the Court, be executed against the husband also; and, in case of judgment for the wife, execution of the decree may, with such permission, be issued upon the application of the husband, where the husband is by law entitled to the subject-matter of the decree.

Liability for wife's debts.—See Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, s 187, and notes thereto

8. [S. 370.] (1) The insolvency of a plaintiff in any suit which the assignee or receiver might maintain for the benefit of his creditors, shall not cause the suit to abate, unless such assignee or receiver declines to continue the suit or (unless for any special reason the Court otherwise directs) to give security for the costs thereof within such time as the Court may direct.

When plaintiff's insolvency bars suit

(2) Where the assignee or receiver neglects or refuses to continue the suit and to give such security within the time so ordered, the defendant may apply for the dismissal of the suit on the ground of the plaintiff's insolvency, and the Court may make an order dismissing the suit and awarding to the defendant the costs which he has incurred in defending the same to be proved as a debt against the plaintiff's estate.

O. 22, r. 8 Insolvency of plaintiff—This rule lays down the procedure to be followed when a plaintiff becomes insolvent. The suit should not be dismissed for default of appearance for O 9, r 8 cannot apply where there is known to be no person in the position of the plaintiff who has any right or duty to appear (j)

The procedure laid down in this rule applies to appeals see r 11 below. Thus if a decree is passed in a suit by A against B and B appeals from the decree and pending the appeal B becomes insolvent and the Official Assignee does not give security for costs the Court must under this rule dismiss the suit. If the plaintiff respondent has filed cross objections they could not be heard, the dismissal of the suit being in effect an abatement of the appeal (l)

Insolvency of defendant—As to the case of the insolvency of a defendant in a presidency town it is now provided by sec 18 of the Presidency towns Insolvency Act, 1909, that where a defendant to a suit has been adjudged an insolvent the Court may, at any time after the making of the order of adjudication stay any suit or other proceeding pending against the insolvent before any Judge or Judges of the Court or in any other Court subject to the superintendence of the Court. The same section also enacts that any Court in which proceedings are pending against a debtor may on proof that an order of adjudication has been made against him under the Act, either stay the proceedings or allow them to continue on such terms as it may think just. As to cases governed by the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 see sec 29. See also notes to r 10 below,

Insolvency of the defendant joinder of Official Assignee

"Insolvency"—This rule does not apply to a case where the adjudication has been annulled. In such a case, the dismissal for the non appearance of the plaintiff or the Official Assignee on the date fixed for the hearing is under O 9, r 9 (l)

Limitation—There is no limitation provided for the Official Assignee to appear and apply for substitution. Again, where the plaintiff's name is struck off and the Official Assignee is substituted for the insolvent plaintiff, and the adjudication is thereafter annulled there is no limitation for the plaintiff to appear and apply for the restoration of his name on the record (m)

Insolvency of pauper applicant—In the case of a pauper who has applied for leave to sue as a pauper, the present rule can be applied only after leave to sue is granted but not before (n)

Costs payable by plaintiff prior to his insolvency—The general principle is "that a person who comes in by representation, whether it be an assignee in bankruptcy or as an executor or administrator of an original plaintiff, where costs are due by the person whom he represents, the suit cannot be carried on except upon the costs of the original suit being paid." It has accordingly been held that where a plaintiff, who has been ordered to pay the costs of a proceeding in the suit, becomes bankrupt, and the suit is revived by his assignee, the Court will stay proceedings until payment of the costs which the plaintiff has been ordered to pay (o). The security required of the Official Assignee is for costs incurred prior to the insolvency (p)

Costs of successful defendant—Where a suit is continued by the assignee in bankruptcy, and the defendant obtains judgment with costs, the defendant is entitled to be paid all his costs in full, and not merely the costs as from the date of insolvency with liberty to prove for the costs previously incurred (q)

Cause of action arising after insolvency.—A, an undischarged insolvent, sues B for brokerage earned by him subsequent to his adjudication B applies for security for costs. If the Official Assignee has not intervened, no order should be made for security for costs (s) It may be observed that under the Presidency towns Insolvency Act, 1909, property acquired by an insolvent after adjudication does not vest in the Official Assignee until he intervenes and claims it on behalf of the creditors. In cases governed by the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, such property vests immediately on the making of order of adjudication.

9. [Ss. 371, 372A.] (1) Where a suit abates or is dismissed under this Order, no fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action.

(2) The plaintiff or the person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff or the assignee or the receiver in the case of an insolvent plaintiff may apply for an order to set aside the abatement or dismissal, and if it is proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, the Court shall set aside the abatement or dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit

D. 22, r. 9 r 4 (3) (v), (2) the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, where a suit has abated under r 3 (2), (3) the assignee of an insolvent plaintiff, where a suit is dismissed under r 8 (2)

Limitation.—An application under this rule for an order to set aside an abatement must be made within 60 days from the date of the abatement [Limitation Act, 1908 sch I art 77] Similarly an application for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit must be made within 60 days from the date of the order of dismissal [Ib, Art 172] If no application is made within 60 days, the Court has the power under s 5 of the Limitation Act to admit the application after the expiry of that period if the applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within 60 days See sub r (3) In an Oudh case a decree was passed against a defendant in ignorance of his death, but on application of his legal representatives, the decree was treated as a nullity, delay was excused, the representatives impleaded, and the appeal heard de novo (w)

Sub rule (2). "Sufficient cause."—An application to bring upon the record the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff must be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased [Limitation Act, 1908 sch I, art 176] An application to bring upon the record the legal representative of a deceased defendant must also be made within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased [Ib, Art 177] If no application is made within the prescribed period, the suit abates in the case of a deceased plaintiff under r 3 (2), and in the case of a deceased defendant under r 4 (3) But the plaintiff or the person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff as the case may be, may apply under r 9 (2) for an order to set aside the abatement The application to set aside the abatement must be made within 60 days from the date of the abatement If no application is made within 60 days, the Court may under s 5 of the Limitation Act admit the application if the applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application within 60 days see sub r (3)

An abatement ought not to be set aside as a matter of course or lightly The reason is that when a suit abates, the setting aside of the abatement deprives the party in whose favour the abatement operates of a valuable right Under sub r (2), the applicant has to satisfy the Court that he was prevented by some sufficient cause from making the application to bring the legal representative of the deceased upon the record within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased Under sub r (3), the applicant has to satisfy the Court that he had sufficient cause for not making the application to set aside the abatement within 60 days from the date of abatement (x) The two sub rules are distinct In dealing with an application under sub r (2), the Court has to decide whether there was sufficient cause for not bringing the legal representative of the deceased upon the record within 90 days from the date of the death of the deceased independently of sub rule (3) (y)

Ignorance of the death of the deceased (z), or of the whereabouts of the legal representatives of the deceased (a), may be a sufficient cause for excusing the delay deceased was under the impression that the co-defendants were prosecuting the appeal and challenging the validity of the entire decree, it was held that it was a sufficient cause for excusing the delay in making the application to bring him on the record in place of the deceased (b)

Substitution without setting aside abatement—The Patna High Court has

Minor and abatement—When an application on behalf of a minor to be brought on the record in place of his deceased father who was the plaintiff in the suit

Remand—When the High Court in second appeal declares the first appeal to have abated it has no power to set aside the abatement but should remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for disposal under this rule (f)

Cause of action in revived suit—Where an abatement is set aside under this rule, the suit is revived. No fresh cause of action can be imported into the revived suit for the proceedings in the revived suit are a continuation of the proceedings in the original suit (g)

Appeal—An appeal lies under abatement or dismissal of a suit, or an order setting aside an abatement the abatement is passed without is appealable or at least open to revision (h). An order refusing to set aside an abatement of a suit, if not appealed against is final and affords a new starting point for limitation under art. 182 (2) of the Limitation Act (i)

Letters Patent appeal—The High Court of Allahabad has held that an appeal with cl. 15 of the Letters Patent Act is appealable to the High Court judge of the first instance proceeds would be strange if there was permission to appeal, as undoubtedly there was from the lower Appellate Court to the High Court that there should not also be the right of appeal, not merely in a suit but when the question arose in a Court of appeal (j)

r. 9, 10

The High Court of Calcutta has held that an order setting aside the abatement of a suit is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and is appealable as such, the reason given being that when a suit has abated, the setting aside of the abatement deprives the party in whose favour the abatement operates of a valuable right (k)

10. [S. 372.] (1) In other cases of an assignment creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may, by leave of the Court, be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved

Procedure in case of assignment before final order in suit

(2) The attachment of a decree pending an appeal therefrom shall be deemed to be an interest entitling the person who procured such attachment to the benefit of sub rule (1)

Alterations in the rule—(1) The words "either in addition to or in substitution for the person from whom it has passed which occurred in sec 372 of the Code of 1882 after the words "interest has come or devolved," have been omitted. It would seem to follow from some of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the undermentioned case (l) that the effect of the omission of those words is that a transferee pendente lite cannot under this Code be added as a party, but that he may be substituted for his transferor. It is not clear whether their Lordships intended to go that length. If they did, a difficulty would arise in every case where a mortgagee pendente lite applied to be joined as a party.

(2) Sub rule (2) is new. See notes below under the heading 'Sub rule (2)'

Other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of interest—It will be observed that the preceding rules deal with certain specified cases of assignment creation and devolution of interest. Rule 8 deals with the case of assignment on the insolvency of a plaintiff, rule 7 with the case of creation of an interest in a husband on marriage, and rules 2, 3 and 4 with the case of devolution of interest on the death of a party to a suit. The present rule provides for cases of assignment, creation and devolution of interest other than those mentioned above (m). See notes below 'Devolution of interest.'

Assignment of interest—This includes a sale, or a mortgage (n), or a lease (o) of the property in suit, also an assignment of a mortgage (p).

Devolution of interest. representative suits—Rules 2, 3 and 4 relate to cases of devolution of interest on the death of a plaintiff or a defendant. These rules, however, do not apply where a suit is brought by or against a person in his representative character e.g., by or against the head of a mutt or the manager of a temple as such. In such a case the present rule applies so that if the head of the mutt or manager of the temple dies, his successor may be substituted in his place. But the rule is not confined to devolution of interest by death. It also applies if the head of the mutt or manager of the temple resigns his office or is removed from office (g). In such a case also the successor to the head of the mutt (r) or to the manager of the temple (s) may be substituted as a party under this rule. But if the successor does not apply to be substituted as a party the original plaintiff may continue the suit, and his successor will be bound by the result of the litigation (t). Where during the pendency of a suit brought by the manager of an encumbered estate the estate was released from management and restored to the owners it was held that the owners could apply under this rule to be made plaintiffs in place of the manager (u).

Interest—The word interest in this rule means interest in the property, the subject matter of the suit (1).

1. A sues B for recovery of possession of certain property. Pending the suit, A sells his interest in the property to C. C may apply under this rule to have his name substituted as plaintiff in A's place.

2. A sues the firm of B C to recover Rs. 5,000. Pending the suit the firm of B C transfers all its assets and liabilities to the firm of X Y. Thereupon A applies to the Court under this rule to have the firm of X Y joined as a party defendant. The firm of X Y should not be joined as a party for the assignment cannot be said in any sense to be an assignment of the defendant's interest in the subject matter of the suit. Harish Chandra v Chandpore Co., Ltd (1903) 30 Cal. 961. Insolvency of defendant Joinder of Official Assignee—This section applies to the devolution of interest by reason of an order of adjudication (w). See Mulla's Law of Insolvency in British India p. 486 et seq.

(a) A sues B for recovery of possession of certain immovable property. The defence is that B is the full owner of the property. Pending the suit, B is adjudged insolvent and his estate vests in the Official Assignee. The Official Assignee is entitled to be substituted as a party defendant under this rule. The reason is that the order of adjudication operates as a statutory transfer of the interest of the insolvent in the subject matter of the suit to the Official Assignee. see Punitharelu v Bhashyam (1902) 25 Mad. 406, Subbayar Bros v I. K. Munuswami Aiyar & Sons (1927) 50 Mad. 161, 98 I.C. 516 (26) A.M. 1133.

Annulment of order of adjudication—Where a suit is brought by the Official Assignee, and the order of adjudication is annulled pending the suit, the insolvent is entitled to be substituted as plaintiff under this rule (y)

"During the pendency of a suit"—These words mean "before a final decree or order has been passed or made in the suit" [see the marginal note to the rule] Hence the provisions of this rule apply if the assignment, creation or devolution of interest takes place before a final decree or order is passed or made in the suit. There is no power to make an order after the final decree has been passed (z). In the case of an appeal, the provisions of this rule apply if the assignment, etc., takes place before a final decree or order is passed or made in the appeal [see r 11 below]. Though a suit may be compromised and the terms of the compromise filed in Court, the suit will be deemed to be pending until a decree is passed in terms of the compromise. Until the decree is passed, a transferee pendente lite is entitled to apply under this rule to be joined as a party (a). If he is joined as a party he is entitled to object to a decree being passed in terms of the compromise arrived at between his transferor and the opposite party (b). But if he is not joined as a party he is bound by the decree passed on the compromise (c).

O. 22, r. 10, 11 Trial Court can bring assignee on record pending appeal—The Court of first instance has jurisdiction to bring on record the assignee of a party to the suit, though there may be an appeal pending in the appellate Court from an interlocutory order made by the Court of first instance (j)

Execution proceedings.—The words “during the pendency of the suit” and the marginal note seem to exclude the application of the rule to execution proceedings. On the other hand it has been suggested though not decided that as this rule is not referred to in r 12 it becomes applicable to execution proceedings on the principle of exclusion (l). In a later case (l) the Calcutta High Court said that the question of the applicability of the rule to execution proceedings has not yet been authoritatively decided. But in the undernoted case (m) it was assumed that r 10 applied to execution proceedings. The decree was against the managing committee of a school in their representative capacity and was enforceable against the assets of the school. Three members of the managing committee went out of office after the decree and the Court said that was a devolution of interest within O 22, r 10.

Transfer of decree.—This rule does not apply to transfers of decrees. O 21, r 16, applies to such transfers (n).

Doctrine of lis pendens.—In this connection may be noted the provisions of sec. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which runs as follows: “During the pendency of any suit or proceeding which is not collusive and in which any right to immovable property is directly and specifically in question the property cannot be transferred or otherwise dealt with by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein, except under the authority of the Court and on such terms as it may impose.”

Limitation.—The right to apply under this rule accrues from day to day, and is not therefore barred by lapse of time. An application therefore to be added or substituted as a party under this rule may be made at any time (o).

Appeal.—Under the Code of 1832 an appeal was allowed from an order giving leave appealable though on the facts the order should not have been passed under this rule (r).

Letters Patent Appeal.—An order refusing leave to be joined as a party is a “judgment” within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, and is appealable as such (s).

11. [S. 582, 1st para.] In the application of this Order to appeals, so far as may be, the word “plaintiff” shall be held to include an appellant, the word “defendant” a respondent, and the word “suit” an appeal.

Neither suit nor appeal—An application under sec 21A of the Punjab Alienation Act is neither a suit nor an appeal and cannot abate as O 22 does not apply (i)

12. [New] Nothing in rules 3, 4 and 8 shall apply to proceedings in execution of a decree or order

Application of Order to proceedings*

Execution proceedings—Rules 3 and 4 relate to the death of a party pending a suit or appeal. Rule 8 relates to the insolvency of a plaintiff pending a suit, and the insolvency of an appellant pending an appeal. The present rule provides that nothing in rules 3, 4 and 8 shall apply to proceedings in execution of a decree. It sets at rest the conflict on the question whether the provisions relating to the abatement of suits and appeals apply to proceedings in execution. The Madras High Court has held that this rule does not apply to the procedure for bringing on record the legal representative of a deceased party in an execution proceeding, but merely enacts that the penalty of abatement shall not attach to execution proceedings (u). The rule is therefore for the benefit of the decree holder, for his heirs need not take steps for substitution under rule 3 but may apply immediately or at any time while the proceeding is pending, to carry on the proceeding, or he may file a fresh execution application (t). See note 'Transfer pending execution' under O 21, r 16, at p 720.

Appeal in execution proceedings—Can it abate?—There is a conflict of decision as to whether rule 12 applies to appeals in execution proceedings. The Patna and Lahore High Courts have held that rule 12 has the effect of excluding appeals in execution proceedings from rules 3, 4 and 8 and that there can be no abatement of such an appeal (w). On the other hand the Madras High Court has held that an appeal against an order in execution is not a proceeding in execution of a decree and that such an appeal

ORDER XXIII.

Withdrawal and Adjustment of Suits.

O. 23, r. 1 1. [S. 73.] (1) At any time after the institution of a suit the plaintiff may, as against all or any of the defendants, withdraw his suit or abandon part of his claim.

Withdrawal of suit or abandonment of part of claim

(2) Where the Court is satisfied—

(a) that a suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or

(b) that there are other sufficient grounds for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the subject-matter of a suit or part of a claim, it may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit or abandon such part of a claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit or such part of a claim.

(3) Where the plaintiff withdraws from a suit, or abandons part of a claim, without the permission referred to in sub-rule (2), he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award and shall be precluded from instituting any fresh suit in respect of such subject-matter or such part of the claim.

(4) Nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorize the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others

This rule applies to appeals.—This rule applies to appeals; see s 107 Hence an appellate Court may allow an appeal to be withdrawn (b), and the High Court may allow a second appeal to be withdrawn (c) See O 41, r 22 (4) and notes thereto

Sub rule (1) Withdrawal "of" Suit.

Distinction between sub-rule (1) and sub rule (2)—Sub rule (1) is new It does not create any new right It merely affirms the right of a plaintiff to withdraw a suit in whole or in part against all or any of the defendants, and is added here to make the rule a complete enunciation of the law relating to the withdrawal of and from suits. Sub r (1) contemplates a withdrawal of the suit, sub r (2) a withdrawal from the suit If a party desires to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit he must apply to the Court under sub r (2) to permit him so to withdraw If he does not desire to have the liberty, then he can withdraw the suit of his own motion under sub r (1) and no order of the Court is necessary (d) But he cannot withdraw a suit reserving to himself a right to bring a fresh suit (e)

Withdrawal "of" suit by plaintiff.—Where a suit is one for partition, and pending the suit the parties come to a compromise, the plaintiff is not at liberty to withdraw the suit under sub rule (1), and the defendants are entitled to a decree in terms of the compromise under O 23, r 3 (f) If after a preliminary decree for taking accounts the plaintiff wishes to withdraw the suit and the defendant wishes to continue, the proper course is to transpose the plaintiff as defendant, and the defendant as plaintiff (g).

Withdrawal of suit by plaintiff appellant.—The plaintiff brought a suit for partition against several defendants and came to a compromise with some of the defendants making a concession in their favour and a decree was passed in the suit based in part on the compromise and as to the rest in invitum The plaintiff appealed and while the appeal was pending withdrew the suit But the Court held that it was not open to the plaintiff who had made a concession afterwards to annul it by withdrawing from the suit of his own free will and without permission of the Court If the plaintiff withdraws in such a case, the proper course is for the appellate Court to dismiss the appeal, and the decree of the first Court will then stand as a subsisting decree (h) But when a plaintiff appellant was allowed to withdraw his suit and appeal and so deprive the defendant of a judgment in his favour, the High Court though not approving of the order refused to interfere in revision (i)

Withdrawal "of" suit by plaintiff respondent.—There is no provision of law allowing plaintiff respondent in an appeal to withdraw as of right his suit as against the appellant It is discretionary with the appellate Court to allow such a withdrawal, and the appellate Court will not allow such a withdrawal if the result will be to prejudice the appellant and other respondents who have not appealed A sues B and C The claim against B is to establish his right to a channel and against C to prevent interference by him in the use of the channel A decree is passed against both the defendants C does

Held, upon the above facts that A, the plaintiff respondent, should not be allowed to withdraw the suit as against B, the defendant appellant, and the proper course is to hear the appeal on the merits (1).

Withdrawal by decree holder "of" application for execution—Though a decree holder who has applied for execution of his decree may not be entitled, by virtue of the provisions of O 23, r 4, to "withdraw" his application under sub r (1) of this rule, he is entitled, if he does not wish to proceed to apply to the Court that the application be dismissed (1)

Withdrawal "of" application for withdrawal of suit.—Where an application for withdrawal of a suit has not been finally disposed of, it is open to the Court, in a proper case, to allow the plaintiff to withdraw the application for withdrawal of the suit and to proceed with the trial (1)

Sub rules (2) and (3) Withdrawal "from" Suit.

Scope of sub rule (2)—Sub r (2) allows the Court in the cases specified therein to grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, in which case the bar against the fresh suit which is otherwise imposed on a plaintiff who abandons his first suit is removed (m)

"Formal defect"—Sub r (2) provides that where the Court is satisfied that a suit must fail by reason of "some formal defect, or that there are "other sufficient grounds" for allowing the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit for the same subject matter as the Court may, on such terms as it thinks fit, grant the plaintiff permission to withdraw from such suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject matter of such suit. A misjoinder of parties or of causes of action is a formal defect within the meaning of this rule (n). Similarly an erroneous valuation of the subject matter of a suit is a formal defect, and leave may be granted to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (o). But leave should not be granted where the suit is deliberately undervalued to save Court fees and to bring it in a Court of a lower grade (p). Leave to withdraw may also be granted where a material document is not properly stamped (q), or registered (r), for these are in the nature of formal defects. Where a plaintiff institutes two suits for rent, and then applies for leave to withdraw the suits with liberty to file a fresh suit consolidating the two claims to avoid the danger of the second suit being held barred under the provisions of O 2, r 2, the case is one of a formal defect, and leave may be granted under sub r (2) (s). The institution of a suit in a Court which has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit is a formal defect, or at least a defect analogous to a formal defect so as to bring the case under sub r (2) (b). a case, however, the Court should not act under this rule, but return the plaint under O 7, r 10 to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court (i). But O 7 r 10, does not apply to Chartered High Courts. In the case, therefore, of a Chartered High Court, the Court may it seems, act under this rule.

"Other sufficient grounds"—Sec 97 of the Code of 1859 ran as follows—

'If the plaintiff at any time before final judgment satisfy the Court that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw from the suit, with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the same matter it shall be competent to the Court to grant such permission on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it may deem proper' "

It is to be noted that sec 97 of the Code of 1859 did not contain the words "some formal defect" which occur in the present Code. In Watson v Collector of Rajshahye (u) the plaintiff sued the defendant to set aside an auction sale of a putnee Taluk for arrears of rent. A preliminary issue was framed whether the plaintiff was in a position to sue. A commission was issued for the examination of witnesses, but it was returned unexecuted as the witnesses had not been presented for examination. Upon this the Court finding no excuse for the plaintiff's neglect dismissed the suit for want of evidence, but with a reservation that the order made was not to be a bar to the plaintiff from proceeding as if the action had not been brought. The plaintiff then brought a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. The High Court of Bengal held that the second suit was barred as res judicata under s 2 of the Code of 1859. This decision was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council. In the course of the judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council, referring apparently to sec 97 of the Code of 1859, said as follows—

"There is a proceeding in those Courts (Courts of India) called a non suit, which operates as a dismissal of the suit without barring the right of the party to litigate the matter in a fresh suit, but that seems to be limited to cases of misjoinder either of parties or of the matters in contest in the suit, to cases in which a material document has been rejected because it has not borne the proper stamp and to cases in which there has been an erroneous valuation of the subject of the suit. In all those cases the suit fails by reason of some point of form, but their Lordships are aware of no case in which, upon an issue joined, and the party having failed to produce the evidence which he was bound to produce in support of that issue liberty has been given to him to bring a second suit except in the particular instance that is now before them.

The passage cited above indicates their Lordships' view of the meaning of the words "sufficient grounds" in sec 97 of the Code of 1859. This decision was followed by the High Court of Bengal in Madan Ram v Izrail (v), where it was held that a plaintiff cannot be permitted to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit after issues have been joined and he has failed to produce the evidence to support his claim. Madan Ram's case was also a case under the Code of 1859. The words 'by reason of some formal defect' appeared for the first time in sec 373 of the Code of 1877. The decision in Watson's case was also followed by the High Court of Calcutta in Khanda Co, Ltd v Doorga Charan (w) a case under the present Code. The question in that case was whether a plaintiff can be permitted to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit after he has adduced all his evidence and finds that the evidence is insufficient to establish his case. It was contended for the plaintiff that the words 'other sufficient grounds' were wide enough to entitle the Court to allow the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit under any circumstances that might be deemed sufficient by the Court but this contention was overruled,

- O. 23, r. 1 and it was held that the Court had no power to allow a plaintiff to withdraw from the suit after evidence had been adduced, and the evidence was found to be insufficient to support his case. In the course of his judgment Mookerji, J., after referring to clauses (a) and (b) of sub rule (2) said "The intention plainly is that a ground indicated in clause (b) must be of the same nature as the ground specified in clause (a)". This decision has been followed by the same High Court in subsequent cases (x). The High Courts of Patna (y), and Lahore (z) have followed the Calcutta decisions. The Oudh Court also holds that other sufficient grounds must be ejusdem generis with a formal defect (a). The High Court of Bombay held in some cases that the Court should not allow a suit to be withdrawn after the parties were ready for trial "if such withdrawal might operate to the prejudice of the defendant" (b). But this view was dissented from in a later case in which the Court followed the Calcutta decisions (c). In a recent case the same High Court held that it is wrong to grant leave to withdraw a suit with liberty to file a fresh suit after the evidence is concluded though the hearing may be adjourned for final arguments (d). In Allahabad (e) leave to withdraw has been granted where the plaintiff fails to give formal proof of a document which is essential for his success. In Madras there is a conflict of opinion whether the words "other sufficient grounds" mean grounds analogous to a "formal defect" as held in Calcutta or include grounds which may not be analogous to a "formal defect". In one case (f) the High Court held that the words "other sufficient grounds" must be ejusdem generis with the words "some formal defect," and that the Court had no power under this rule to give leave to the plaintiff after a substantial portion of his evidence had been heard. In a later case (g), however, Sadashiva Ayyar, J., said that the words "other sufficient grounds" were not ejusdem generis with the words "some formal defect."

of Judges are in favour of the view that the mere inability of the plaintiff to prove his case is not a "sufficient ground" within the meaning of this rule for giving him leave to withdraw with liberty to institute a fresh suit.

The Calcutta High Court has held that the plaintiff should not be allowed to withdraw his suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit after the suit has been heard and decided on the merits (h). Where a plaintiff sought to recover a sum of money upon certain allegations which were found untrue by the first Court, and the first Court dismissed the suit, and on appeal the District Judge came to the same conclusion, but granted leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, the High Court held that the order should not have been made and set it aside (i).

'On such terms as it thinks fit'—Where leave is granted to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit the defendant is ordinarily entitled to the costs of the suit (j) The High Court of Madras has held that where leave is granted to a plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs on or before a specified date and he fails to do so he is precluded from bringing a second suit and if such suit is brought, it should be dismissed (k) That Court also held that if leave is granted to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs (without specifying any date), the plaintiff is precluded from bringing a second suit unless the costs are paid before the institution of the second suit The payment of costs after the close of the trial in the second suit is not a compliance with the condition (l) But the same Court has held, that when it is absolutely impossible for the plaintiff to pay the costs on or before the date fixed by the Court as where the exact amount of costs cannot be ascertained in time, the Court has power to extend the time (m)

The High Court of Calcutta has not taken the same strict view of the condition as to the payment of costs as the Madras High Court Thus in Abdul Aziz v Ebrahim (n), where leave was granted to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs it was held that though the payment of costs was a condition precedent to the institution of a second suit non payment of costs before the institution of the second suit did not render the fresh suit bad ab initio, and further, that payment of costs before the trial of the fresh suit cured the irregularity In Shital v Gaya (o) Sir Lawrence Jenkins while agreeing with the result of the ruling in Abdul Aziz v Ebrahim based his decision on somewhat different grounds In that case also permission was granted to the plaintiff to institute a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs The plaintiff did not pay the costs and brought a second suit The suit was dismissed by the Munsif for non payment of costs The plaintiff appealed to the Subordinate Judge Pending the appeal the plaintiff paid the defendant's costs The Subordinate Judge thereupon sent back the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits It was held that inasmuch as the permission to withdraw and bring a fresh suit was made conditional on a certain payment the original suit could not be deemed to be withdrawn until those costs were paid and it must therefore be deemed to be a pending suit which became disposed of as soon as payment was made In the course of the judgment the learned Judge said 'When a plaintiff has obtained leave to withdraw upon payment of costs it is his duty to pay the costs at once for until they were paid there is no withdrawal with the permission of the Court In that view, when the case came before the Munsif he was not entitled to dismiss it All he could do was to regard sec 10 (of the Code) as a bar to his proceeding with the trial of the suit In so far as he dismissed it he exercised a power that was not vested in him and I think the Subordinate Judge was right when on payment of the costs he set aside the decree of the Munsif and sent back the case in order that the Munsif should proceed with the trial for on the payment of those costs there was the withdrawal complete under O 23 It appears to me important in cases of this kind to have regard to the precise terms of the section and I think it will be well that the Court when giving permission to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit should

O. 23, r. 1 from the date of the Court's order granting permission to withdraw for otherwise the suit might be pending for an indefinite time (g)

Where a plaintiff who had brought a suit for redemption against the mortgagee was allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit within two years and he brought the fresh suit after two years the High Court of Bombay held that he was entitled to do so. The reason given was that a mortgagor has a right to sue for redemption at any time within the period of limitation unless his equity of redemption has in the meantime been extinguished (r)

Notice.—Though this rule does not specifically require that notice of an application under it must be given to the opposite party still it is an elementary rule of universal application that a judicial order which may possibly affect or prejudice any party cannot be made unless he has been afforded an opportunity to be heard. Hence if an order is made under this rule granting leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit without giving notice to the opposite party the order will be set aside under s. 115 of the Code on the ground of material irregularity (s)

Permission need not be express.—The permission mentioned in this section need not be given in express terms. It is sufficient if it can be implied from the order read with the application on which the order was made (t)

Form of order.—Where leave is granted to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit the order must not be one dismissing the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit but one granting permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (u). Where leave is refused the Court should simply dismiss the application. It should not make an order disposing of the suit on the assumption that the plaintiff would withdraw the suit under sub rule (1) if the application was refused (v)

Permission extends to one fresh suit only.—The permission granted in the original suit to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter extends only to the filing of one fresh suit and not more. Hence where leave is granted to a plaintiff to bring a fresh suit on payment of the defendant's costs and the plaintiff brings a fresh suit without paying the costs and the suit is dismissed the dismissal is a bar to the institution of a third suit in respect of the same subject matter (w). The third suit will be dismissed even if the second suit was dismissed with leave to file a fresh suit for the leave so granted will not affect the condition imposed by the first suit which was broken when the second suit was filed (x)

Dismissal of suit coupled with liberty to bring a fresh suit.—There is no power in the Courts of India to dismiss a suit with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit for the same matter (y)

Liberty to consolidate withdrawn suit with a pending suit.—A Court it seems has no power under this rule to grant permission to a plaintiff to consolidate the claim in the suit which is withdrawn with a claim in another suit pending at the time. But if such an order is made, it cannot be said to be one made without jurisdiction, and it is not a nullity (z). But there is nothing to prevent the Court from granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from two suits with liberty to bring a fresh suit consolidating the claims in the two suits (a).

Withdrawing with permission: Additional relief in fresh suit.—The effect of withdrawing a suit with the permission of the Court, is to leave the parties in the same position as that in which they stood before the suit was brought. Therefore the plaintiff may include in the fresh suit a relief which he might have included in the first suit, but which he had omitted to include in it (b).

Withdrawing with permission after suit has abated against some of the defendants.—Where a suit has abated against a defendant, and it is then withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit, such permission does not entitle the plaintiff to join the legal representatives of such defendant as party defendants in the fresh suit (c).

Withdrawing without permission. Bar of fresh suit.—Where a plaintiff withdraws from a suit without the permission of the Court, he is precluded from instituting a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter [sub rule (3)], and against the same defendant. The rule is mandatory, and when a suit by an idol was withdrawn a second suit by a shebait or manager of the idol was held to be barred (d). See notes below 'Same defendant,' and 'Same subject matter.'

Same defendant.—Though the rule does not expressly say so, the fresh suit that is barred must be a suit against the same defendant. A second suit will not be barred if it is brought against a different person. A obtains a decree against B and in execution of the decree attaches certain property alleged to belong to B. C intervenes under O 21 r 58 alleging that the property belongs to him. C's application is rejected, and he brings a regular suit against A alone to establish his title to the property. C then withdraws from the suit without obtaining permission of the Court to bring a second suit for the same subject matter. After the suit has been withdrawn, the attachment falls through. A then re-attaches the same property in execution of the same decree, and the property is sold and purchased by D. C does not appear to contest the second execution proceeding after the withdrawal of his suit. He then institutes a suit against D to recover possession of the property, alleging that the property is his sole and exclusive property. The suit is not barred under this rule, as B the judgment debtor, was not a party to the first suit (e).

Same subject matter.—As already stated if a suit is withdrawn without the permission of the Court, the plaintiff is precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter. The expression used in the corresponding s 373 of the Code of 1882 was 'matter'. A Calcutta case under the Code of 1882 said that matter did not mean property, but that it had reference to the right in property which the plaintiff seeks to enforce. In that case, A had instituted a suit to establish his right to sell certain property in satisfaction of a decree against B, but he withdrew the suit without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit. Subsequently he instituted another suit to establish his right to sell the same property in satisfaction of another decree against B. It was held that the second suit was not barred. The Court said: 'Now, though the property in respect of which the present suit is brought is the same as that in respect of which the former suit was brought, still that would not be sufficient to make the present

O. 23, r. 1 suit one for 'the same matter' as that for which the former suit was brought, within the meaning of s 373, for the cause of action in the two suits was different (f) In a Madras case under the present Code, where the next reversionary heir of a deceased Hindu instituted a suit against the widow of the deceased and an alienee from her of her husband's property for a declaration that the alienation was not binding on the estate, and on the death of the widow withdrew the suit without obtaining leave to bring a fresh suit, it was held that the subsequent suit which he brought against the alienee, for possession of the same property, was not barred Wallis, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, said "The terms 'subject matter' and 'the same matter' which occurred in the corresponding s 373 of the old Code have not been defined, and must, we think, be construed strictly in a penal provision of this character Without attempting an exhaustive definition of all that may be included in the term 'subject matter,' we are of opinion that where, as in the present case, the cause of action and the relief claimed in the second suit are not the same as the cause of action and the relief claimed in the first suit, the second suit cannot be considered to have been brought in respect of the same subject matter as the first suit" (g) The contrary, however, was held by the Chief Court of the Punjab in a case in which the facts were almost similar to the Madras case (h) In a Bombay case (i) A sued to eject B but finding that the notice to quit was defective withdrew the suit without obtaining the leave of the Court Subsequently A gave a formal notice to quit, and brought a fresh suit for ejectment It was held that the suit was not barred under this rule, as the previous suit was not for the same subject matter as the second suit Scott, C.J., said, We are of opinion that 'subject matter' means, to use the words of Order I, Rule 1, 'the series of acts or transactions alleged to exist giving rise to the relief claimed' Obviously the first series of acts or transactions which formed the basis of the first suit was incomplete, or the plaintiff would have been able to prosecute his suit to decree It was incomplete because there was no notice to quit The second series of acts or transactions is complete because the notice to quit has been given, and, therefore, the two suits are not in respect of the same subject matter" But the withdrawal of a prior suit for a declaration of title to certain war bonds is a bar to a subsequent suit for consequential relief in respect of the same bonds [that is, for recovery of possession] (j)

A suit for partition, however, stands on a different footing the cause of action in such a suit being a recurring cause of action Hence the withdrawal of a suit for partition of joint property, though without permission of the Court, is no bar to a second suit for partition of the same property against the same defendants (k)

Withdrawing without leave of Court but with consent of defendant—
In a case decided under s 97 of the Code of 1859 it was observed by Norman, J., that where a plaintiff withdraws his suit without the permission of the Court, but with the consent of the defendant, he is not precluded from instituting a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter (l) The observations of Norman, J., on this point have been doubted in a recent case (m) The doubt seems to be well founded Withdrawing from suit pending arbitration—When the matters in dispute in a suit are referred to arbitration by an order of the Court made under Schedule II, para 3, the Court has no power under this rule to grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit. The provisions of this rule do not apply to such a case, for when once a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court is precluded from dealing with it in the same suit save in the manner and to the extent provided in Schedule II. A sues B for possession of certain property. The matters in difference between the parties are referred to arbitration by an order of the Court. The Court has no power, either before or after the award is made, to grant permission to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit (n). But where a reference to arbitration has been made without the intervention of the Court (that is, not by an order of the Court), and one of the parties to the reference applies to the Court under Schedule II, para 20, to file the award, the provisions of this rule apply, and it is open to the applicant to withdraw the application, though numbered and registered as a suit under that para 20, under sub r (1) of this rule (o).

Power of appellate Court to give leave to plaintiff to withdraw from suit—It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (p), Madras (q), and Bombay (r), that where a plaintiff's suit is dismissed, and he appeals from the decree, the appellate Court has power to allow the plaintiff appellant to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in respect of the same subject matter. see s 107 (2). The contrary view seems to be implied in a Calcutta decision (s). But an appellate Court has no power to grant such leave before the appeal is admitted (t).

Erroneous order granting leave to withdraw and jurisdiction—An order for withdrawal of a suit with leave to institute a fresh suit made in circumstances not within the scope of this rule that is made in a case where there is no "formal defect" or "other sufficient ground" within the meaning of this rule, cannot be treated as an order made without jurisdiction [though it may be challenged in revision on the ground of material irregularity—see notes below, 'Revision'], such order is consequently not null and void (u). The order not being a nullity, a fresh suit instituted upon leave so granted is maintainable, it is not barred as res judicata. Further, the Court trying the subsequent suit is not competent to enter into the question whether the Court which granted the plaintiff permission to withdraw the first suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit had power to make the order and had properly made it (r).

Appeal—An order under this rule granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit or to abandon a part of his claim with liberty to institute a fresh suit is not appealable. Such an order is not one of the appealable orders mentioned in O 43, r 1, nor is it a "decree" within the meaning of s 2 (2) (w).

Letters Patent appeal—An order of a single Judge of a High Court granting leave to withdraw from a suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit is a "judgment" within

O. 23, r. 1 the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent, and appealable as such (x) Similarly an order of a single Judge of a High Court dismissing an application for the revision of an order giving leave to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit is a "judgment" within the meaning of that clause and is appealable as such (y)

Revision—Though an order granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit is not appealable, it is open to revision if it falls within s 115 of the Code. An order is open to revision under that section, if the Court which made it had no jurisdiction to make it as in the undermentioned case (z), or if the Court acted illegally or with material irregularity in making the order (a).

An order granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit in circumstances not within the scope of the present rule, that is, in a case in which there is no "formal defect" or "other sufficient ground for making it, as where the order is made on the ground of the plaintiff's inability to prove his case, cannot be treated as an order made without jurisdiction [see notes, 'Erroneous order granting leave to withdraw and jurisdiction'] The High Court, therefore, has no power to interfere with such an order on the ground that it was made without jurisdiction (b). But it has been held in a series of cases that the High Court will interfere with such an order on the ground of material irregularity and will set it aside in revision (c). Similarly the High Court will interfere and set aside in revision on the ground of material irregularity an order granting leave to a plaintiff to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, if the order was made ex parte (d), or if leave was granted without assigning any reasons (e), or if leave was granted on the ground that there was a "formal defect" or "other sufficient ground," but no inquiry was made as to whether there was in fact a formal defect or other sufficient ground (f). In a Patna case, the High Court held that where the defendant himself alleges a 'formal defect' the Court has jurisdiction to pass any order it pleases under this rule (g). But this seems to be an extreme view. In a Madras case, where the plaintiff deliberately undervalued his suit and paid insufficient court fees and brought the suit in a District Munsif's Court, and then applied for leave to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, and leave was granted, the Court was held to have acted with material irregularity and the order was set aside in revision (h). In a Calcutta case, the first Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on a finding that the plaintiff's allegations were untrue. On appeal the District Judge came to the same conclusion, but granted leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The High Court held that the order was not "properly" made and set it aside (i).

In Allahabad, it has been held that the High Court will interfere in revision if the lower Court has not applied its mind to the circumstances of the case and the provisions of this rule, in other words, if it has not exercised a judicial discretion (j) But if the lower Court has exercised a judicial discretion, the High Court will not interfere in revision merely because the High Court itself might have taken a different view of the matter (l)

Effect of reversal of order granting leave to withdraw—Where a fresh suit is filed before the reversal in revision of an order granting leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, the procedure is to declare the fresh suit null and void and to direct the lower Court to proceed with the original suit from the stage which it had reached when the order granting leave was made by that Court (l)

Sub rule (4): Co plaintiffs

Co plaintiffs—By sub r (4) it is enacted that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to authorize the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others. This sub rule limits the jurisdiction of the Court to grant permission to withdraw a suit to cases where all the plaintiffs join in the application. Where the Court in contravention of this sub-rule allows two out of four plaintiffs without the consent of the other two to withdraw from a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, it acts without jurisdiction, and a second suit in respect of the same subject matter is barred. But if the suit that was withdrawn was a suit for partition, the second suit, it has been held, will not be barred, for a cause of action in a suit for partition is a recurring one and a joint owner has a right to come to Court at any time provided he proves that he has a subsisting joint title and possession in the properties within the period of limitation (m).

It is not clear whether sub rule (4) governs sub rule (1), but irrespective of this question a Court can refuse to allow one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the co plaintiffs if such a course would be prejudicial to their interests (m1)

Representative suit—If the suit is a representative suit the person conducting it cannot withdraw so as to terminate the litigation. In a case in which the Collector acting as Court of Wards and guardian of an estate withdrew a suit to set aside an adoption a reversioner was allowed to carry on the suit (m2). See in this connection note, Abatement of suit under O 1, r 8

Rule does not apply

Probate proceedings—This rule does not apply to probate proceedings, the provision in s. 55 of the Probate and Administration Act 5 of 1881 [now Indian Succession Act 39 of 1925, s. 268] being qualified by the words "so far as the circumstances of the case will admit" (o)

Limitation—The fresh suit must be instituted within the period of limitation. It will not be after the period of limitation even though the suit that was permitted to be withdrawn was within the period of limitation (p). But if the first suit was brought in a Court that had no jurisdiction to entertain it, that Court would have no power under rule 1 above to give leave to withdraw with liberty to bring a fresh suit. If it does give leave to the plaintiff to withdraw from the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit, the order is one made without jurisdiction. Hence if a second suit is instituted, though upon leave so granted, the case will be governed not by the provisions of this rule, but by those of sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, 1908, and the time during which the first suit was prosecuted will be excluded in computing the period of limitation for the second suit (q).

3. [S. 375.] Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or where the defendant satisfies the plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit, the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit.

Compromise of suit

Alterations in the rule.—This rule differs from the corresponding sec. 375 of the Code of 1882 in three respects, namely —

- 1 The words "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that" have been added into the rule to set at rest the conflict of opinion noted below in the commentary under the head "Where a compromise set up by one party is denied by the other."
- 2 The words "the Court shall order such agreement . . . to be recorded" have been substituted for the words "such agreement . . . shall be recorded." The object is to bring out the word "order" prominently, as an appeal is now given from an order made under this rule recording or refusing to record an agreement. See O 43, r 1, cl. (m), and notes below "Appeal."
- 3 The words, "and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction," which occurred in the old section after the words "so far as it relates to the suit" have been omitted. See notes to sec 96, "Sub s (3) consent decree not appealable."

Scope of the rule.—The agreement, compromise or satisfaction contemplated by this rule may (1) relate to the whole suit, or (2) it may relate only to a part thereof or (3) it may also comprise matters that do not relate to the suit. When the agreement relates to the whole suit, the Court must, on being invited by the parties, record the agreement, and pass a decree in accordance with the agreement, and the suit stops there. Where the agreement relates to a part only of the suit, the Court must, on the application of the parties, pass a decree in accordance with the agreement and the suit may be proceeded with as to the rest. But the Court is not obliged to pass a decree as soon as the compromise is recorded. In the case of a compromise of part of a suit which did not include a party whose interest could not be separated, the Court was held to be justified in postponing passing a decree until the termination of the suit (r). Where the agreement, besides relating to the suit or a part thereof comprises matters that do not relate to the suit, the decree must comprise only such terms of the agreement as relate to the suit, but not the rest. As to the case where a decree comprises matters not relating to the suit see below notes. Where the decree comprises matters that do not relate to the suit

Procedure to be followed under this rule—It is important to note that a consent decree under this rule can be passed only after an order is made directing the compromise to be recorded. This is not a mere matter of form as the aggrieved party has a right of appeal against such order under O 43 r 1 cl (m) (s). See notes below, Appeal.

Where a compromise set up by one party is denied by the other—If a party to a suit alleges that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement and applies to the Court to record the agreement and to pass a decree in accordance therewith but the opposite party to the suit denies the agreement or wishes to recede from it the question arises whether the Court has power in the one case to decide if the agreement was effected and to pass a decree accordingly and in the other case to pass a decree in spite of the opposite parties' reluctance. Under the old section both branches of this question were answered in the affirmative by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta (t) but in the negative by the High Court of Allahabad (u). According to the Allahabad decisions the Court had no power under the old section to record an agreement and to pass a decree in accordance therewith unless both the parties consented before the Court to have the agreement recorded. Thus even where there was an agreement to adjust the suit the Court could act under that section only if both the parties were in agreement at the moment of moving the Court and if they were not then in accord the agreement could only be enforced by a fresh suit for specific performance. The conflict arose from the words "if a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise with which sec 373 commenced". The present rule gives effect to the Bombay, Madras and Calcutta decisions. The words "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part" clearly show that the Court has power under this rule where an agreement or compromise is denied to decide whether as a fact the alleged agreement or compromise was made and if it is satisfied that it was made to record it (v). The Privy Council have said that an agreement to compromise a suit must be established by general principles which govern the formation of contracts though there are special rules governing its enforcement which arise out of its intrinsic nature (w).

Submission and award—It was held in two Bombay cases under the Code of 1882 that when the matters in difference in a pending suit are referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and an award is made the submission and the award might be treated as an adjustment of the suit by an agreement within the meaning of sec 373 of that Code and might be recorded as an adjustment under that section (x). In the later of the two cases (y) Starling J. said that it was open to the plaintiff to proceed under sec 520 [now sec II para 90] but that it was not obligatory upon him to do so as there was no express provision in the Code of 1882 that no other course than that prescribed by sec 525 should be followed.

Procedure to be followed under this rule.—It is important to note that a consent decree under this rule can be passed only after an order is made directing the compromise to be recorded. This is not a mere matter of form, as the aggrieved party has a right of appeal against such order under O 42, r. 1, cl (m) (s). See notes below, "Appeal"

Where a compromise set up by one party is denied by the other.—If a party to a suit alleges that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement, and applies to the Court to record the agreement and to pass a decree in accordance therewith but the opposite party to the suit denies the agreement, or wishes to recede from it, the question arises whether the Court has power in the one case to decide if the agreement was effected and to pass a decree accordingly, and in the other case to pass a decree in spite of the opposite parties' reluctance. Under the old section both branches of this question were answered in the affirmative by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta (t), but in the negative by the High Court of Allahabad (u). According to the Allahabad decisions, the Court had no power under the old section to record an agreement and to pass a decree in accordance therewith, unless both the parties consented before the Court to have the agreement recorded. Thus even where there was an agreement to adjust the suit, the Court could act under that section only if both the parties were in agreement at the moment of moving the Court, and if they were not then in accord, the agreement could only be enforced by a fresh suit for specific performance. The conflict arose from the words "if a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise" with which sec 373 commenced. The present rule gives effect to the Bombay, Madras and Calcutta decisions. The words "where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part" clearly show that the Court has power under this rule, where an agreement or compromise is denied, to decide whether, as a fact, the alleged agreement or compromise was made, and if it is satisfied that it was made, to record it (v). The Privy Council have said that an agreement to compromise a suit must be established by general principles which govern the formation of contracts, though there are special rules governing its enforcement which arise out of its intrinsic nature (w).

Submission and award.—It was held in two Bombay cases under the Code of 1882 that when the matters in difference in a pending suit are referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and an award is made, the submission and the award might be treated as an "adjustment of the suit by an agreement" within the meaning of sec 373 of that Code, and might be recorded as an adjustment under that section (x). In the later of the two cases (y), Starling, J., said that it was open to the plaintiff to proceed under sec 525 [now sch II, para 20], but that it was not obligatory upon him to do so as there was no express provision in the Code of 1882 that no other course than that prescribed by sec 525 should be followed.

The present Code, however, does contain such a provision, for it is enacted by sec 89 that "save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit

O. 23, r. 3 or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the Second Schedule." In a Bombay case decided under this Code, it was held by Davar, J., that where in a pending suit the parties go to arbitration without the intervention of the Court and an award is made, the provisions of para. 20 of Schedule II do not apply to the award, but that the submission and the award may be recorded as an "adjustment" under this rule. As to sec. 89, it was said, that the words "any other law for the time being in force" were wide enough to include the provisions of O. 23, r. 3 (2). Four years later Sir Norman Macleod, another judge of the same High Court, held in Shaiakhaw v. Tyab Haji Ayub (a), that the words "any other law for the time being in force" in sec. 89 do not include the present rule, and that having regard to the provisions of that section a submission and an award could not be recorded as an adjustment under this rule, and that the correct procedure was to apply to the Court to file the award under paragraphs 20 and 21 of Sch. II. The above decisions were reviewed by Sir Norman Macleod in Manilal v. Goculdas (b). The learned Judge came to the conclusion that his decision in Shaiakhaw's case was erroneous, and said "They [that is, the parties] may make the agreement an order of Court, and then paras. 1 to 16 of Schedule II, apply. If they do not make the agreement an order of Court, they cannot ask for the agreement to be filed under para. 17, they cannot ask for the award if made to be filed under paras. 20 and 21. If an award is made and both parties accept the award, they can apply for a consent decree in terms thereof and there is no need to apply for an order recording the terms of the adjustment. If the plaintiff disputes the award for any reason and proceeds with the suit, the defendant may plead the award and have the case set down for hearing on the issue whether the award is binding as an adjustment. If the defendant disputes the award, the plaintiff may have the case set down for trial on the issue whether the adjustment could be recorded. Either party may file a suit to enforce the award, and apply for a stay of the original suit." The ground of the ruling in Manilal's case is that a submission and an award properly made in accordance with the submission amounts to an "adjustment" within the meaning of this rule, and as such it may be enforced under the general law of contract. The result, according to that ruling, is that where parties to a suit refer their disputes to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, and an award is made, an application to pass a decree in terms of the award is an application to record a compromise within the meaning of this rule. Further, if an objection is taken to the award on the ground of misconduct on the part of the arbitrator, the Court, acting under this rule, has jurisdiction under this rule to enquire into the charge of misconduct. If the Court does make the inquiry, and refuses to record the submission and award, the order is not open to revision under sec. 115 above (c). The High Court of Calcutta has dissented from the decision in Manilal's case, and held that the words "any other law for the time being in force" in sec. 89 do not include the present rule, further, that where in a pending suit the parties go to arbitration without an order of the Court, the award cannot be enforced under this rule or Schedule II or under the Arbitration Act, also that if a submission to arbitration of matters in difference in a pending suit is to take place, there is no provision for it other than the provisions in Schedule II (d). The result, according to the Calcutta decisions, is that if an award is made under a reference without an order of the Court in a pending suit, the Court should not take any notice of the award, and the suit may be proceeded with on the application of either party (e). The High Court of Lahore has held that an award made without the intervention of the Court in a pending suit cannot be recorded as an adjustment under this

O. 23, r. 3 to have the suit dismissed on plaintiff's failure to take the oath. The Court should not dismiss the suit, but should record the refusal and the reasons thereof under s. 12 of the Oaths Act 10 of 1873, and proceed with the trial (v)

"Lawful agreement or compromise."—Where both parties to a suit apply to the Court under this rule to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise arrived at between them, the Court has no power to refuse to pass the decree, on the ground that it considers the compromise to be too favourable to one of the parties (w). The Privy Council have said that the Court has a duty not a discretion to record a lawful compromise subject possibly to an inherent power of refusal when substantial injustice would be worked (x). An agreement may be lawful although it is voidable for fraud or undue influence (y). The rule does not refer to such agreements but if the agreement or compromise is unlawful, as where it is opposed to public policy, the Court should refuse to pass a decree in accordance with the compromise even if the parties consent (z). With reference to public and charitable trusts the Court not only has the power, but is under a duty to scrutinize the compromise and will refuse to make a decree in terms of the compromise if it sacrifices the interests of the trust (a). If a decree is passed under this rule on a compromise which is not lawful, the Court should not enforce the decree in execution proceedings. Thus a sale of an office attached to a temple is against public policy. Hence if in a suit against the holder of such an office a compromise is arrived at whereby the holder of the office consents to the office being sold in satisfaction of the debt due to the plaintiff, and a decree is passed on the compromise, the Court should notwithstanding the consent decree refuse to sell the office in execution (b). It is clear that if the matter had rested in contract only, the Court could not have enforced the sale in a suit brought for that purpose. The mere fact that the contract is embodied in a decree does not alter the incidents of the contract. By private agreement, converted into a decree, parties cannot empower themselves to do that which they could not have done by private agreement alone (c). Therefore a decree passed on a compromise with a minor (d), or with a guardian ad litem of a minor after the minor has attained majority (e) is a nullity. A compromise of a suit by a disqualified proprietor is invalid unless it has been sanctioned by the Court of Wards under s. 3 of the Bengal Court of Wards Act 1879 and so is a decree passed on such a compromise (f). The principle is that where a decree is based on an agreement of compromise, the Court must be taken to adopt the agreement with all its incidents (g). "The contract of the parties is not the less a contract, and subject to the incidents of a contract, because there is superadded the command of the Judge" (h). On this principle in a case where A sued B on a mortgage, and C, who was a second mortgagee, was joined as a party defendant, and A and B entered into a compromise whereby A agreed to pay B more than he was entitled to, the Court refused to pass a decree in terms of the agreement on the ground that the compromise was detrimental to the interests of C, and that it was not therefore 'lawful'.

the latter class of cases it may be stated that as a general rule "all terms which form the consideration for the adjustment of the matters in dispute, whether they form the subject matter of the suit or not, become related to the suit, and can be embodied in the decree." Thus where A sued B on a promissory note, and a compromise was arrived at between the parties whereby B agreed to pay the amount of the note by instalments, and the amount was also made a charge on certain immovable property of B, it was held that there was nothing in the present rule to preclude the Court from making the amount a charge on B's property, even though the relief claimed was for a money decree only. The charge, though not claimed as a relief, related to the suit (r). It formed the consideration for the time allowed for payment of the sum decreed by instalments, and thus constituted an integral and necessary part of the adjustment of the claim in the suit (w). It has similarly been held that where A and B are joint tenants of certain land, and A, having paid up the entire rent, sues B for contribution, and a compromise is arrived at whereby B in consideration of A abandoning his claim gives up his share of the land to A, the term as to B giving up his share is a term which relates to the suit (x). Where in execution of a decree obtained by A against B, A attaches certain property, and C claiming the property as his own brings a suit against A for a declaration of his title to the property, and a compromise is arrived at between the parties whereby A admits C's ownership of the property, and C agrees to execute a mortgage of the same property in favour of A for the amount of the decree obtained by A against B, the term as to the execution of the mortgage is a term which relates to the suit (y). But where A sued B to restrain B from building a projected house in such a way as to interfere with A's enjoyment of light and air, and a compromise was arrived at between the parties whereby B undertook not to build his house higher than it originally was and also agreed not to let water into the passage between the houses, it was held that the arrangement as to the passage did not relate to the suit, and that the operative part of the decree should be confined to the undertaking as to the house (z). But the parties can get over the difficulty by amending the pleadings with the leave of the Court so as to comprise in the pleadings and the decree matters that did not relate to the original suit but are comprised in the compromise (a). In a Patna case where the plaintiff claimed Rs 7,000 with interest at the rate of 9½ per cent per annum, and a consent decree was passed whereby the defendant agreed to pay Rs. 2,500 with interest at the rate of 9 per cent per annum if the amount was paid on a specified date, but at 24 per cent per annum if it was not paid on or before that date, the Court refused execution of the decree with interest at 24 per cent on the ground that that part of the compromise which provided for the payment of interest at the rate of 24 per cent per annum was outside the scope of the suit, and allowed execution with interest at 9 per cent only (b). This decision cannot be supported either on principle or on authority so far as the ground on which it is based is concerned. See notes below, "Execution of decree based on a compromise."

Parties—If persons other than parties to the suit are parties to the compromise, it cannot be recorded unless those persons are brought on the record as parties to the

O. 23, r. 3 ³suit This is because the Court has to be satisfied before recording a compromise under this rule that there is a lawful compromise, and this is not possible in the absence of those that are not parties to the suit (c) In a case where the first defendant transferred his interest in the subject matter of the suit to the second defendant, who effected a compromise with the plaintiff, the Privy Council held that the fact that the first defendant remained on the record did not give him sufficient interest to entitle him to raise any objection to the compromise or to appeal from the decree (d)

Compromise pending arbitration—The Calcutta High Court has held that where the matters in dispute in a suit are referred to arbitration under an order of reference made by the Court, and pending the reference the parties adjust the suit by an agreement in writing signed by them and the arbitrators, the agreement does not amount to an award. Nor can it be recorded as an adjustment under this rule unless the arbitration has been superseded by an order of the Court, the mere fact that the time for making the award has expired does not amount to a supersession of the arbitration, there must be an order of supersession under para 8 of Schedule II (e) In a Madras case, where the lower Court had under somewhat similar circumstances, recorded the adjustment under the present rule, it was held that as the time for making the award had expired when the adjustment was recorded, the Court must be deemed to have exercised its power to supersede the arbitration under para 8 of Schedule II (f)

Execution of decree based on a compromise—This rule requires that where the Court is invited to pass a decree in terms of an agreement or compromise, the agreement or compromise should be lawful, and, further, that the operative part of the decree should be confined to the actual subject matter of the suit. But what if a decree is passed on an agreement that is not lawful, or that the operative part of the decree comprises matters that do not relate to the suit. Is the Court bound to execute the decree literally according to its terms? The decisions on the subject may be summarized as follows—

First, where a consent decree is based on an agreement or compromise that is not lawful—As to this, it has been held that “so far as the decree embodies unlawful terms of a compromise, it is inoperative, and will not be enforced” (g) The subject has already been dealt with above in the notes, “Unlawful agreement or compromise”

Next, where a consent decree embraces matters that do not relate to the suit—Where a decree passed on a compromise includes terms that relate to the suit, all the terms may be enforced in execution of the decree. But where it contains terms that do not relate to the suit, there is a conflict of opinion whether those terms can be enforced in execution. According to the Allahabad and Madras decisions, such terms can be enforced in execution of the decree (h) It is not open to the party against whom the decree is sought to be executed to object to the decree on the ground that it contains matters foreign to the suit. Such an objection, it has been said by the Madras High Court, must be taken by way of appeal from the decree [and now by way of appeal under O 43, r 2 (m), from the order recording the compromise], and it cannot be taken in execution of the decree (i) On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta has said that such terms cannot be enforced in execution of the decrees, but they may be enforced as a contract

by a separate suit (j) Such a suit, however, according to the Allahabad High Court, O. 2, would be barred under s 47, the question, in the view taken by that Court, being one relating to execution (l) In Hemanta Kumari v Midnapur Zamindari Co (l), where a decree comprised lands outside the suit, the Judicial Committee observed "A perfectly proper and effectual method of carrying out the terms of [the present rule] would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relative to that part that was the subject of the suit, or it could introduce the agreement in a schedule to the decree, but in either case, although the operative part of the decree would be properly confined to the actual subject matter of the then existing litigation the decree taken as a whole would include the agreement This in fact is what the decree did in the present case. It may be that as a decree it was incapable of being executed outside the lands of the district, but that does not prevent it being received in evidence of its contents." With reference to this judgment of the Privy Council the Bombay High Court have said 'a perfectly proper and effectual method of carrying out the terms of r 3, O 23, would be for the decree to recite the whole of the agreement and then to conclude with an order relative to that part that was the subject of the suit, or to introduce the agreement in a schedule to the decree, but the operative part of the decree should be confined to the subject matter of the suit The operative part of the decree so confined to the subject matter of the suit can be enforced as between the parties to the suit under s. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code Any agreement as to matters, extraneous to the suit can be enforced in a separate suit' (m)

Registration—The Privy Council in Hemanta Kumari's case held that the exemption of a decree from registration applied to consent decrees passed on compromise even though the decree included in its non operative part a recital of an agreement affecting immovable properties outside the suit But the law has been altered by the amendment made in s 17 (2) (vi) of the Registration Act by s 10 of Act 21 of 1929 The effect of this amendment is that consent decrees and orders compromising immovable property other than that which is the subject matter of the suit are no longer exempted from registration See Mulla's Registration Act, 2nd Edn, note Amendment of cl. (vi) 'at p 84

Appeal—An order under this rule recording or refusing to record a compromise is appealable under O 43, r 1 (m) The Court may, under this rule, either record a compromise or it may refuse to do so. If an order is made recording the compromise, the Court must pass a decree in accordance with the compromise If an order is made refusing to record the compromise, the suit will be proceeded with But in either case, as stated above an appeal will lie from the order Where an order is made recording the agreement, an appeal may be preferred on any of the following grounds —

- 1 That there was no compromise at all, or no such compromise as the Court ordered to be recorded (n)
- 2 That the compromise is not lawful (o)

A compromise entered into by a pleader without the authority of his client is no compromise at all (q), and as such it comes under group (1) above

It has been held by the High Courts of Lahore (r), and Madras (s) that the fact that a decree has been passed in accordance with the compromise does not preclude an appeal from the order recording the compromise. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that an appeal from the order is incompetent if the appeal is filed after the passing of the decree (t). See notes to s 96, "Sub sec (3)" above "consent decrees not appealable," and notes above under the head "Scope of the rule"

The Bombay High Court holds that after the decree the appeal from the order is competent only if there had been a contest in the Court below as to the terms of the compromise (u)

O 43, r 1 (m), does not apply to an order setting aside an award under a reference made through the intervention of the Court. Such a case falls within Schedule II of the Code (v)

Proceedings in execution—One effect of this rule is that the provisions of r 3 shall not apply to execution proceedings. The reason is that O 21, r 2 and s 47 taken together provide a complete procedure for recording compromises arrived at in execution proceedings (w). This rule also prevents the provisions of r 1 from applying to proceedings in execution. Hence where an application for execution of a decree has been made, the Court has no power to allow the applicant to withdraw the application under r 1 (2) above with permission to make a fresh application (x). For the same reason the applicant cannot withdraw his application under r 1 (1) above though he may apply for its dismissal if he does not wish to proceed further with it (y). The High Court of Bombay has held that a compromise of a suit for partnership accounts after the passing of the preliminary decree and during the pendency of an enquiry before the Commissioner for taking accounts is not a compromise of a proceeding in execution. Such a compromise may therefore be recorded under r 3 above (z). In Rangoon it has been held that an agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee after the preliminary decree for sale and before the final decree whereby the mortgagee agrees to allow an extension of time to the mortgagor for payment of the decretal amount is within O 21, r 2, and not within r 3 above (a). The High Court of Patna has held that an application to set aside a sale under O 21, r 90, is not a proceeding in execution and that a compromise arrived at between the parties that on the judgment debtor paying a certain sum into Court by a particular date the Court sale should be set aside may, therefore, be recorded under r 3 above (b). But the correctness of this decision is doubtful

ORDER XXIV.

Payment into Court.

1. [S. 760, R. S. C., O. 22, r. 1.] The defendant in any O. 22

Deposit by defendant of amount in satisfaction of claim

suit to recover a debt or damages may, at any stage of the suit, deposit in Court such sum of money as he considers a satisfaction in full of the claim.

Payment into Court with denial of liability.—There is no provision in this rule enabling a defendant to pay money into Court with a denial of liability, in other words, without prejudice to his contentions, as there is in the corresponding English rule, see R. S. C., O. 22, rr 1 and 6

Mere willingness to pay.—A mere averment of willingness to pay made in the written statement is not equivalent to payment into Court, and it does not stop interest from running (c)

"Suit to recover a debt or damages."—This order applies only to a suit to recover a "debt or damages," and not to any other suits. Where a suit is instituted against a defendant to recover a debt or damages, he may pay into Court such amount as he considers a satisfaction in full of the plaintiff's claim. By such payment into Court, the defendant may be benefited (1) in respect of interest, for which see r. 3 and (2) in respect of costs, for which see r. 4 and illustrations thereto

Suit for injunction.—A suit for an injunction to restrain a defendant from building so as to interfere with the plaintiff's light and air, but not including any claim for damages is not a suit for 'debt or damages' within the meaning of this rule. No doubt, the Court has in such a suit a discretion under s. 19 of the Specific Relief Act I of 1877 to award damages in lieu of injunction, but this circumstance does not make the suit one for "damages" within the meaning of this rule (d). But it has been held by the High Court of Bombay, in view of the long established practice of that Court, that where a defendant in a suit for an injunction pure and simple pays into Court a sum which he considers a satisfaction in full of the plaintiff's claim, though it be with defence denying liability, and the Court allows damages only to the plaintiff and that too to the extent of the amount deposited by the defendant, the principle underlying r. 4 below ought to regulate the discretion of the Court (which it has under s. 35) in directing the payment of costs (e)

Suit for accounts.—This rule does not apply to suits for accounts (f)

Suit to recover debt or damages together with other relief.—This rule applies to suits to recover debt or damages though there may be other reliefs claimed in the suit, e.g., injunction (g)

"At any stage of the suit."—This means before decree as indicated by the words "in full of the claim" and the subsequent rules. See notes to r. 3 below, "Execution proceedings."

Payment into Court and insolvency of defendant.—In England it has been held that when money is paid into Court admitting liability, the plaintiff, in the event of the defendant's bankruptcy, is a secured creditor in respect of it, and when liability

O. 25, r. 1 (2) Whoever leaves British India under such circumstances as to afford reasonable probability that he will not be forthcoming whenever he may be called upon to pay costs shall be deemed to be residing out of British India within the meaning of sub-rule (1).

(3) On the application of any defendant in a suit for the payment of money, in which the plaintiff is a woman, the Court may at any stage of the suit make a like order if it is satisfied that such plaintiff does not possess any sufficient immovable property within British India.

Object of the rule.—The object of the rule is to provide for the protection of defendants in certain cases where, in the event of success, they may have difficulty in realizing their costs from the plaintiff (m).

Application of the rule.—Security for the costs of a defendant may be required from a plaintiff in the following two cases —

- I (a) Where the plaintiff resides out of British India, or where there are two or more plaintiffs, all the plaintiffs reside out of British India, and
- (b) where none of the plaintiffs has sufficient immovable property within British India other than the property in suit
- II. (a) Where the plaintiff is a woman ;
- (b) where her suit is for the payment of money ; and
- (c) she does not possess sufficient immovable property within British India

Discretion of Court in requiring security for costs from non-resident plaintiff.—The word "may" implies discretion. In the exercise of this discretion the Court will not order security for costs from a plaintiff residing out of British India in cases in which he cannot be rendered liable for the defendant's costs, e.g., an administration suit by the plaintiff as a creditor or a legatee in which the plaintiff's claim is admitted, or a suit on a mortgage or a promissory note where there is no defence. In such cases no security for costs will be ordered even though the plaintiff resides out of British India, and has not sufficient immovable property within British India, not even though the plaintiff be a woman (n).

Resides.—The "residence" intended in this rule is residence under such circumstances as will afford a reasonable probability that the plaintiff will be forthcoming when the suit is decided. Mere presence in British territory at the time of suit is not "residence" (o). Thus a resident of a Native State staying in Bombay for the sole purpose of taking proceedings to get his wife back cannot be said to "reside" in Bombay, within the meaning of this rule (p). But a stay of four years in Poona by a person who had come from a Native State was held to constitute residence (q). See notes to O. 20 above, "Actually and voluntarily resides"

Trading corporations—The “residence and domicile” of an incorporated trading company are determined by the situation of its principal place of business. By the principal place of business is meant the place where the administrative business of the company is conducted. This may not be the place where its manufacturing or other operations are carried on. Dicey & Conflict of Laws, 4th ed., p. 153.

British India—Aden is within British India (r). The Kathiawar States are not within British India (s), nor is the Cantonment of Wadhwan (t), nor the Cantonment of Secunderabad (u), nor the Rajkot Civil Station (r). See notes to s 1, “British India,” p. 4 above.

“Immovable property”—A plaintiff who is entitled under a will to a beneficial interest in a part of the surplus income derived from immovable property cannot be said to possess immovable property within the meaning of this rule (v). Leasehold property is “immovable property” within the meaning of this rule (x).

Poverty of plaintiff—Mere poverty is no ground for requiring a plaintiff to give security for the costs of the suit (y). But this is not so in the case of an appellant (z). See note “In its discretion” under O 41, r 10, at p. 1084. The Court will require security if the plaintiff is not the real litigant and sues on behalf of another who is not a party to the suit (a). In a Bombay case, a suit was brought by a Parsi father and his minor daughter as plaintiffs for damages for the defendant’s breach of his promise to marry the daughter. The father was an undischarged insolvent and it was alleged that the suit was really the father’s suit and that he was seeking to make money out of his daughter’s engagement. The Court upon these grounds ordered the father to furnish security for the costs of the defendant (b). In the last mentioned case the Court relied upon a dictum of Bowen L.J. in Couell v. Taylor (c) that, in order to prevent abuse, if an insolvent sues as nominal plaintiff for the benefit of somebody else, he must give security.

Inherent power to order security for costs—The case for security for costs from a puppet plaintiff is clearly outside the scope of this rule. It can only be brought in under the inherent power of the Court. In one case the Calcutta High Court said that it had such power (d). In a later case the same High Court said that the Court had no such power, the reason given being that the inherent power of the Court cannot be invoked in matters for which the Code does actually provide (e). See notes above, “Poverty of plaintiff.”

Where leave has been granted to plaintiff to sue as a pauper—The Court has no power under this rule to require security for costs from a person to whom leave has been granted under O 33 r 8, to sue as a pauper, for to do so would be to render the leave nugatory (f). If an order is made requiring a plaintiff to furnish security for

O. 25, r. 1 the costs of the defendant, and leave is subsequently granted to the plaintiff to continue the suit as a pauper, the order ceases to operate as regards antecedent costs, provided leave is granted before the time limited for giving security has expired (g).

Where the plaintiff is a minor.—The power as to requiring security for costs is a discretionary one, and except in exceptional cases, neither a minor plaintiff nor his or her next friend should be required to give security for costs (h), not even if both the minor and his next friend are residing out of British India and do not own immovable property in British India (i).

Where the plaintiff is a woman.—The necessity for the provisions of sub r (3) arises from the provisions of sec 56, by which it is enacted that no woman can be arrested or detained in the civil prison in execution of a decree for the payment of money (j). But the Court has a discretion in the matter, and in the exercise of its discretion it will not as a general rule require security for costs from a woman plaintiff of the result of such an order will be practically to defeat the suit where it has been instituted bona fide (k).

"Suit for the payment of money"—The words "suit for the payment of money" have been substituted for the words "suit for money" which occurred in the old section. Suits which are not exclusively for the payment of money, but which will result in a decree for the payment of money on the relief sought, are "suits for the payment of money" within the meaning of this rule (l). Thus a suit to recover possession of specific movable property (e.g., ornaments), or in the alternative the money value of such property, is a "suit for the payment of money" within the meaning of this rule (m). But a suit for the administration of an estate which consists largely of immovable property is not a "suit for the payment of money". Such a suit is in fact a suit relating to immovable property, though it may ultimately be necessary to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds in money (n).

Cross claim and security for costs—There is no hard and fast rule of practice which prevents the Court from making an order for security for costs against a person residing out of British India who, upon being sued in British India sets up a cross claim, either by counter claim or by cross suit. It is for the Court to consider, in the exercise of its discretion, whether, having regard to the circumstances of the particular case, the cross claim must be treated as made, substantially, by way of defence to the suit against the claimant, or whether it must be regarded as being substantially in the nature of an independent claim made in respect of matters foreign to that suit, and therefore one with regard to which security for costs ought to be ordered to be given (o).

Appeal.—There is no appeal under the Code from an order made under this rule but there is one from an order rejecting an application under r. 2 (2) below for an order to set aside the dismissal of the suit. But an order under this rule made by a Chartered High Court requiring a plaintiff to give security for the costs of a suit is a "judgment" within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and is therefore appealable (p).

Revision.—Where a Court passes an order under this rule requiring a plaintiff to give security for costs in a case to which the rule does not apply, e.g., where an order is erroneously made for security for costs against a woman in a suit which is not "a suit for the payment of money" within the meaning of sub r (3) the case is one of "illegal" exercise of jurisdiction within the meaning of sec 115, and the High Court has power to interfere in revision (q)

Other cases in which security for costs may be required under the Code.—See O 22, r 8 [plaintiff's insolvency], O 37, r 4 [summary suit on negotiable instruments], O 41, r 5 [security on stay of execution], O 41, r 6 [security where execution is granted of a decree appealed from], O 41, r 10 [security from appellant] and O 45, r 7 [security on grant of certificate of leave to appeal to the Privy Council]

2. [S. 381.] (1) In the event of such security not being furnished within the time fixed, the Court shall make an order dismissing the suit unless the plaintiff or plaintiffs are permitted to withdraw therefrom.

Effect of failure to furnish security

(2) Where a suit is dismissed under this rule, the plaintiff may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside, and, if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from furnishing the security within the time allowed the Court shall set aside the dismissal upon such terms as to security, costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit

(3) The dismissal shall not be set aside unless notice of such application has been served on the defendant

Res Judicata.—A plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed under this rule for failure to furnish security is not precluded from instituting a fresh suit on the same cause of action (r), or from pleading the subject matter of such suit in answer to any other suit instituted against him (s) A sues B for the cancellation of a promissory note alleging that the note was obtained by fraud The suit is dismissed under this rule for failure to furnish security This does not preclude A from instituting a fresh suit for the cancellation of the note nor does it preclude him, if a suit is brought against him by B to recover the amount of the note, from pleading fraud in answer to such suit

Limitation.—An application by a plaintiff for an order to set aside a dismissal for failure to furnish security for costs must be made within 30 days from the date of dismissal [Limitation Act, 1908, sch I, art 163]

Appeal.—An appeal lies from an order under this rule rejecting an application (in a case open to appeal) for an order to set aside the dismissal of a suit, see O 43, r 1 (n)

COMMISSIONS.

Commissions to examine witnesses.

O. 26, r. 1 1. [S. 383.] Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination on interrogatories or otherwise of any person resident within the local limits of its jurisdiction who is exempted under this Code from attending the Court or who is from sickness or infirmity unable to attend it

Power of Court to issue commissions.—See sec 75 above

Cases in which commissions may be issued—A commission can only be issued in the cases specified in this rule and rules 4 and 5 below, and in no other case. Therefore, a commission should not be issued for the examination of the head of a mutt on the ground that it is derogatory to a person in his position to appear personally in Court as a witness. But a commission may be allowed if the head of the mutt is summoned by the opposite party and the Court thinks that the application is vexatious (i).

Persons exempted from attending Court.—Amongst those so exempted are women who, according to the custom and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public (see s 132) This is a right which no Court has power to refuse (u) Such women ought to be examined on commission, even though they may have appeared in public before (v) and though an allegation of immorality is made against them (w) A woman may have entirely abandoned the protection of the purda and yet she may be exempted under sec 132 from giving evidence in Court, if the Court is satisfied having regard to the class and community to which she belongs that she should not be compelled to appear in the witness box (x) A religious preceptor is not one of the persons exempted from attending the Court (y)

Sickness or infirmity—If sickness or infirmity is alleged, the character and gravity of that sickness or infirmity must be assessed and the risk consequent upon a refusal to issue a commission must be taken into consideration. At the same time the importance of having witnesses present before the Court should not altogether be lost sight of: (2) The application may be granted even if the defence consists of an equitable counterclaim. If it is found that the vendor is unable to attend Court by reason of sickness or infirmity, the Court has discretion to grant or refuse the application. Such discretion cannot be revised under sec. 115 above (a).

Evidence taken on commission under this rule—Where evidence is taken on commission under this rule, the procedure laid down in r 8 below should be strictly observed (b)

Irrelevant examination—an abuse—The Privy Council have expressed emphatic disapproval of the examination of witnesses on commission being protracted by questions quite irrelevant to the suit. Their Lordships characterised it as an abuse which the High Court should in flagrant cases check by disciplinary action (c)

Arbitration—It is competent to the Court to issue a commission for the examination of witnesses though the matters in difference in the suit have been referred to arbitration under Schedule II of this Code (d)

Appeal—See notes to rule 4 below, * Appeal

Revision—See notes above, * Sickness or infirmity

2. [S. 384.] An order for the issue of a commission for the examination of a witness may be made by the Court either of its own motion or on the application, supported by affidavit or otherwise, of any party to the suit or of the witness to be examined

Order for commission

3. [S. 385.] A commission for the examination of a person who resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the same may be issued to any person whom the Court thinks fit to execute it

Where witness resides within Court's jurisdiction

4. [S. 386.] (1) Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination of—

Persons for whose examination commission may issue

- (a) any person resident beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction
- (b) any person who is about to leave such limits before the date on which he is required to be examined in Court, and
- (c) any civil or military officer of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service

(2) Such commission may be issued to any Court, not being a High Court, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person resides, or to any pleader or other person whom the Court issuing the commission may appoint

(3) The Court on issuing any commission under this rule shall direct whether the commission shall be returned to itself or to any subordinate Court

Form—For form of commission to examine absent witness see App H, form No 7

(c) Rajkumar v. Ram Sundar (1932) 34 Bom L.R. 526 1561 C 102 (32) A 1 C 69 | (d) Rasbihi v. Rahimabai (1905) 7 Bom L.R. 560

O. 26, r. 4 May issue.—The Court has a discretion to grant or refuse a commission (e) But the discretion must be exercised judicially (f) If the Court fails to exercise the discretion judicially, such failure is of itself no ground for interfering with the decree in appeal, the appellate Court should not interfere, unless it is shown that if the lower Court has exercised its discretion judicially, the decision would have been different from what it was (g) The issue of a commission under this rule is not the proper procedure if the Court desires a local inspection to be made of the subject matter of the suit (h) This should be done under O 39, r 7

Commission for the examination of witnesses.—"Ordinarily, in the case of a witness not under the control of the party asking for a commission, who resides beyond the limit fixed under O 16, r 19 (b), a commission should issue as a matter of right, unless the Court is satisfied that the party is merely abusing its authority to issue process It is not for the Court to decide whether the party will be benefited thereby or not, that is a matter entirely for the party" (i)

Plaintiff asking for a commission to examine himself.—Suppose a plaintiff, residing in Delhi, institutes a suit in Bombay, and then applies to the Bombay Court for the issue of a commission for his examination in Delhi In such a case the Court will refuse the application unless a very strong case is made out because the Bombay tribunal is that chosen by the plaintiff himself (j)

Defendant asking for a commission to examine himself.—The case, however, is different where the application is made by a defendant and especially a defendant lawfully resident out of the jurisdiction according to the ordinary course of his life and business The Court will not regard the case of a defendant with the same strictness as the case of a plaintiff (k) See preceding paragraph

Appeal.—The High Court of Madras at one time held that an appeal lay under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order made by a single Judge of the High Court directing the issue of a commission (l) as well as from an order refusing a commission (m), and this was on the ground that such order amounted to a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent But those decisions have since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court (n) In Bombay it has been held that no appeal lies from an order directing the issue of a commission, because such an order is merely an interlocutory order and not a "judgment" within the meaning of the said clause (o) The High Courts of Calcutta (p) and Rangoon (q) have held that no appeal lies from an order refusing a commission

Revision—An order refusing the application of a defendant to be examined on commission is in a proper case open to revision (r). Similarly an order granting the application of the plaintiff to be examined on commission may in a proper case be revised by the High Court (s).

5. [S. 387.] Where any Court to which application is made for the issue of a commission for the examination of a person residing at any place not within British India is satisfied that the evidence of such person is necessary, the Court may issue such commission or a letter of request

Commission or Request to examine witness not within British India

Or a letter of request—These words are new. See sec 77 above. For form of letter of request see App II, form no 8.

Evidence of a foreign witness—Evidence of a foreign witness taken in foreign territory (e.g. Chandernagore) under a commission issued under this rule and executed in accordance with the provisions of r 17 below is clearly admissible (t).

Revision—The Madras High Court refused to interfere in revision when the Court in the exercise of its discretion declined to issue a commission (u). But when the lower Court erroneously refused to issue a commission for the examination of a foreign witness on the ground that he resided within the limits specified in O 16, r 19 which applies in British India, the same High Court reversed the order in revision (t).

6. [S. 388.] Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person shall examine him or cause him to be examined pursuant thereto

Court to examine witness
pursuant to commission

Examination on commission—A party who has not joined in a commission is entitled to cross examine the witness examined under the commission (w). Evidence taken on commission without full opportunity for complete cross examination should not be admitted (x). But where the Court is satisfied that the cross examination of any witness on commission is being unnecessarily prolonged it will order such cross examination to be concluded within a certain time (y).

7. [S. 389.] Where a commission has been duly executed, it shall be returned, together with the evidence taken under it, to the Court from which it was issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order; and the commission and the return thereto and the evidence taken under it shall (subject to the provisions of the next following rule) form part of the record of the suit.

Evidence taken on commission shall form part of the record of the suit—See notes to r 8 below, "Reading deposition in evidence."

8. [S. 390.] Evidence taken under a commission shall not be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom the same is offered, unless—

When depositions may be read in evidence

(a) the person who gave the evidence is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or dead or unable from sickness or infirmity to attend to be personally examined, or exempted from personal appearance in Court, or is a civil or military officer of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service, or

(b) the Court in its discretion dispenses with the proof of any of the circumstances mentioned in clause (a), and authorizes the evidence of any person being read as evidence in the suit, notwithstanding proof that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased at the time of reading the same.

"Or is a civil or military officer—public service"—The sewords which occur in cl (a) are new.

Reading depositions in evidence.—Evidence taken on commission cannot be used without the consent of the opposite party, unless the conditions of clause (a) are fulfilled, or the record shows that the discretion under clause (b) has been exercised by the Court (z)

According to the practice prevailing on the Original Side of the High Court of Calcutta, evidence taken on commission is not treated as evidence in the suit until it has been tendered and read as evidence in the suit by the party on whose behalf it has been taken. It follows that evidence taken under a commission at the instance of one party cannot be used by the opposite party until it is tendered and read as evidence by the party on whose behalf it has been taken (a). On the other hand, the practice in the Courts in the mofussil of Calcutta is to treat the deposition of a witness examined on commission as evidence in the case even though it has not been formally tendered and this practice has been said to be not only perfectly consistent, but also in strict accordance with the provisions of rules 7 and 8 (b)

(b)

Admissibility of documents—Where a document is produced before a Commissioner, and no objection is taken to its admissibility, no such objection can be taken before the Court hearing the suit to which the commission is returned (c) But if the admissibility of the document is objected to before the Commissioner, the party who has objected to the admissibility of the document before the Commissioner on one ground is not precluded from objecting to its admissibility before the Court on any other ground (d)

Commissions for local investigations

9. [S. 392.] In any suit in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute, or of ascertaining the market value of any property, or the amount of any mesne profits or damages or annual net profits, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such investigation and to report thereon to the Court :

Provided that, where the Local Government has made rules as to the persons to whom such commission shall be issued, the Court shall be bound by such rules.

Commission when to be issued—The words and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person, which occurred in the old section after the words 'net profits,' have been omitted in this rule The effect of the alteration is that the issue of a commission for local investigation is no longer restricted to cases where the Judge is unable conveniently to make the investigation himself As the rule now stands, a Judge may issue a commission in any case where he deems it fit to do so, irrespective of his own convenience (e)

Personal investigation by Judge—A Judge has power to make a local investigation in person in any case in which he sees fit to do so (f) See O 18, r 18

Commission for local investigation—This rule does not authorise a Court to delegate to a Commissioner the trial of any material issue which the Court itself is bound to try (g) The local investigation may be for the purposes indicated in the rule, but a commission under this rule should not issue merely for a local inspection (h) The proper procedure for that purpose is under O 39, r 7

Commissioner's report—Where in a suit as to a right of way a commissioner was appointed under this rule to prepare a map of the locality in question, it was held that the statements of the village officers made to him with regard to the right of way were inadmissible in evidence (i)

Interference with Commissioner's report—Interference with the result of a careful local investigation except upon clearly defined and sufficient grounds is to be deprecated (j)

Alteration in the rule—The singular person has been substituted for the plural persons Under the old section it was held that the issue of the plural persons showed that the Court could not issue a commission to make partitions to a single Commissioner (r) The substitution of the singular person for the plural persons clearly shows that under the present rule the commission may be issued to a single Commissioner

Form—For form of commission to make a partition see App H form no 10

14. [S 396, 2nd and 3rd paras.] (1) The Commissioner shall, after such inquiry as may be necessary, divide the property into as many shares as may be directed by the order under which the commission was issued, and shall allot such shares to the parties, and may, if authorized thereto by the said order, award sums to be paid for the purpose of equalizing the value of the shares

(2) The Commissioner shall then prepare and sign a report or the Commissioners (where the commission was issued to more than one person and they cannot agree) shall prepare and sign separate reports appointing the share of each party and distinguishing each share (if so directed by the said order) by metes and bounds Such report or reports shall be annexed to the commission and transmitted to the Court, and the Court, after hearing any objections which the parties may make to the report or reports, shall confirm, vary or set aside the same

(3) Where the Court confirms or varies the report or reports it shall pass a decree in accordance with the same as confirmed or varied, but where the Court sets aside the report or reports it shall either issue a new commission or make such other order as it shall think fit

Alteration in the rule—The words shall confirm vary or set aside the same at the end of sub rule (2) and the whole of sub rule (3) have been substituted for the words shall either quash the same and issue a new commission or (where the Commissioners agree in their report) pass a decree in accordance therewith Under the wording of the old section it was held that the Court must either accept the report or reject the report and that it had no power to vary it (s) The word vary has been added into sub rule (2) to enable the Court to modify the report in a proper case

15. [S. 397.] Before issuing any commission under this Order the Court may order such sum (if any) as it thinks reasonable for the expenses of the commission to be, within a time to be fixed, paid into Court by the party at whose instance or for whose benefit the commission is issued

Expenses of Commission to be paid into Court

16. [S. 398.] Any Commissioner appointed under this Order may, unless otherwise directed by the order of appointment,— Powers of Commissioners

- (a) examine the parties themselves and any witness whom they or any of them may produce, and any other person whom the Commissioner thinks proper to call upon to give evidence in the matter referred to him,
- (b) call for and examine documents and other things relevant to the subject of inquiry,
- (c) at any reasonable time enter upon or into any land or building mentioned in the order

17. [S. 399.] (1) The provisions of this Code relating to the summoning, attendance and examination of witnesses, and to the remuneration of, and penalties to be imposed upon, witnesses, shall apply to persons required to give evidence or to produce documents under this Order whether the commission in execution of which they are so required has been issued by a Court situate within or by a Court situate beyond the limits of British India, and for the purposes of this rule the Commissioner shall be deemed to be a Civil Court

Attendance and examination of witnesses before Commissioner

(2) A Commissioner may apply to any Court (not being a High Court) within the local limits of whose jurisdiction a witness resides for the issue of any process which he may find it necessary to issue to or against such witness, and such Court may, in its discretion, issue such process as it considers reasonable and proper

Sub rule (2).—This sub rule is new. It enables the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction a witness resides to issue a summons for his examination on the application of the Commissioner. In the absence of any such provision in the old section it was held that where a witness failed to appear before a Commissioner pursuant to a notice issued by him, the only course left open to the Commissioner was to return the commission to the Court from which it was issued, and the latter Court would then send the commission to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the witness to be examined resided (u)

O. 26,

18. [S. 400.] (1) Where a commission is issued under this Order, the Court shall direct that the parties to the suit shall appear before the Commissioner in person or by their agents or pleaders.

(2) Where all or any of the parties do not so appear, the Commissioner may proceed in their absence.

Form.—See App H, form no 7.

19. (1) If a High Court is satisfied—

- (a) that a foreign court situated in a foreign country wishes to obtain the evidence of a witness in any proceeding before it,
- (b) that the proceeding is of a civil nature, and
- (c) that the witness is residing within the limits of the High Court's appellate jurisdiction, it may, subject to the provisions of rule 20, issue a commission for the examination of such witness.

(2) Evidence may be given of the matters specified in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-rule (1)—

- (a) by a certificate signed by the consular officer of the foreign country of the highest rank in India and transmitted to the High Court through the Governor-General in Council, or
- (b) by a letter of request issued by the foreign court and transmitted to the High Court through the Governor-General in Council, or
- (c) by a letter of request issued by the foreign court and produced before the High Court by a party to the proceeding.

Foreign Court situate in a foreign country—The rule does not apply to the Courts referred to in s. 78, clauses (a) and (b)

Evidence may be given—Sub rule (2) indicates the method by which the request contained in sub rule (1) may be established, but does not prevent the High Court from requiring further evidence if it thinks fit

Party—Under O 3, r 1, the word party includes a recognized agent or pleader

20. The High Court may issue a commission under rule 19—

(a) upon application by a party to the proceeding before the foreign court, or

(b) upon an application by a law officer of the Local Government acting under instructions from the Local Government

21. A commission under rule 19 may be issued to any Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the witness resides, or, where the High Court is established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and the witness resides within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, to any person whom the Court thinks fit to execute the commission

22. The provisions of rules 6, 15, 16, 17 and 18 of this Order in so far as they are applicable shall apply to the issue, execution and return of such commissions, and when any such commission has been duly executed it shall be returned, together with the evidence taken under it, to the High Court, which shall forward it to the Governor-General in Council, along with the letter of request for transmission to the foreign court " to receive process

5. [S. 420.] The Court, in fixing the day for the Secretary of State for India in Council to answer to the plaint, shall allow a reasonable time for the necessary communication with the Government through the proper channel, and for the issue of instructions to the Government pleader to appear and answer on behalf of the said Secretary of State for India in Council or the Government, and may extend the time at its discretion

Fixing of day for appearance on behalf of Government

6. [S. 421.] The Court may also, in any case in which the Government pleader is not accompanied by any person on the part of the Secretary of State for India in Council, who may be able to answer any material questions relating to the suit, direct the attendance of such a person

Attendance of person able to answer questions relating to suit against Government

7. [S. 423.] (1) Where the defendant is a public officer and, on receiving the summons considers it proper to make a reference to the Government before answering the plaint, he may apply to the Court to grant such extension of the time fixed in the summons as may be necessary to enable him to make such reference and to receive orders thereon through the proper channel

Extension of time to enable public officer to make reference to Government

(2) Upon such application the Court shall extend the time for so long as appears to it to be necessary

8. [Ss. 426, 427.] (1) Where the Government undertakes the defence of a suit against a public officer, the Government pleader, upon being furnished with authority to appear and answer the plaint, shall apply to the Court, and upon such application the Court shall cause a note of his authority to be entered in the register of civil suits

Procedure in suits against public officer

(2) Where no application under sub rule (1) is made by the Government pleader on or before the day fixed in the notice for the defendant to appear and answer, the case shall proceed as in a suit between private parties

Provided that the defendant shall not be liable to arrest, nor his property to attachment, otherwise than in execution of a decree

ORDER XXVIII

Suits by or against Military Men or Airmen

1. [S. 466.] (1) Where any officer, soldier or airman actually serving the Government in a military or air force capacity is a party to a suit, and cannot obtain leave of absence for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the suit in person, he may authorize any person to sue or defend in his stead

Officers or soldiers who cannot obtain leave may authorize any person to sue or defend for them

(2) The authority shall be in writing and shall be signed by the officer, soldier or airman in the presence of (a) his commanding officer, or the next subordinate officer, if the party is himself the commanding officer, or (b) where the officer, soldier or airman is serving in military or air force

O. 28,

staff employment, the head or other superior officer of the office in which he is employed. Such commanding or other officer shall countersign the authority, which shall be filed in Court.

(3) When so filed the countersignature shall be sufficient proof that the authority was duly executed, and that the officer, soldier or airman by whom it was granted could not obtain leave of absence for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the suit in person.

Explanation—In this Order the expression “commanding officer” means the officer in actual command for the time being of any regiment, corps, detachment or dépôt to which the officer, soldier or airman belongs.

Changes in the rule—The words “or airman” have been added in the heading of this Order and in this rule after the word “soldier” by the Repealing and Amending Act 1927. The words “or air force” in this rule were inserted after the word “military” by the same Act.

2. [S. 465.] Any person authorized by an officer, soldier or airman to prosecute or defend a suit in his stead may prosecute or defend it in person in the same manner as the officer, soldier or airman could do if present, or he may appoint a pleader to prosecute or defend the suit on behalf of such officer, soldier or airman.

Person so authorized
may act personally or appoint pleader

Changes in the rule—See note to r. 1, “Changes in the rule”

3. [S. 467.] Processes served upon any person authorized by an officer, soldier or airman under rule 1 or upon any pleader appointed as aforesaid by such person shall be as effectual as if they had been served on the party in person.

Service on person so
authorized or on his pleader

staff employment, the head or other superior officer of the office in which he is employed. Such commanding or other officer shall countersign the authority, which shall be filed in Court.

(3) When so filed the countersignature shall be sufficient proof that the authority was duly executed, and that the officer, soldier or airman by whom it was granted could not obtain leave of absence for the purpose of prosecuting or defending the suit in person.

Explanation—In this Order the expression “commanding officer” means the officer in actual command for the time being of any regiment, corps, detachment or dépôt to which the officer, soldier or airman belongs.

Changes in the rule—The words “or airman” have been added in the heading of this Order and in this rule after the word “soldier” by the Repealing and Amending Act 1927. The words “or air force” in this rule were inserted after the word “military” by the same Act.

2. [S. 465.]

Person so authorized
may act personally or
appoint pleader

Any person authorized by an officer, soldier or airman to prosecute or defend a suit in his stead may prosecute or defend it in person in the same manner as the officer, soldier or airman could do if present, or he may appoint a pleader to prosecute or defend the suit on behalf of such officer, soldier or airman.

Changes in the rule—See note to r. 1, “Changes in the rule”.

3. [S. 467.]

Service on person so
authorized or on his pleader
to be good service

Processes served upon any person authorized by an officer, soldier or airman under rule 1 or upon any pleader appointed as aforesaid by such person shall be as effectual as if they had been served on the party in person.

Changes in the rule—See note to r. 1, “Changes in the rule”.

ORDER XXIX

Suits by or against Corporations

O. 29, r. 1

1. [S. 435.]

Subscription and verification of pleading

In suits by or against a corporation, any pleading may be signed and verified on behalf of the corporation by the secretary or by any director or other principal officer of the corporation who is able to depose to the facts of the case.

Companies authorized to sue and be sued in the name of an officer or trustee—All reference has been omitted in this and the next following rule to companies authorised to sue and be sued in the name of an officer or of a trustee as such companies, if any there be, are very rare. A registered trades Union is under Act 16 of 1926 authorised to sue and be sued in the name of the Union. A suit by persons who are vice presidents of the union is not maintainable (ic)

The rule is permissive—The rule is permissive and not mandatory. A plaintiff in a suit by a company may be signed by the secretary, director or other principal officer able to depose to the facts. But this does not exclude O 6, r 14, and as a company is unable to sign itself the words 'good cause' in the latter rule enable a company to authorise a person to sign a plaintiff on its behalf (x)

Foreign corporation—The procedure prescribed by this rule applies to foreign corporations also. A foreign corporation can claim the benefit of this rule although not registered under the Indian Companies Act or under an Act of Parliament (y). Thus a plaintiff in a suit by the Singer Manufacturing Company, which is a company incorporated in the United States, may be verified by an agent holding a general power of attorney from the company as a "principal officer" of the company within the meaning of this rule (z). The fact that the Agent also acts for another foreign firm is not material (a)

Suit by an unregistered or unincorporated society—A suit by an unregistered or unincorporated society must be brought in the names of all the members of the society (b). Where there are numerous members, the suit may be instituted by one or more of them with the permission of the Court on behalf of all (O 1, r 8)

Suit by or against a registered company—A suit by or against a registered company must be instituted in the name of the company. A suit against two companies described as 'the India General S N & R Co, Ltd, and the Rivers S N Co, Ltd, by their joint Agent A E Rodgers,' is substantially a suit against Rodgers and it is in contravention of the provisions of this rule. The words 'by their joint agent A E Rodgers' should be omitted (c). But if the relief is really sought against the Company, and the error is one of misdescription, a suit nominally against the Agent may be treated as a suit against the Company (d)

"Other principal officer of the corporation"—The manager at Lucknow of the local branch of the Delhi and London Bank was authorised by a power of attorney to manage the affairs of the Bank, and to substitute any person for himself. In pursuance of this power he gave a power of attorney to the accountant of the Bank to manage the affairs of the Bank, but the power omitted words giving authority to sue. It was held that the accountant was, under the circumstances, the principal officer of the Bank and that he could, as such, sign and verify the plaintiff in a suit filed by the bank (e)

Principal officer able to depose to the facts of the case—The Calcutta High Court has held that as regards every pleading on behalf of a company or corporation the fitness to verify of the person purporting to verify it must be proved by affidavit (f). Note the difference in punctuation between this rule and r 3 below.

ORDER XXX

Suits by or against Firms and Persons carrying on business in names other than their own

O. 30, r. 1 1. [New R. S. C., O. 48A, r. 1.] (1) Any two or more persons claiming or being liable as partners and carrying on business in British India may sue or be sued in the name of the firm (if any) of which such persons were partners at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, and any party to a suit may in such case apply to the Court for a statement of the names and addresses of the persons who were, at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, partners in such firm, to be furnished and verified in such manner as the Court may direct

Suing of partners in name of firm

(2) Where persons sue or are sued as partners in the name of their firm under sub rule (1), it shall, in the case of any pleading or other document required by or under this Code to be signed, verified or certified by the plaintiff or the defendant, suffice if such pleading or other document is signed, verified or certified by any one of such persons

Suits by or against firms.—The whole of this Order is new. It is a reproduction of almost verbatim of the principal rules comprised in O 48A of the English rules. The rules as to the attachment of partnership property and the execution of decree against firms will be found in O 21, rr 49 and 50 above.

In applying English decisions under the corresponding rules in England, it must be remembered that there is a distinction between the English and the Indian law as to the liability of partners. According to the English law, the liability is joint, according to the Indian law, it is joint and several. See Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss 42 to 45. Under sec 45 of the Contract Act one of two joint promisees cannot sue alone. This order modifies that section and if the promisees are partners it enables one to sue alone but only if he sues in the name of the partnership (i).

This Order deals with the mode of suing firms. Rule 1 provides that two or more persons claiming or being liable as partners may sue or be sued in the firm name. But as the rule is permissive it does not affect the right of the plaintiff to implead all the members of the firm (j). Rule 3 provides that where a suit is instituted by partners in the name of their firm the plaintiffs shall on demand in writing by the defendant, declare in writing the names and places of residence of the partners. If the plaintiffs fail to comply with the demand, the Court may stay further proceedings. If the demand is complied with, the suit will proceed as if all the partners had been named as plaintiffs in the plaint. As regards signature and verification where a suit is brought in a firm name it is provided by r 1, sub r (2) that it will suffice if the pleading or any other document required to be signed or verified is signed or verified by any one of the partners. It is not necessary that all the partners should sign or verify it. As regards appearance in a suit brought against a firm it is to be noted that a firm cannot appear as a firm and the partners should therefore appear individually in their own names but all subsequent proceedings should continue in the name of the firm (r 6). Where a suit is brought against a firm no partner can put in a personal defence (k). He can only file a written statement for and in the name of the firm. The decree also must be in the name of the firm (l) though all the partners may not have appeared (m).

Firm.—As to the definition of a firm it is laid down in sec 4 of the Indian Partnership Act 1932, (Act IX of 1932) that persons who have entered into partnership with one another are called collectively a 'firm'. The Calcutta High Court has held that a partnership firm is not a person but merely a collective name of the individuals who are members of the partnership and as such cannot be a partner in another firm (n). Therefore a partnership consisting of individuals and subordinate firms is a partnership of those individuals and the partners of the subordinate firms. Similarly a partnership of subordinate firms is a partnership of the members of those subordinate firms.

Joint Hindu family firm.—Order not applicable.—The provisions of this Order do not apply to a joint Hindu family firm for the rights and liabilities of such a firm are not exclusively regulated by the Indian Contract Act. Such a firm must sue and be sued in the name of its members (o).

Minor.—In England an infant's contract is voidable and he may be a partner. He is not, however personally liable for the debts of the firm but a creditor who has obtained judgment against the firm in the proper form that is, a judgment against the

O. 30, r. 1 defendant firm other than A B, an infant partner, may levy execution against the partnership property (p) If the action is not brought against the firm in the firm name, but is brought against the partners as nominee, the infant partner ought not to be joined as a party (q) In India a minor's contract is void, and a minor cannot be a partner He may, however, be admitted to the benefits of partnership in which case his share in the property of the firm is liable for the obligations of the firm but he is not personally liable see Indian Contract Act, 1872, s 247 The "share" referred to in sec 247 is the right of the minor to participate in the property of the firm after its obligations are satisfied (r) When a minor has been admitted to the benefits of partnership, a reference by the firm to arbitration will bind the minor to the extent of his share in the property of the firm (s) See O 21, r 50

Suit against "manager and owner" of a firm—In a Bombay case (t) the plaintiff filed a suit against "C K, manager and owner of the shop of U C" It turned out that C K had died before the suit was filed, and the plaintiff applied to bring the heirs of C K on the record The period of limitation had by that time expired and so the lower Court dismissed the suit as time barred The High Court reversed the decree on the ground that the suit was in substance a suit against the firm

"At the time of the accruing of the cause of action"—These words show that a suit may be brought by or against a firm in the firm name though the firm may have been dissolved before the date of the suit, provided the cause of action arose before dissolution (u)

"Carrying on business in British India"—This rule applies to all partnerships carrying on business in British India Therefore a firm which carries on business in British India may be sued in the firm name under this rule, although it be a foreign firm the members of which are resident out of the jurisdiction (v) The only question to be considered in order to see whether the case comes within the rule is whether the firm carries on business [in British India] (w) If it does, the partners may be sued in the firm name If it does not the partners cannot sue (x) or be sued (y) in the firm name The expression "carry on business" has no special legal significance It must be interpreted in the ordinary business sense (z) A firm in England cannot be said to carry on business in Bombay, merely because it has employed an agent in Bombay to collect orders for the firm, the agent having no authority to accept or reject the orders (a), it does not make any difference that the name of the firm is affixed to the agent's office (b) See notes to sec 20 'Carries on business'

Suit by firm on promissory note passed to a member—A firm may sue on a promissory note passed to one of its members though the note has been passed to him in his name (c)

Firm as agriculturist—The definition of "agriculturist" in sec 2 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act, 1879 can only apply to a firm sued under the provisions of O 30, r 1, if that firm by itself or by its servants or by tenants earns its livelihood wholly or principally by agriculture carried on within the limits of a district to which the Act extends. The mere fact that one or all the members of a firm earn their livelihood principally from agricultural income does not make the firm itself an "agriculturist" within the meaning of that Act (d)

Statement of names and addresses—Rule 2 enables a defendant to obtain disclosure of the names of the partners in a plaintiff firm by a statement in writing by the plaintiff or their pleader. Under r 1 any party to the suit may apply to the Court for a statement of the names of the partners in the plaintiff or defendant firm to be furnished and verified in such manner as the Court may direct (e). "It is perhaps not altogether easy to reconcile the two rules but r 2 is applicable to the case only of plaintiffs, whereas r 1 applies generally (f). Where an affidavit has been filed under r 1 or a declaration made under r 2, the Court has no power to require the deponent or declarant to attend to be cross examined on the affidavit or declaration, nor has the Court any power to direct the separate trial of an issue as to whether a person whose name has been disclosed in the affidavit or declaration was a partner in the firm at the time the cause of action accrued (g). But the statement of names disclosed in the affidavit or declaration will be treated as embodied in the plaint and will be a necessary part of the cause of action, and if the plaintiffs fail in establishing it, the suit will fail (h).

Suit by or against individual partners—See Indian Contract Act, 1872, ss. 43 and 45

2. [New R. S. C. O. 48A, r. 2.] (1) Where a suit is instituted by partners in the name of their firm, the plaintiffs or their pleader shall, on demand in writing by or on behalf of any defendant, forthwith declare in writing the names and places of residence of all the persons constituting the firm on whose behalf the suit is instituted

(2) Where the plaintiffs or their pleader fail to comply with any demand made under sub rule (1), all proceedings in the suit may, upon an application for that purpose, be stayed upon such terms as the Court may direct

(3) Where the names of the partners are declared in the manner referred to in sub rule (1), the suit shall proceed in the same manner, and the same consequences in all respects shall follow, as if they had been named as plaintiffs in the plaint.

Provided that all the proceedings shall nevertheless continue in the name of the firm

but it is not service upon any other member of the firm so as to make such member "a person who has been individually served as a partner," etc., within the meaning of O 21, r 50, sub r (1), cl (c). If the service is effected in the second mode prescribed by the rule, that is upon a manager at the place of partnership business and the manager is not a partner, the service is good service upon the firm, but it is not service upon any member of the firm so as to make such member "a person who has been individually served as a partner," etc., within the meaning of O 21, r 50, sub r (1), cl (c) (n). This distinction is important for the purposes of execution, for, under O 21, r 50, where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution can at once issue without leave of Court against the property of the firm and also against the separate property of any individual partner who was served with the writ. But execution cannot be issued without leave of Court against the separate property of any partner who was not served with the writ and did not appear (o).

Dissolution of partnership before institution of suit—Where there has been dissolution to the knowledge of the plaintiff, he cannot make an outgoing partner liable unless he served the writ of summons upon him. A sues the firm of B & Co upon a promissory note passed to him by the firm. When the note was given the firm consisted of three partners, X, Y and Z, but Z had retired from the firm before the institution of the suit, and A knew before he instituted the suit that Z had so retired. Z resides in British India, but he is not individually served as required by the proviso to this rule. Z does not appear. A obtains a decree against the firm. The decree cannot be executed against the personal property of Z. Nor can A apply under O 21, r 50, sub r (2) for leave to execute the decree against the personal property of Z. So also on the death of a partner his personal estate cannot be made liable unless his legal representative is joined (p). This is because the present rule overrides O 21 r 50, and the latter rule only applies where there has been no dissolution to the knowledge of the plaintiff (q). The above ruling would not apply to the case of a partner who had left the firm before the institution of the suit without the knowledge of the plaintiff. If the plaintiff was not aware of the dissolution when he filed his suit, the decree binds all the partners in the firm whether they have been served individually or not (r).

Service on manager, subsequent service on partner.—Where a summons is served upon a manager, and subsequently upon a partner, it is the date of the latter service from which time is to be counted for the appearance of the defendant firm (s).

"Principal place at which the partnership business is carried on"—See notes to r 1 above, "Carrying on business in British India."

"As the Court may direct"—These words do not occur in the corresponding English rule. According to the English rule, the summons may be served upon a partner or upon the manager at the plaintiff's option. Under the present rule, it would seem, that the plaintiff has no such option, and that he should obtain the directions of the Court as to the mode of service. If the method of service prescribed by the Court is followed, then prima facie there has been service on the firm (t). The omission to obtain such directions is, however, only an irregularity within the meaning of s 99 and does not vitiate the service (u).

Notice to be given to the person served as to the capacity in which he is served—See r 5 below and notes thereto.

partners, the proper procedure is not to dissolve the suit, but to allow the firm to put in a further declaration making a full disclosure, and thus to remedy the defect (i). The fresh declaration involves the admission of new parties, so that if the period of limitation has expired the declaration would be of no effect and the suit would be dismissed (ii).

Proceedings to continue in name of firm.—See notes to r. 1 above "Suits by or against firms," on p. 129 and r. 6 below. Subsequent proceedings to continue in name of firm.

3. [New. R. S. C., O. 484, r. 3.] Where persons are sued as partners in the name of their firm, the summons shall be served either—

- (a) upon any one or more of the partners, or
- (b) at the principal place at which the partnership business is carried on within British India, upon any person having, at the time of service, the control or management of the partnership business there, as the Court may direct; and such service shall be deemed good service upon the firm so sued, whether all or any of the partners are within or without British India:

Provided that, in the case of a partnership which has been dissolved to the knowledge of the plaintiff before the institution of the suit, the summons shall be served upon every person within British India whom it is sought to make liable

Service of summons—This rule is to be read with r. 1 above and with O. 21, r. 30. It applies only to suits against partners in the name of their firm. It provides a special mode of service upon firms carrying on business in British India, whether the partners reside within or without British India (j). One mode of service authorized by the rule is service upon anyone or more of the partners, the other is service at the principal place of business of the partnership, within British India, upon the manager of the business. If the summons is not served in either of these ways the service is irregular (k). If it is served in either of these ways, the service is good service upon the firm whether all or any of the partners are within or without British India. The service being good service upon the firm, any decree that may be passed in the suit against the firm may be executed against the property of the firm. When the firm has been dissolved, the only method of service is under clause (a) on partner (l), and if service by registered post has been ordered, the registered letter should be addressed to a partner and not to the firm name at the place where the business used to be carried on (m).

If the service is effected in the first mode prescribed by the rule, that is if the service is upon a partner, it is good service upon the firm as well as upon that partner personally but it is not service upon any other member of the firm so as to make such member "a person who has been individually served as a partner," etc., within the meaning of O 21, r 50, sub r (1), cl (c). If the service is effected in the second mode prescribed by the rule, that is upon a manager at the place of partnership business and the manager is not a partner, the service is good service upon the firm, but it is not service upon any member of the firm so as to make such member "a person who has been individually served as a partner," etc., within the meaning of O 21, r 50, sub r (1), cl (c) (n). This distinction is important for the purposes of execution, for, under O 21, r 50, where a decree has been passed against a firm, execution can at once issue without leave of Court against the property of the firm and also against the separate property of any individual partner who was served with the writ. But execution cannot be issued without leave of Court against the separate property of any partner who was not served with the writ and did not appear (o).

Dissolution of partnership before institution of suit—Where there has been dissolution to the knowledge of the plaintiff, he cannot make an outgoing partner liable unless he served the writ of summons upon him. A sues the firm of B & Co upon a promissory note passed to him by the firm. When the note was given the firm consisted of three partners, X, Y and Z, but Z had retired from the firm before the institution of the suit, and A knew before he instituted the suit that Z had so retired. Z resides in British India, but he is not individually served as required by the proviso to this rule. Z does not appear. A obtains a decree against the firm. The decree cannot be executed against the personal property of Z. Nor can A apply under O 21, r 50, sub r (2) for leave to execute the decree against the personal property of Z. So also on the death of a partner his personal estate cannot be made liable unless his legal representative is joined (p). This is because the present rule overrides O 21 r 50 and the latter rule only applies where there has been no dissolution to the knowledge of the plaintiff (q). The above ruling would not apply to the case of a partner who had left the firm before the institution of the suit without the knowledge of the plaintiff. If the plaintiff was not aware of the dissolution when he filed his suit, the decree binds all the partners in the firm whether they have been served individually or not (r).
